A Cork cable says: An eviction has failed on an estate in South Cork belonging to Sir George St. John Colthurst, sixth baronet, whose principal seat is named Castle Blarney. A tenant named Timothy O'Leary owed about $700 arrearages of rent and costs. The baronet's agent offered to accept $100 in full satisfaction, O'Leary to surrender possession. He refused, and an eviction writ was issued. There was a crowd of 300 persons, headed by the Secretary of the local branch of the National League and a band. The sheriffs and bailiffs were protected by twenty policemen in charge of a district inspector. When the party arrived, at 7 o'clock in the morning, they found the house barricaded and a number of men inside prepared to offer every resistance. Over the front door was suspended an American hay rake, which, by means of ropes attached, the defenders in the house were able to drop upon the heads of the bailiffs. Seeing the difficulty in forcing the door, some of the bailiffs got up on the roof, but no sooner had they made an opening than they were attacked by those within, who shot out long poles at them, and one of them narrowly escaped being hurled to the ground. After five hours' work the bailiffs forced an entrance to the ground floor, but having got thus far they were assailed with stones and other missiles and assaulted with mops dipped in boiling tar. Matters became so serious that the Police Inspector ordered his men to load and fire. The latter part of the order, however, was not carried out. After seven hours of fruitless effort the eviction was abandoned. In the yard of the premises there is an open well 50 feet deep. This was covered over with light laths and rushes, and had any sheriff's assistants or policemen fallen into the trap laid for them they would, in all probability, have been killed. There were no arrests made, and the National Leaguers present shouted triumphantly as the sheriff abandoned his efforts to enforce the decree of the Court.

ANOTHER RAILWAY FATALITY.

A Denver, Col., despatch says: An accident occurred on an east bound Union Pacific express at Sand Creek Bridge, ten miles east of here, on Wednesday night, resulting in the death of Engineer Masterton and the serious wounding of two or three others. The Union Pacific and Burlington Bridge cross the creek almost parallel and within a few feet of each other. When the engineer of the Union Pacific train, which leaves here about 30 minutes ahead of the Burlington train, was within a few feet of the bridge he was horrified to see that a flood in the early part of the evening had washed the middle section away. The fireman jumped into the stream and stuck in the sand, whence he was taken out half an hour later in an unconscious condition. He will most likely die. Engineer Masterton grabbed the lever, and reversed the engine just as it plunged into the water with a baggage car, which fell on top of his body, burying him in the sand. Baggageman Breedlove was badly injured by falling trunks. An old German woman living nearby heard the cries of the frightened people, and rushed out with a lantern and stopped the approaching express on the Burlington route within a few feet of the bridge.

BORN IN A CAR

And Dropped Down a Steep Embankment and Yet Lives.

A last (Friday) night's St. John, N. B., despatch says: As the Western train was about passing Grand Bay this morning a woman passenger was seen to enter a rear apartment. As she did not come out when the train was nearing the city, the conductor grew suspicious, and at his request two women entered the apartment and found the occupant in an unconscious and completely exhausted state. They told the conductor, who, on the arrival of the train at St. John, had her taken to the public hospital. It was then discovered that she had become a mother. Subsequently the babe, a fine, healthy boy, was found at the foot of a 30-foot embankment near Grand Bay. The child was taken to a house near by and will probably live. The train was going at the rate of thirty miles an hour when passing this point. The mother has not yet fully recovered consciousness. Those who have seen her acquit her of any criminal intent. The woman was on her way to Boston from Woodstock. It is said her name is Putnam, and that she came a short time ago from Nova Scotia.

Housekeeping Intelligence.

Mrs. Molly Bigman, a newly-married lady, does not know anything about housekeeping, but she is anxious to have her husband believe that there is nothing in the housekeeping line that she does not know. He happened to be in the room when the cook came and said:

"Will you please gib me out de coffee? De water's been a-bilin' dis las' half hour."

"Let the water boil, Matilda," replied Mrs. Bigman calmly, "the longer it boils the stronger it will be."—Editor's Drawer, in Harper's Magazine for September.

George Meredith, the famous English novelist, is a handsome man between 50 and 60 years of age. His hair is gray, his features well cut and expressive, and his manner vigorous, unaffected and pleasing. Like many a man who has excelled in prose George Meredith considers himself a great poet. He seems blind to the fact that while he may be a giant in fiction he is a dwarf in verse. The Athenæum, speaking of his poetry, calls him a "harlequin."

An accident, the like of which probably never happened before, is reported from Arkansas City. MARRIAGE IN HIGH LIFE.

Lord Salisbury's Son's Marriage—Brilliant Affair—The Dresses Worn.

A London cable says: The Cecil-Wilbraham wedding at St. Andrew's, in Wells street, was in every way worthy so auspicious an event as the marriage of a son of the Prime Minister with the daughter of a Lord Chamberlain. The church was crowded with guests and sightseers, and every available point was profusely decorated with white flowers. Lord Salisbury, in unwonted good spirits, talked of everything but the proclamation of the League to his many friends. It is a pity that the praiseworthy punctuality of the bride was not more generally imitated. Lady Florence Wilbraham looked very beautiful in a dress of white poult du soie and Brussels lace, but it must be confessed that primrose satin did not suit the complexions of some of the bridesmaids. Lady Lathom, in her becoming dress of light grey silk with bonnet to match, seemed scarcely older than her daughters; Lady Grosvenor wore a long cloak of violet velvet and a round hat; Lady Lytton was in fawn color; Lady Borthwick's becoming Worth costume of blue, with antique miniature buttons and blue bonnet, was much admired; Lady Betty Lytton and Miss Smith seemed specially interested in the ceremony; Sir Arthur Sullivan was duly impressed by the bridal marches; Lady Exeter and her daughter represented the other branch of the Cecils; Mr. W. H. Smith was scarcely as cheerful as his chief; Messrs. Balfour, Lowther, Villiers and Baden-Powell did duty for the Commons. The breakfast and tea in Portland Place was very well managed. Lady Salisbury endowed her new daughter-in-law with a supply of diamond stars. Lord Salisbury gave a dressing-bag which was almost a counterpart of Lady Cranborne's. The presents of plate were particularly numerous.

THE MANHATTAN SWINDLE.

Mrs. Fanny Roberts Sent to Jail to Keep Company With Lawyer Dunn.

A New York despatch says: Mrs. B. Roberts, described in Teller Scott's affidavit charging her with receiving and retaining from him $10,000 of the money stolen from the Manhattan Company's Bank, while lawyer Dunn received and appropriated the remainder, or $40,000, was found this morning at her residence. To the reporter's questions as to the truth of Teller Scott's affidavit she said, with apparent surprise at the accusation: "You are the first to tell me what Scott has stated in his affidavit. I was informed at breakfast that there was something in the paper about me, but had not had time to read what it was when you were announced. I never use the name Fanny when speaking or writing of myself, but usually sign my name as Mrs. J. B. Roberts. I am a widow, and having some means occupy this house, with my colored man and maid servants. I have no objection to saying that my name is Fanny S. Roberts, and suppose that I am the person alluded to in the affidavit which you have read to me. Of course such a publication as this is not pleasant, but being conscious of right I have no fear of facing the trouble if any should arise. I never heard until to-day of this Richard Scott, and certainly could not have been friendly with him. I have not read the papers lately and had no idea that such a man existed. It is not true that I received $10,000 from Scott or from any man known to me by that or any other name. The charge of intimacy with a man who confessed to me that he was a thief is too preposterous for me to answer except in a court of law." Later it was learned that Mrs. Roberts had been arrested and taken to Ludlow street jail.

THE JAPS AND THE C.P.R.

A London cable says: The opening of the Canadian Pacific and the establishment of a line of steamers from Vancouver to Yokohama and Hong Kong are creating extraordinary interest in Japanese political and commercial circles. The native journals are actively discussing the probable effects of the development of the new route on the commercial position of Japan, which, they think, may be completely revolutionized by it. If, they say, goods for China and other countries in the East are conveyed by this route, Japan would have in the East a position corresponding to that of Great Britain in the West as a commercial and banking centre. At present, while the Suez Canal is the main route, Japan stands alone in the extreme end of the chain of communications. With the Canadian Pacific steamship and railway lines in active operation Japan should be the centre of the Eastern trade, and accordingly Japanese merchants are urged to be up and doing. It is suggested that the native steamship companies connect Hong Kong and Singapore with Yokohama, and possibly extend the line to Australia later, thus increasing the number of feeders of the Canadian Pacific. Whatever the result may be, the officials of the Canadian Pacific have succeeded in arousing to a very high degree Japanese commercial energy and ambition,

At Atlanta, Saturday, a workman in opening a door gave it a vigorous pull. In doing so the jar knocked a pocket-book off the facing over the door. The book was comparatively new, but was covered with dust, showing that it had been above the door a long time. It was handed to his employer, who opened it. In it was found between $2,000 and $3,000 in promissory notes.

Lord Tennyson is not gifted with a memory of faces. It was told that he was entertained one day at dinner by a Oscar Browning, a wealthy gentleman well known in London society and not at all related to Browning, the poet. A few days after Mr. Browning met Lord Tennyson at a reception and saluted him cordially, but the poet looked at him vaguely and did not recognize him. "Do you not remember, Lord Tennyson? I am Browning?" said his quondam host. "Oh no, you are not," answered Tennyson, placidly. "I know Robert Browning intimately, and you cannot persuade me that you are he." So off he went, leaving his unfortunate entertainer in a decidedly unpleasant predicament.

CURRENT TOPICS.

CORNELL UNIVERSITY has lost a million dollars, which sum had been bequeathed to it by the will of the late Jennie McGraw Fiske, the courts having decided that the institution is as rich as it is permitted to be under its charter. It is evidently safest for wealthy persons to help their favorite universities while they are alive, for the law has strange ways of breaking in on post-mortem plans.

MAX VON PETTENKOFFER, a German medical authority, considers that cholera is not contagious in the sense of being communicable directly from person to person, but that it belongs to the malarial group of epidemics, the germs of which find their way from the soil into the air, and thence through the lungs into the system. He regards good drainage and pure water as the most efficient safeguard against an outbreak.

PEOPLE who complain of the noise of the Sunday church bells in Canadian cities would find it worth their while to spend a ew weeks travelling in Spain, which is one of the most devout countries under the sun. Ninety thousand bells send forth their summons to prayers from the steeples of 24,000 churches. The weight of these bells amounts to something like 95,000,000 of Spanish pounds, and the value to about 10,000,000 francs.

ARCHDUKE ALBRECHT, who celebrated on the 3rd instant his 70th birthday, is the only field marshal in the Austrian army. He deservedly holds that rank in virtue of his achievements during the Austro-Italian campaign of 1866. He is the wealthiest of all the Hapsburg princes and very liberal in his contributions to charitable objects. He is also a generous patron of art, and owns probably the most valuable collection of engravings in the world.

BISMARCK'S wife is an interesting woman. She is more than 60 years of age, very tall and very gray. Her features are prominent and her cheek-bones very high. Altogether she has a strong face. She is a woman of very determined character and not unlike the "Iron Chancellor" himself in obstinacy. She is fond of talking and speaks in a loud and decided voice. She is apt to tell stories which a girl of the period would not care to have her mother hear.

SOME of the trees of Arkansas have peculiar properties. The fruit and root of the buckeye are used by Indians on their fishing excursions. They put the fruit and roots in a bag, which they drag through the water. In an hour or so the fish rise to the surface dead. Cattle die after eating of the fruit or leaves. Man eats the fruit of the pawpaw, but hogs won't. Ropes and mats are made of its bark. The fruit and bark of the bay tree are supposed to be a cure for rheumatism and intermittent fever.

ONE well-known Countess, whose life is spent in devising new varieties of social pleasures, gave a canine "at home" a week or two since at her London house, at which more than fifty pet dogs, principally terriers, pugs and dachshunds, put in an appearance. A cold collation, served on a special dinner service, was provided, while, as a delicate attention, several live rats were placed in a back room for the terriers, who were equal to the more exciting task of worrying them.

IN the death of Aaron J. Vanderpoel the Democracy of New York loses a sterling supporter. The head of one of the most important law firms in the country, counsel for Samuel J. Tilden in important suits, he was more than once offered promotion to the bench, and might have ascended that of the Court of Appeals in 1885 had he chosen. The life of a simple citizen pleased him best. He was a good man and will long be mourned by those who had the privilege of his friendship.

GEISBERT POLTGIESER, of Chicago, is dead at the age of 73. He was the oldest saloon-keeper in the city of Tyrian Purple. He went to Chicago in 1842 and opened a grocery and bar. Besides his distinction as the oldest saloon-keeper in Chicago he also enjoyed the reputation of being the heaviest man in that city. In 1869 he weighed 430 pounds. His weight decreased as he grew older, but still registered over 300 pounds at the time of his death. He leaves a fortune of about $300,000 to his wife and children.

IN a duel with swords, recently fought at Grenoble, between M. Menvielle, editor of the Recéil du Dauphine, and M. Gustave Naquet, editor of the Petit Dauphinoes, the principals disarmed each other in successive rounds. In the third round M. Naquet seized his adversary's weapon and dealt him a thrust in the groin. Then Captain Martin, one of M. Menvielle's seconds, boxed M. Naquet's ears, and M. Naquet's seconds deserted him. M. Naquet has now been fined in a police court for illegitimately wounding his antagonist.

AMONG the matters to be considered at the forthcoming convention of the American Bankers' Association at Pittsburg are the silver question, the uniformity of bank cheques as proposed by the Chicago Bankers' Club, the use of "safety paper" for all cheques, drafts, etc., plans for securing bank circulation otherwise than by deposits of government bonds, measures for the better protection of depositors in national banks, and a memorial to Congress urging an amendment to the Canadian treaty providing for the extradition of defaulters and embezzlers.

LOOK to your water filter and see that it is frequently and regularly cleansed. Dr. Blyth, the Marylebone officer of health, tells of five persons in a family of thirteen being seized within two days with fever and sickness, terminating in some instances in delirium. After much investigation it was discovered that all the sufferers had been accustomed to drink water from an uncleansed filter, the charcoal in which was loaded with organic matter that had undergone fermentation in consequence of the hot weather. While a household filter is a very desirable thing, a filter which is not frequently cleansed is worse than none at all.

TRUTH is stranger than fiction, but occasionally fiction is reproduced as a fact. The old story of the son who had been away to make his fortune, coming back to his parents and being murdered by them for the sake of his wealth, has been carried out in real life. A telegram from Paris states that a young Spaniard left home, and after some years returned a comparatively wealthy man. He was not recognized by his parents, but secured their hospitality. His mother's avarice was excited by the stranger's wealth, and she killed him in the night, severing his head from the body. Upon finding out that the victim was her son, she merely observed that it was his own fault as he ought to have made himself known.

THE Philadelphia Episcopal Recorder says: And so another Chinese has found a bride in this country! We are not a prophet, nor the son of a prophet, but we venture to predict that this is the forerunner of a radical change of sentiment on the part of the American public towards the Mongolian race. If this and the former experiment work well, it will be discovered that the Chinese are good for something more, and something far better, than we ever dreamed. Let them be demonstrated to be desirable husbands for white girls, and Congress must remove that embargo on their emigration to this country, or the eyes of every member thereof will be scratched out of his head. Where is Dennis Kearney? Can he dare oppose himself to the resolute and invincible army of match-making mothers in this land? Oh, sweet will be your revenge, ye Celestials!

DOM PEDRO finds that his liver is harder to rule than all Brazil. In Paris a few days ago his blood was analyzed by Dr Henoques, the specialist, who told him that he was in a bad way. Not only is his liver out of order, but his kidneys also, and at his age there is not much chance of curing him, though the maladies may be held in check. Dom Pedro is but 62 years old, although he has been Emperor fifty-six years, and is in length of reign the senior sovereign of the world. Dr. Henoques asked him what was his favorite drink. Dom Pedro replied that it was the juice of oranges and lemons, iced, and flavored with Jamaica rum. "Better give it up," said Dr. Henoques. "I can't," said Dom Pedro, "and you wouldn't advise me to if you knew how good it is."

THE death of Prof. Fowler has incited discussion as to the standing of phrenology as an exact science. Which reminds us, once upon a time a phrenologist was drawing crowded houses in this city. (Maybe it was Fowler, and maybe it wasn't.) A young man, who regards phrenology with contempt, undertook to test the matter by "having his head felt." His real occupation need not be known, but for the purpose of the visit he choose to describe himself as the organist of one of our city churches. He was much gratified to be told that his bump of music was well developed; that he delighted in harmony, and a lot more to the same purpose. As a matter of fact, he did not know one note from another, and there was no subject that could be broached on which he was more ignorant than music.—London Advertiser.

SOME singular statements have been made in the Deutche Monatschrift concerning the effect produced by different trades and industrial occupations upon the general health. Among these facts are those contributed by Professor Hesse, of Leipsic, who points out the deplorable condition of the teeth of bakers, and who also asserts that he is frequently able to indicate the occupation of persons by the condition of their teeth. In the case of bakers the caries is soft and rapidly progressive; the principal parts attacked are the labial and buccal surface of the teeth, commencing at the cervix and rapidly extending to the grinding surface—the approximal surface not seeming to be attacked more than in other trades. Professor Hesse believes that the disease is owing to the inhalation of flour dust, the caries being caused by the action of an acid which is formed in the presence of fermentable carbohydrates.

Two interesting physical experiments are amusing French scientific men. In the first a lighted candle is placed behind a bottle, and the latter is blown upon with the breath for a distance of about a foot. The meeting of the air currents set in motion around the bottle quickly extinguish the flame, though extinction would be impossible if a flat board or a sheet of cardboard were substituted for the bottle. For the second experiment two bottles are placed on a table, with a space of half an inch between them. The candle is set between this space, and from the same distance as before, on the opposite side, the breath is blown smartly against the flame. Not only will the latter continue burning, but it will incline slightly towards the operator as if through the effect of suction. This phenomenon, analogous to the first, is due to the fact that a portion of the air cannot pass between the bottles and is forced around them and back toward the experimenter.

A SYNDICATE of Detroit capitalists has been formed for the purpose of supplying stored electricity for house-lighting, and a practical demonstration has shown that the battery it is proposed to use will operate twenty-six sixteen-candle power lamps for twenty-four hours, and show at the end of that time no visible diminution of power upon the ampere. It is believed at the end of that time that sufficient energy to light twelve lamps for five hours will remain. The expectation is that one charging of the battery will light the average house for a week. After all the tests have been made, the machinery perfected, and the company is in good working order, a serious obstacle will be met with. Ladies complain that electric light makes them look "ghastly," changes the shade of their dresses, and in general works havoc with their appearance. Such being the case, it is insanity to suppose they will admit the light to their houses, unless the "dead-white glare" is tempered by the aid of rose-colored glass, or something that will at least keep their complexions up to par.

IN an article on Carlyle, Dr. James McCosh, the venerable head of Princeton College, suggests for an inscription on a monument to that great author: "Here lies one who gave force to the English tongue." On Carlyle's role as a philosopher or a prophet Dr. McCosh puts small value. "Whatever he was, better or worse, he was not a philosopher. The epithet is a considerable loose one, but can scarcely be applied in any sense to the man of Ecclefechan, of Craigenputtock and of Chelsea." And again: "I do not recollect in all his writings and reported conversations of a single sagacious forecast, such as some great men present to us, of the future as argued from causes now in operation." And, after indicating his real service to English literature, Dr. McCosh says: "I do not believe that the supposed prophet ever saw far into the future, but he did exhibit the past and the present in a lurid light. His 'Latter-Day Pamphlets,' now little read, is perhaps his most characteristic work. It is to be read simply as a caricature of his time, as we read the satires of Juvenal and of Pope."

Women's Superstitions.

I noticed a neat, modest-looking young lady pushing her way along in the crowd on Kearney street the other day, says a writer in the San Francisco Post, and was surprised to see so much spirit manifested by a girl of her dainty appearance. When she met several ladies she would crowd closely to the street-edge or the wall, but when men came along she marched boldly between them. Calling the attention of another lady to her strange manner, she said:

"Oh, I always do that, too. I understand it; she's superstitious."

"How is that?" I asked.

"Well, you see, it brings good luck to separate men, when you meet them, but nothing breeds misfortune so surely as to divide two women on the street."

I looked to see if she were jesting, but saw at once that a judge could not be more serious.

"And do you believe that nonsense?" I asked.

"Why, I s'pose it's foolish," she answered, "but I know if I ever do it, something happens. Now, just yesterday I was with another lady and was ashamed to turn out, and we went right between two women, and at dinner I swallowed a toothpick and came near choking to death."

"But you didn't die?" I suggested.

"No, but I was awfully scared."

That evening I went to a party and tried to find out the pet superstition of each girl I danced with. And they all have them. One wouldn't go under a leaning ladder, another would be sure of coming ill if she saw the moon over her left shoulder, another would not read an epitaph for fear of losing her memory. One girl told me she could stop a dog's howl any time by taking off her shoe and spitting in it. In drawing her kerchief from her bosom a narrow slip of paper fluttered to the ground, on which were some hieroglyphics. "Oh, my charm!" she exclaimed. I supposed she had lost an article of jewellery, and was searching about for it when she seized upon the scrap of paper as though it were a deed to a San Diego corner lot. My curiosity was aroused, and she explained that it was a charm insuring success in undertakings, purchased by her at a great price from an Egyptian fortune-teller in Paris, and that its possession alone amounted to nothing, but it must be put into the pocket or in the bosom of a dress during the recital of an Egyptian verse. If one failed to remember that, however, the Lord's prayer might be substituted.

A Pneumatic Tube to Europe.

Col. J. H. Pierce, of Southington, Conn., who has been studying the use of pneumatic tubes, has reached a point at which he hopes to show that a tube across the Atlantic can be used. The tubes will always be in couples, with the currents of air in one tube always moving in an opposite direction from the other. The heaviest cannon will serve to illustrate the [illegible]. A car takes the place of the charge, the tube to be indefinitely continuous, and the speed of the car to be governed by the rapidity with which air can be forced through. Time is required to establish a current of air flowing with great swiftness through a tube perhaps thousands of miles in length, but when once created the motion will be nearly uniform. The speed of the current may be made as great as may be desired by using the steam-driver fans employed in blast furnaces. Niagara Falls could drive blast fans and furnish motive power to keep in motion the trains to connect this continent with the Old World. The temperature within the tube may be regulated by passing blasts of air entering the tube through furnaces or over ice. The speed attainable may reach 1,000 miles an hour. The tube lining and car exterior would be polished steel, with corrugated sides matching wheels provided with anti-friction bearings. The speed, owing to the curvature of the earth's surface, will tend to overcome all weight, and the pressure will be upon the upper part of the tube; thus there is scarcely any limit to the speed attainable.

Kissed Us All Around.

Some little time ago a young lady, who has been teaching a class of half-grown girls in the Sunday school of Dr. B.'s church, was called away from the city, rendering it necessary to fill her place. The superintendent, after looking over his available material for teachers, decided to request one of the young gentlemen of the congregation to take the class. It so happened that the young man upon whom fell the superintendent's choice was exceedingly bashful—so much so, in fact, that he insisted upon the superintendent going and presenting him to the class. Accordingly the two gentlemen appeared on the little platform, and the superintendent began: "Young ladies, I wish to introduce to you Mr. C., who will in future be your teacher. I would like to have you tell him what your former teacher did, so that he can go right on in the same way. Immediately a demure miss of 14 years arose and said: "The first thing our teacher always did was to kiss us all around."—American Magazine.

Tired Young Ladies.

Delicate young ladies, whom often the least exertion tires, will find that a little time regularly spent in the garden will have a favorable effect upon them. Devote the first part of the morning, or an hour before sunset, to your garden. Commence with what seems the most pleasant work—tying a climbing vine against the porch, cutting off the fading flowers, or raking a flower bed; but do not tire yourself out in the beginning; better to work only five minutes at a time than become fatigued and discouraged. With your interest your strength will increase, your drooping spirits will revive, and the blush of your roses become reflected upon your cheeks.

To cure warts the best thing was to steal a piece of beef from the butcher, with which the warts were to be rubbed, after which it was to be interred, and as the process of decomposition went on the warts would wither and disappear.

AN ECCENTRIC DRUG.

The Remains of Egyptians Buried Thousands of Years Ago Turned Into Medicine.

Among the standard medicines quoted in the medical books of Nuremburg of two hundred years ago are "portions of the embalmed bodies of man's flesh, brought from the neighborhood of Memphis, where there are many bodies that have been buried for more than one thousand years, called mumia, which have been embalmed with costly salves and balsams, and smell strongly of myrrh, aloes and other fragrant things." The learned doctors of France, Germany and Italy all made great use of this eccentric drug, and in the seventeenth century grievous complaints arose of its adulteration. Mr. Poinet, chief apothecary to the French king, records that the king's physician went to Alexandria to judge for himself in this matter, and, having made friends with a Jewish dealer in mummies, was admitted to his storehouse, where he saw piles of bodies. He asked what kind of bodies were used and how they were prepared. The Jew informed him that he took such bodies as he could get, whether they died of some disease or of some contagion. He embalmed them with the sweepings of various old drugs, myrrh, aloes, pitch and gums; wound them about with a cere cloth and then dried them in an oven, after which he sent them to Europe, and marvelled to see the Christians were lovers of such filthiness. But even this revelation did not suffice to put mummy physic out of fashion, and we know that Francis I. of France always carried with him a well-filled medicine chest, of which this was the principal ingredient. A traveller also records how one of his friends found in the tombs at Ghizeh a jar carefully sealed, which he opened and found to contain such excellent honey that he could not resist eating a good deal of it, and was only checked in his feast by drawing out a hair, whereupon he investigated further and found the body of an ancient Egyptian baby in good condition and adorned with jewels. He does not record how he enjoyed the meal in retrospect. Imagine dining off the honeyed essence of a baby Pharoah.—Nineteenth Century.

Differences in Social Customs.

Europeans uncover the head as a token of respect or reverence; Orientals never uncover it, and the Turkish Ambassador is allowed to retain his fez even in the presence of Her Majesty. In church all men's heads are bare; in the synagogue it is considered wrong to remove the hat. In China to uncover the head is a mark of disrespect. To salute with the left hand is a deadly insult to Mohammedans in the East, and for this reason the native commissioned officers of our Indian army in giving the military salute confined it to the sword held in the right hand, without at the same time raising the left hand to the forehead, as in the ordinary English salute. Unlike our women, who, when they go out, adorn themselves most carefully, Thibetan women, when leaving their houses, smear their faces over with a dark, sticky substance. It is said that they do so in compliance with a law made by a certain Lama, King Nomekhan, in order to protect their morals by making them look ugly when in public. The Thibetans also put out the tongue as a sign of respectful salutation, and in similar contradiction to our own customs the Malays, Fijians, Tongans and many other Polynesians always sit down when speaking to a superior. At Natavulu it is respectful to turn one's back toward a superior, especially when addressing him, and among the Wahuma, in Congo and in Central Africa, the same custom prevails. The Todas of the Neilgherry hills show respect by raising the open right hand to the face, and resting the thumb on the bridge of the nose. By the way of compliment the people of Yddah shake the clinched fist; the inhabitants of the White Nile and Ashantee spit on those they delight to honor, and some of the Esquimaux pull noses.—London Life.

That distinguished Parisienne, Mme. de Walsayre, has been petitioning the French Legislature in favor of the emancipation of women from petticoats. Her case is that petticoats are very dangerous, leading to innumerable fatal accidents, and that trousers are just as decent, more healthy, and far less expensive.

—The continual drought is having a damaging effect on fruit and ornamental trees, the recent rains not being copious enough to penetrate to the roots. A plentiful supply of water should be furnished by means of a trench made around the base of he trees.

LIFE OF THE GIPSIES.

If the race of gipsies is not celebrated for cleanliness it can certainly claim the healthful advantages to be gained from life in the open air, says the Youth's Companion. The author of "Our Gipsies" dwells upon their repugnance to the very idea of living in a house. One man, belonging to a wandering tribe, was heard to say, with strong emphasis, and apparently with great sincerity: "Thank God that I am not compelled to live in the filth and foul air of towns." A young girl belonging to a gipsy train was only elaborating the same feeling when she declared: "I should pine away and die indoors, just as a lark would if you put it in a cage. I was born in a tent, I have lived in a tent, and I hope to die in a tent. No one who has a real drop of Romany blood in him ever yet willingly took to the life of the house-dweller."

Meeting in London an old umbrella-mender, who looked as if he might belong to this race of wanderers, our author accosted him:

"Am I right in supposing you to be a gipsy?"

"Oh, yes, sir, you are quite right," he replied. "I was born under a hedge, and very nearly the whole of my lifetime I've slept under one, excepting now and then, and especially the last six weeks, during which I've slept in a house."

"I'm glad to hear it, because I think the change you have made in your sleeping-place is a change in the right direction."

"You may think so," said the man, rather superciliously, "but we differ in our opinions on that point. I likes the hedge a great deal better than I likes the house; aye, that I do, however."

"What are your reasons for what seems to me a strange preference?"

"I have two I can give you for that," he said, very emphatically. "Now, sir, listen to me. You see, sir, when you sleeps in a house you don't always know who you sleeps after, and that is what I don't like at all; but if you sleeps under a hedge you do know its clean, and there's no danger of being teased out of your life by the company of bed-fellows which are much too lively to be agreeable."

Another gipsy authority quotes a discussion on the same subject by two old women of a wandering tribe. Both were sun-bronzed and both wore coral ear-rings, and their sun-bonnets were back side in front. One was seated in a barrow; the other was squatted on a whisp of hay-bands by the side of a recumbent donkey, whose four legs hedged her in. She had utilized the flanks of the docile creature to serve as a dinner-table. Bread and butter was spread on it, and about a quarter of a peck of turnip radishes. There was a bald, shiny patch on the donkey's hip, set round with hair, and this was made to contain salt. Every time his mistress dipped a raddish into this extemporized salt-cellar, and proceeded to "scrunch" it there was an expression in the animal's half closed eyes that betrayed his consciousness of her enjoyment and the satisfaction it afforded him.

"And how's Cooper a-doin' since he gave up the wan and took to the house?" asked the woman in the wheelbarrow.

"He's growin' wus and wus," replied her friend, with a grim carve-him-right-too expression in her beady eyes. "He was right enough on wheels. Why didn't he stay on 'em?"

"Ah, to be sure! I know what I should expect would shortly happen to me if once I trusted myself atween lath and plaster."

"But it ain't the laths, and it ain't the bricks, my dear," rejoined her friend. "It's summit in the mortar that works its way into your cistern, and that's what'll bunnick old Cooper up, you mark my words."

So, though the word "system" is not always considered as interchangeable with "cistern," it is evident that the gipsy has an original theory of diseases.

A Tale of a Hand-Organ.

Speaking of hand-organs, an Italian sat in the gutter up in Ellicott street, Buffalo, yesterday morning over a wrecked instrument. He seemed Mozart broken and clutched the Handel fiercely. Some one came along and threw a stone at it, and it Gottschalk'd so that it was all out of tune. The man went off in a Wagner something. "Verdi go?" asked a sympathizing German. No one knew. "We'll never Litz to any more music out o' that," said another. "You may as well be Chopin it up into Kindlin' wood," said another. "Oh, he can Mendelssohn's he gets home," said the cornor grocer, whereupon the gentlemen all went Bach to their respective houses, and the Italian trudged away

Coaches were introduced in Elizabeth's reign. This occasioned a sudden demand for horses. The House of Lords rushed to the rescue, and gravely debated whether the supply of horses was to be brought up to the new coaches or the supply of coaches brought down to the horses. A Bill restraining the excessive use of coaches was lost on the second reading. James I. liked hawking and hunting, and wrote a treatise on the theory of horsemanship. In practice there is reason to believe that His Majesty was rather a funker. Although of a frugal mind James gave 500 guineas to Mr. Markham for an Arabian, "a little bay horse, not well shaped," which was easily beaten, according to the Duke of Newcastle, by moderate English horses. In this reign speedy animals appear to have been bred at a sacrifice of substance.

A clergyman, the vicar of Pitsmoor, has been speaking on the modes of marriage in and near Sheffield. He states that people are there married in batches; that the bridegrooms almost invariably get the rings too small, and have at times to lick the lady's delicate finger to induce the stubborn ring to move on. It seems to be no uncommon thing to find that the ring is the difficulty, through its presence or absence. "Then, again," says the vicar, "when they come to that important part of the marriage service where the minister asks the man if he will have this woman to be his wedded wife, the man will not unfrequently turn to the woman and say, 'Wilt tha black my boots?' and the woman will invariably say, 'I will;" and the man then rejoins, 'Now, tha's said it,' and he holds her to her word. Such are Yorkshire manners."—Manchester Courier.

Smith, the Markdale barber, will be in Flesherton both days of East Grey Fall Show to attend to the wants of customers.

There was a large number of small cattle offered for sale at the fair here last Monday, quite a number of which changed hands.

Mr. Stephan, the new Flesherton baker, is giving good satisfaction to his many customers and is rapidly working up a large business.

I am now prepared to supply my old customers and as many new ones as will favor me with their patronage with the Choicest Confectionery and Fruit that can possibly be obtained.

R. KEEFER.

In reference to the Post-Office burglary, there are several comical stories afloat. True or untrue, it is said one prominent citizen ensconced himself in a barrel, revolver in hand, and made preparations for a fierce attack on the burglars. When the explosion occurred (so the story goes) the p. c. called reinforcements to his aid and sallied forth only to find that the birds had flown for more congenial quarters.

Frank VanDusen and David Bates were driving a horse attached to a light waggon out of Flesher's mill yard on Tuesday, when the animal took fright and ran away. It had only gone a few rods when one of the front wheels came in contact with a fence post and the horse started across the road with the shafts minus the waggon. Frank soon caught him. In the meantime David Bates had jumped out of the rig while in motion and sustained a pretty rough shaking up. Otherwise the runaway didn't amount to much.

Rev Mr. Earle—who, in company with his wife, will shortly go to the Southern States for the benefit of his health, and who chanced to be in Flesherton—delivered a stirring Temperance sermon in the Methodist church here last Sunday evening. The evils of the traffic were graphically alluded to, with great dramatic power and effect, from the words, "Strong drink is raging and he who is deceived thereby is not wise." The church was filled to the doors by a very large and appreciative audience, who were electrified and thrilled by the Rev. gentleman's graphic word pictures and statistics. The members of Fountain Council, R. T. of T., marched to the church in full regalia and occupied front seats. Many active workers of the S. of T. and W. C. T. U. were also present.

Meaford Road.

From our own Correspondent.

The harvest for this year is over and threshing is now the order of the day. There will be a good deal of light grain in consequence of the very dry and warm weather through July and August.

The Eclipse steam saw mill is going to be built by Messrs. Kells and Lucas. They have a gang of hands at work taking out the timber for the frame and intend pushing on the work as fast as possible so as to be able to get the balance of the logs that were saved from the fire cut into lumber before the coming winter.

Mr. Stephen Badger, of Thornbury, was through here buying cattle for the last two weeks. He shipped a car load of them from Markdale.

Mr. John Warling will be our mail man after the 1st of October, he having secured the contract for conveying Her Majesty's mails between Flesherton and Vandeleur for the next four years.

Miss Annie Buchanan was well pleased with her visit to the Sault St. Marie, and someone else seems just as well pleased that she has returned home again.

Mr. Robert Warling was up to Meaford visiting his brother some time ago. He says that the weather was just as dry up there as here.

Gospel Temperance Meeting.

The Town Hall, Flesherton, was well filled with people on Monday evening last. The program, although somewhat lengthy, seemed to give pleasure to the audience. Grand Councillor Steele, of Guelph, occupied the chair, his short, witty and pointed remarks being a very pleasing feature of the evening's entertainment. His statements in reference to life insurance, as represented by such societies as the Royal Templars of Temperance, formed a striking comparison in favor of them as opposed to the old stock insurance companies, and created a marked impression. The Grand Councillor is a model chairman and few men we have heard can crowd as many facts into such a short space of time as he can—presenting them, at the same time, in a clear and pleasant manner. Miss Burgess, o Listowel, and Miss Mills, of Hamilton, rendered valuable assistance in the musical department, as also did the Misses Richardson, Miss Damude, Miss VanDusen, and Messrs. Russell and Barnhouse, of Flesherton.

Brief, witty and forceable Temperance speeches were delivered by Rev. G. Buggins, of Markdale, Rev. Mr. Earle, Rev. Mr. Shilton, and Rev. Mr. Watson, of Flesherton. Mr. John Gordon, the energetic head man of the Templars here, made the announcements. A. R. Fawcett, of THE ADVANCE, occupied a seat on the platform and made a few remarks.

Altogether the meeting was a profitable one throughout. Many of the facts presented were new to most of the people present. Some, who had doubts as to the working of the Scott Act in various places, were cheered and strengthened by the glowing testimony of Revs. Shilton and Earle—both fresh from the banner Scott Act county of Halton. Others had doubts removed as to the soundness of Life Insurance, as represented by societies, by the facts and arguments adduced by Grand Councillor Steele.

Following is the musical program :—

1.—"Rescue the perishing."

2.—Solo, "Room among the Angels," by Miss Burgess.

3.—"How far is it called to the grave," by Misses Mills and Burgess.

4.—Trio.—"Just for To-Day," by Grand Councillor Steele and Misses Burgess and Mills.

5.—Quartette, "Hear our Prayer," by the Flesherton Glee Club, composed of Miss Richardson, Miss Damude, Messrs. Russell and Barnhouse, accompained by Miss Edith Richardson on the organ.

7.—Trio, "The New Song," G. C. Steele, Misses Mills and Burgess.

8.—Duet, "One Day Nearer Home," by Misses Burgess and Mills.

9.—Solo, "Tyrol's Lovely Dell," by Miss Milly VanDusen.

10.—Solo and Chorus, "Tell it Again," by Miss Burgess and audience.

12.—Solo, "Not Ashamed of Christ," by Miss Mills.

13.—Trio, "To the Rescue," by G. C. Steele, Misses Mills and Burgess.

14.—Solo, "Twas Drink that Spoiled my Boy," by Miss Burgess.

Harvest nearly in around here. Threshing operations are rife. The shrill whistle of the steam thresher engine is frequently heard also the grind of the gearing of the horse-power.

The falls continue to give out their roaring music on the air, and lose none of their picturesqueness or natural grandeur and beauty.

Most of our citizens have had visiting friends during vacation and holiday time.

Mr. James Stuart, of Euphrasia, showed us a bull calf 5 months old, weighing 595 lbs. or 107 lbs. for each month old. I tell you he's a handsome whopper (Is this beat anywhere.)

From our own Correspondent.

Excitement ran high here on hearing of the burglary of the Flesherton Post-Office, and every one seems to be more than pleased to learn that the burglars have been caught, and hope they may in due time reap the reward of their crime. [We are sorry to inform our correspondent that the burglars are still at large.—ED. ADVANCE.]

Business in our village has been very dull for some time.

Harvesting is about wound up, and threshing machines are now busy in every direction. But reports of the yield of grain are not so favorable as was anticipated. The grain being in many cases ripened to quickly, and consequently is light.

A Dakota Land and Emigration Agent is expected to lecture and give information about Dakota here, on Wednesday and several of our farmers and citizens have already got Dakota on the brain.

That bridge over the Beaver river is not yet repaired, and much inconvenience is felt on that account, and considering the amout of merchandise carried by some of the small men who live across the river and have to cross on a single log, the wonder is that some of these small men do not turn up missing, and there are cases where Pilots have had to escort them over those horrid waters.

Rev. R. Gordon has again arrived home from Michigan, where he has been stationed the past year. He expects to return shortly with his family.

Mr. John and Arthur Maxwell are leaving here this week for Michigan.

Another small patch at the end of our hotel has been painted white this summer which makes quite an improvement in the appearance of the place.

We know of no mode of treatment which offers to sufferers from chronic diseases, a more certain hope of cure than that which is comprehended in the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla. For purifying and invigorating the blood, this preparation is unequaled.

OUR COUNTY SHOW.

The Big Fair to be Held In Flesherton Next Week.

Next Thursday and Friday the East Grey Agricultural Society's splendid Exhibition will be held on their grounds in Flesherton. Everybody should make it a point to be present on the second day of the show. The grounds will not be opened to exhibitors on the first day, as the exhibits in Agricultural Hall will be judged on that day. But on the second day a list of attractions will be presented which should bring thousands of visitors to Flesherton, where ample provision will be made for the accomodation of man and beast. The Hall and Grounds will be thrown open to the public from 9:30 a. m. until 4 p. m. Amongst the numerous interesting features of this leading County Show, there will be a magnificent and

GRAND MUSICAL COMPETITION,

Commencing at 2:30 p. m., when the far-famed Dundalk and Flesherton Brass Bands will compete for splendid cash prises given by the citizens of our town. In fact the people will have an opportunity to fairly revel in a whirlwind of charming musical sounds. Both Bands enjoy a wide and well-deserved reputation and are now practicing almost every night in order to properly prepare for what will certainly be an intensely interesting struggle.

It is confidently expected that this exhibition will far outstrip all former ones in point of interest, attendance and financial results. The Society has thrown itself into the breach with a vim and zeal that should command success; and it will. Speeding in the ring has been abolished, and now those who formerly objected to that feature are asked to know and, by their presence, show that the action of the Society in this respect meets with their approbation and merits their sympathy and support.

Wedding Bells.

One of those interesting events, which usually creates quite a stir among the fair sex, took place at the residence of Mr. Robt. Fawcett, sr., Flesherton, on Tuesday evening last. We refer to the marriage of Mr. Henry Down, of this Township to Miss Lizzie, youngest daughter of Mr. Robt. Fawcett, sr., and sister to the Editor of THE ADVANCE. Rev. J. W. Shilton, B.A., tied the nuptial knot and for the benefit of readers matrimonially inclined, THE ADVANCE begs leave to assure them that he performed the interesting ceremony very gracefully, too. The wedding was a quiet one, only a few friends of the contracting parties being present. The presents were numerous and useful. The best wishes of a large circle of friends go with the newly wedded young couple.

The Storm on Lake Huron

Cheboygan, Mich., Sept. 9.—Incoming vessels report that the storm on Lake Huron was terrible. A heavy fleet of steamers and sail vessels weathered the gale at Treque Isle, and notwithstanding the fact that most of the vessels had both anchors down, they dragged into each other, inflicting heavy damage. The tug Waldo A. Avery, towed a raft, sprung a leak outside and had a very narrow escape from foundering.

A ROMANTIC STORY.

A Port Hope despatch says: Miss Ethel Crowell, formerly of this town, but now an English variety actress in Buffalo, N.Y., has fallen heir to $100,000 by the death of a near relative in England. Nettie is her stage name, and she is said to be very pretty, a blonde, about 20 years of age. Her story is that her father was a wealthy manufacturer of cutlery in England. When she was an infant her mother died, and four or five years later the father re-married. The stepmother took a dislike to little Ethel, and in many ways made the child very unhappy. Finally Mr. Crowell, to secure domestic peace and protect his child from cruelty, sent Ethel across the ocean in charge of a trustworthy nurse. The woman and her charge took up their home here, and the father sent them a sufficient sum for their living expenses. It was only a stipend, however—$6 or $7 per week. When Ethel reached the age of 16, and becoming tired of the monotony of Port Hope, she ran away from the humble home provided for herself and nurse, and, after many hardships, finally essayed to earn a living on the variety stage. In this she has been fairly successful. A short time ago the stepmother died, and accordingly, as there were no other children, Miss Crowell is the only natural heir to her father's property, which will probably not fall short of the figures stated.

A FIND IN PICCADILLY.

A London cablegram says: The excavations proceeding in Piccadilly, on the site of the new premises of the Junior Travellers' Club, have brought to light many interesting objects. The houses which are built on that portion of the thoroughfare have for their foundations a series of well-formed arches at a depth of about sixteen feet from the surface. In piercing some of these great difficulty was experienced on account of the toughness of the substance of which they are constructed. This having been overcome, a series of subterranean passages apparently connected were discovered. These were full of foul gases and contained a vast quantity of rubbish, among which numerous articles of interest have been found. Among the most remarkable are a red granite tomb dated 1509, some bronze armor, several fowling pieces richly embossed, a lamp and a large quantity of vellum manuscripts. The vaults have been only partly explored and further discoveries are anticipated.

FELL FIVE HUNDRED FEET.

A Princeton, Mo., telegram says: At the Mercer county fair yesterday afternoon, Randall Blakeslee, a half-breed Indian, made a balloon ascension hanging to a trapeze bar. In the ascent the balloon shot up suddenly, giving Blakeslee a wrench, and he was unable to pull himself on the bar, but managed to hold himself up by a loop which he had drawn around his wrist. After travelling about a mile and a half, [illegible] strength gave out, and when within 500 feet of the earth his grip relaxed and he fell to the earth, lighting on his feet in a cornfield. His thighs were broken and driven into the trunk of his body.

A New Haven, Conn., despatch says: Miss Parkinson, of Philadelphia, who has been spending the season at Branford Point, is regarded as a heroine. She saved the life of W.C.Munson, a New York broker, a day or two ago. The broker took Miss Oliver, of New York, out for a sail in a boat. He was not very skilful, and his awkward movements caused the boat to upset. Miss Oliver swam ashore. Mr. Munson could not swim, and would have drowned but for the presence of mind of Miss Parkinson, who instantly took a boat, rowed quickly out and assisted the unlucky broker into it just af he was going down for the last time. He was brought ashore, where he soon recovered

The Escaped Convicts.

A Kingston despatch says: The steam yacht Juna by which the convicts escaped from the penitentiary, was found by a farmer early yesterday morning nine miles west of Oswego, sunk near the shore, with her bow out of water. Deputy Warden Sullivan left for there this morning. Nothing has been heard of the men. A horse procured from a livery stable keeper in Oswego yesterday morning by a man who answers Schoones' description is missing. The police are on the track. The yacht Juna formerly belonged to Mr. Allan, of Brockville. son of Sir Hugh Allan, and was traded by him for the steam yacht Nellie, built at the prison by the convicts. It is said that there was clothing on the boat.

A Romantic Marriage.

Last week Samuel Mearns, a well-to-do bachelor of St. Joseph, Mo., left Montreal to visit relatives in Kemptville. There he made the acquaintance of Miss Katie Wilton, a highly esteemed young lady of Brockville, aged 18 years. They met on Friday last, were engaged on Saturday, and the following Monday were quietly married at St. James' Church, in Kemptville. They have left for a trip to the White Mountains.

Come to Join McGarigle.

Lime is said to be a good preserver of timber. Ships and barges used for the transportation of lime last longer than others. A small coasting schooner laden with lime was cast ashore and sunk. She was raised and set afloat once more, and remained sound for thirty years. Again, a platform of pine planks was used to mix lime on during three generations; then, being no longer required, was neglected, and at length hidden by grass that grew over it. Sixty years afterward, on clearing the ground, it was discovered sound and well preserved.

TORTURED FOR THEIR MONEY.

A special despatch from Hempstead, Texas, says: "The county officers have returned from Reid's Prairie, the scene of the late terrible outrage on John Schultz and wife, Germans, over 60 years old, and report the perpetration of a crime that would shame a savage. Soon after dark on Friday night last four men, masked and otherwise disguised, entered the house and demanded all the money about the premises. When refused the robbers commenced pounding both the old man and his wife with pistols. They then bound their wrists, and pouring kerosene oil on the persons of both told them they would burn them alive if the money was not produced. When refused again one of the villains set fire to the kerosene and they were horribly burned. The muscles of the calves of the old man's legs are nearly burned asunder, and little hopes of his recovery are entertained. Mrs. Schultz, although terribly beaten on the head and badly burned, will recover. Mr. Schultz was left for dead, and the robbers then searched the premises and found a one dollar bill and $30 in silver. Two men are now under arrest charged with the crime, and the others implicated the officers expect soon to have in custody."

DEATH BEFORE DISHONOR.

A Minneapolis Minn., despatch says: The experience of Mary Sylvester, who came to Minneapolis from Page's Hotel at Excelsior seeking employment, confirms the assertion that there are men in this city whose necks would look better adorned with hemp than with a white collar and necktie. Miss Sylvester, a pretty country girl of nineteen years, entirely unused to life in the city, arrived in Minneapolis and applied for work at the intelligence office of Lew Murray, No. 517 Hennepin avenue. Murray made her his clerk, took her to the dime museum in the evening, and, on pretence of finding her a boarding house, took her into a dive, where he tried to assault her. Becoming desperate, she jumped through an open window thirty-five feet to the ground below, breaking her left jaw and all the ribs on her left side. She is also internally injurned and cannot live. Excitement is running very high, and there is serious talk of lynching the cowardly villain.

The Owner Came to the Door.

New Spirit—Who are you? Trumpet-toned Angel—I am Fortune. "Fortune, eh? On earth I heard that Fortune knocked once at every man's door. I never saw you and I died as poor as a church mouse." "I knocked once at your door, but you were not at home." "Where was I?" "At the saloon around the corner." "Well, why didn't you go there and knock?" "I went there." "I did not see you" "No, but the saloon keeper did."—Omaha World.

Strange Restoration of Speech.

Henry Saunders, of Oak Lake, Manitoba, lost his voice two years ago through exposuro in the Northwest rebellion, and has since been completely dumb. The physicians had given up all hopes of his recovery. One morning last week Mrs. Saunders was greatly surprised at her husband taking part in the conversation as though nothing had occurred. Mr. Saunders was a resident of Winnipeg during the boom. The Government granted him a yearly pension of $200, which he now prays may be continued.

An Embarrassment of Virtues.

A little girl, wishing to make her father a present, was very much at fault to know what to buy for the purpose. After puzzling her brain considerably and getting what suggestions she could from the other members of the family, she finally went to her mother in despair, and said: "Only think, mamma, I don't know what to get papa for a Christmas present; he don't smoke, nor drink, nor nothing."—Eastern Argus.

The discovery of some bones in a barn on Mr. Reid's farm, in the Township of Thurlow, which was burned on Monday, leads to the supposition that the fire was started by a tramp who perished in the flames.

THE Sultan of Turkey has been having a good deal of trouble of late. Not long ago his harem revolted, and His Oriental Majesty has been much annoyed by caricatures which have appeared in the comic journals of Vienna. The Sublime Porte has officially requested the Austrian Government to interfere in behalf of the Sultan, and the result is that the offending editors have promised to ridicule no more the sensitive monarch of the Turkish Empire.

He laid his case before the Minister of Justice, and probably because he was not released took his life. Three years ago he struck another convict with a pick and dug a hole in his chest, nearly killing him.

The Marquis of Lorne contributes an article in the current number of "The Liberal Unionist," in which he asks whether a wholesome local autonomy cannot be granted Ireland by the organization of Provincial Chambers on the model of what Canadian statesmen wish Canada to become. In Dublin a council or delegation from the several Provincial Chambers might meet at College Green to pass ordinances affecting inter-Provincial interests. Irish representation in the Imperial Parliament would still be retained.

FOUR BABES AT A BIRTH.

Benjamin Tubbs Beside Himself with Grief —Nine in Five Years.

Mrs. Charlotte Tubbs, of Caroline county, says a Baltimore special to the Morning Journal, has driven her husband nearly crazy by giving birth to a quartette of blue-eyed, red-faced, bald-headed babies, each weighing from three to five pounds. Mr. Benjamin Tubbs would no doubt have been delighted at this family presentation but from the fact that sixteen months ago his wife made him a Christmas present of her second pair of twins. One year previous to that she gave birth to a son, and ten months previous was the mother of twins. All the twins and the quartette are girls, and the only boy was the single birth. Nine children in five years. This is the maternal record of Mrs. Tubbs, of Caroline county. Nothing was thought of the rapid increase in Tubbs' family until the last quadruple addition, and now poor Tubbs is almost beside himself. He could scarcely support the five, and does not know what to do with the nine. A subscription has been taken up to get him and his family better accommodations. It is remarkable that the four babes lived, and from the sound of their lung power and other healthy indications they will all live to keep the two pairs of twins company. Physicians from all the country round have been to see the phenomena. The mother is doing well. The babies were born a week ago, and the fourth was born just five hours after the first.

About Sea Captains.

A recently returned European tells the following story of Capt. Cook, the commander of the Umbria, now the fastest Cunarder, and by which several of our Hamilton merchants travel. The captain was taking a mid-day observation while the sun was somewhat hidden by mist. As he was putting down his instrument a passenger said to him: "The fog prevented you from getting an observation, didn't it, captain?" "It did not prevent you from making your observation," said the captain, as he went toward the chart-room. The anecdote will be appreciated by those who have crossed the ocean with Capt. Cook. A thorough seaman, attentive to duty night and day, he is not known to travellers as a social captain. There is a wide difference in these sea-dogs in this respect. Capt. Murray, of the Alaska, Capt. Gleadell, of the White Star line, are hardly ever seen saloon. On the contrary, Capt McMicken, of the Etruria, is known by everybody for his social qualities, and he makes warm friends on every voyage. Capt. Perry, late of the Brittannic, was of similar disposition. Both are popular on account of their gallantries to women.

The reservoir which will be formed by this dam will have a capacity of 82,000,000 gallons, and some time in the future will be connected with the San Francisco water-shed by a tunnel five miles long.

"It often has seemed queer to me that so many object to night air in their bedrooms," observed an intelligent Philadelphia gentleman. "We can't breathe any other at night. The choice is between probably pure air from without and certainly foul air from within. Half the diseases from which we suffer are caused by keeping the windows down. The quietness, the absence of dust and smoke, etc., make night the best time for airing a patient. In great cities night air is often the purest that can be had in the twenty-four hours. It is conceded that the air in London is never so good as after 10 o'clock at night. Windows are made to open, doors are made to shut, yet too many of us seem to forget that. I keep bed-room windows open these summer nights, and there isn't a more healthy family in the city than mine."

THE DECLINE OF HOOPS.

But Alack We are Again Threatened With 'Em.

By the end of 1787 hoops had almost entirely gone out of fashion. In England I find that at the court the wearing of these precursors of crinoline, by ladies attending the Royal drawing room, was compulsory until so recently as 1814, and one of the inducements held out to the Princess Charlotte, a rare tomboy, who hated any restriction on her strong young limbs—to marry the Prince of Orange was that petticoats were no longer worn at court at the Hague. Perfectly plain skirts in all but wedding dresses seemed to have been in vogue in France in 1787-8, and the comparative exiguity of the gowns led to a corresponding diminution in the quantity of material required. In December, 1787, the Queen had a gown of grand velours noir, and six yards seemed to have been the average of stuff allowed for the skirt of a dress. It must be remembered that velvets and brocades were woven much wider in the last century than is the case at present. There is one entry, however, of ten yards of green taffeta for the lining of a gown of green gauze; the taffeta was probably narrower in width than the velvet. The Marquise de Chastelux had only seven yards of white crepe for the petticoat of a grand habit with flounces. The really economical nature of the queen is shown in an invoice for September, 1787, where she is charged trifling sums for shortening the ends of three muslin cravats and retrimming them, and for "doing up" an old petticoat of brown poult de soie. In December, 1788, the Princesse de Lamballe paid ready money to the extent of twelve livres for a pair of court cuffs of worsted lace (known in modern times as yak), a pair of sabots and a pair of "barbes" in black worsted. Almost simultaneously a whole bevy of court ladies gave orders for "sabots," "barbes" and cuffs of worsted lace. In January, 1789, the year of the revolution, Mme. Eloffe furnished the Princess de Solere with a sumptuous court dress of white taffeta trimmed with satin and white jet, with a rich bouquet or spray of roses and sweet peas. The distended dress cost nearly 1,400 livres.—G. A. Sala in the Fortnightly Review.

A Sister's Heroic Act.

A Nashville despatch says: At Woolworth, Tenn., the house of Perry Buchanan, a poor but honest man, was burned to-day with its contents. One daughter, about 5 years old, was burned to death. Another, about 3 years old, cannot possibly live. One about 10 years old may recover. Mrs. Buchanan had her arms burned to her elbows. The 10-year-old child was out in the yard, out of all danger, but looking back she saw the flames surround her little 3-year-old sister. She ran back into the fire and brought her out, but was almost burned to death for her bravery.

VACATION IS OVER

"Vacation is over," the small boy cried,
And the tears from his eyes did wipe;
"The hateful old school begins," he sighed,
"Just as apples and pears are ripe,
And a fellow must lose all the fruit and fun
'Cause vacation is over and school's begun."

"Vacation is over," the farmer said,
As he rubbed his hands with glee,
"And a man can enjoy his own fruit, instead
Of having boys skin each tree;
And the dog will have something better to eat
Than a thievish urchin's trouser seat."

The arms of the Royal Yacht Club were heavily embroidered on the sleeves, and a regular navy cap completed the costume.

—A telegraph operator, no matter how expert he may be, becomes in time a sort of machine. In sitting long hours at his instrument listening to the monotonous tick of his sounder he becomes deaf to reason, and perpetrates the bulls that in his waking senses he knows to be wrong. Here is one that caused considerable consternation in a New York family. As the operator received it it read: "Unclean Gus died to-day." It should have read: "Uncle Angus died to-day."

CULINARY RECIPES.

HUCKLEBERRY PUDDING.

Make a crust as for tea biscuit. Line the bottom and sides of a pudding dish, pour in one pint of berries, strew sugar and flour over them; cut squares of the dough and lay on this; add another pint of berries, sweeten and flour as before; then put about a tablespoonful of good vinegar into this and cover with a crust with a large opening in the centre and bake one hour. Serve with cream and sugar.

A COOD BREAKFAST DISH.

Cut cold boiled potatoes into small pieces, add three hard boiled eggs chopped, a tablespoon of butter, a pinch of cayenne pepper, a cup of sweet milk, season to taste. Heat thoroughly.

MINCED VEAL.

Take three pounds of cooked veal, chop, add three beaten eggs, four rolled crackers, butter size of an egg, pepper and salt well; press into a crock and bake an hour. When cold turn out and slice down on a platter. It is very nice for lunch.

GREEN CORN PUDDING

Grate a dozen ears of green corn, add one quart of sweet milk, one-quarter pound of butter, four well-beaten eggs, pepper and salt to taste. Bake one hour and a half in a buttered dish.

POTATO SOUP.

Pare and cut into small pieces four good-sized potatoes, boil tender; add a quart of good sweet milk, season with salt and pepper, butter the size of an egg. Make a dough as for pot pie, cut into small squares, drop into the kettle while boiling. Boil for twenty minutes. Serve while hot.

FRIED TOMATOES.

Select smooth, hard tomatoes, wash and wipe but do not pare them, cut in halves and lay the cut side in flour. Melt some butter slowly and pour off the top, in which to fry the tomatoes, being careful not to pour in the sediment. Let the butter get hot in the pan, then lay in the tomatoes, the floured side down, and watch closely that they do not burn; turn as soon as brown. A sauce is by some considered an addition. Put a small cup of milk in the pan after taking out the tomatoes, season with salt and thicken with a teaspoonful of corn starch; when it boils pour it over the tomatoes.

BAKED DAMSONS FOR WINTER USE.

Choose some fruit not too ripe. To every pound of fruit allow six ounces of sugar. Put the fruit into large stone jars, sprinkling the sugar amongst it; cover the jars with saucers; place in a moderate oven and bake until perfectly tender. When cold, cover the jar with a piece of paper to just fit, pour over it melted suet about three-quarters an inch thick, then tie the jars down with thick brown paper. Keep in a cool, dry place.

STEWED TOMATOES.

Pare and cut in pieces large ripe tomatoes, put into a saucepan and stew briskly twenty minutes; season with salt and pepper, a teaspoon of butter and a tablespoon of sugar; stir into this a cupful of grated bread crumbs. Serve while hot.

ONE of the most amusing incidents of this non-copyright period, says the literary editor of the New York Tribune, is the solemn advertisement of the California adapter of Rider Haggard's "She" announcing that he has sold a share of his dramatization, has copyrighted the same and will prosecute anybody infringing upon it. So that if Mr. Haggard attempted to bring out in this country an adaptation by himself of his own book he could be legally forbidden to make use of his own property.

FALL STYLES.

What will be Worn by Ladies on their Charming Little Heads.

(From Galignani's Messenger, Paris.)

The milliners, as is usual, are the first to enter the field with new styles for the coming season. Despite the warm weather, which renders difficult a just appreciation of hats in felt and bonnets in velvet, and of fur bands for trimming, it must be confessed that the new winter fashions for headgear are very tasteful. Velvet, dotted with minute spangles in gold, silver or steel, or embroidered with gold thread and spangles, forms the richest material for bonnets. Bands of astrakhan or sealkin or of curled ostrich feathers will be much used for trimming. Felt hats and bonnets in white or pale gray are shown, the former trimmed with pale gray satin ribbon and ostrich tips of the same hue. White felt bonnets with brims in ruby or sapphire velvet are very successful. There is but little variation in the shapes of the winter bonnets so far. The close capote form, and that with a pointed brim and with flat sides, maintain their place in popular favor.

LOW CROWNS FOR HATS.

Hats will be worn with much lower crowns than they were last season. The prevailing form will be the cavalier shape, with low set crown and a wide brim raised at the back and held in place by a bow of satin ribbon. In white felt, with the inside of the brim of a delicate grey and all the trimmings in the latter hue, this style is peculiarly elegant. Toque hats, with the crown high in front and sloping downward to the brim at the back are also shown.

A bonnet with the crown and sides in black velvet, embroidered with jet and and having the front in a lattice work pattern of jet beads and bugles, was trimmed with three or four exquisite deep pink roses and buds without foliage. Pheasant and peacock plumage will be a good deal used in the construction of bonnets, the former in combination with chestnut brown velvet and the latter with dark green.

GAUZE SCARF VEILS.

Scarfs of tulle or of gauze are now a good deal worn with the new sailor shaped hats. One end of the scarf is attached to the inner edge of the crown at the back, and it is then wound loosely around the wearer's throat. Sometimes two long narrow scarfs instead of one wide one are employed. These are crossed under the chin and the ends are thrown over the shoulders; but the double scarf is less graceful than the single one. Cream white or pale straw color are the usual shades employed, but when the hat is in red or marine blue straw red gauze is useo with very excellent effect.

PARASOLS.

The gauze and tulle parasols have wholly vanished, and have been replaced by those in blue taffetas, or in black and white pekin, with the stripes made up around the frame. A very elegant style of parasol is in black taffetas or black satin, painted by hand in one of its divisions with a large cluster of pale tinted roses, with buds and foliage. The parasol is finished with deep ruffles of Chantilly lace. Birds are occasionally used to decorate the apex of the parasol, but the fashion is more eccentric than elegant, especially when very large birds, such as doves or paroquets, are thus employed.

SOMETHING NEW IN SUITS.

A costume lately remarked at Trouville was in an entirely novel style. It was composed of a long polonaise, or rather princess cut dress in white voile, slightly draped over a plaited skirt of the same material. It was bordered all round with a worsted lace of a telegram blue color and of a Gothic pattern, having long points in the upper edge, which they let into the material, thus forming deep scollops bordered with the lace. The sleeves were shirred to the elbow, and were finished with full ruffles edged with the lace. The corsage was also shirred in front in full narrow plaits from the throat to the waist.

From England comes a new and artistic idea for ladies' dress, which is to wear toilets in white or in black taffetas painted by hand with designs of flowers in water color. One of these dresses, which was simple in style, but elaborately painted, was in white taffetas, the skirt covered with four gathered flounces pinked at the edge. Each flounce was bordered with a garland of wild roses painted in water colors. A very wide sash of the same silk was looped at the back of the skirt and was painted to correspond, the garland running through the centre of the sash. The corsage was cut open in a V shape, and had a spray of wild roses painted at one side on the flat bias folds of silk that edged the opening

Frozen Meats in Siberia.

No precautions are required for the preservation of beef, for it takes care of itself. Nearly all butchers kill at the beginning of cold weather a sufficient number of animals to furnish provisions for the entire winter and allow the meat to freeze. There is no fear of any food changing in such a temperature. The fish become so solid and stiff that they are set up on their tails against the walls of the markets, be the tail ever so long and the fish ever so heavy.

Often fruits preserved in ice are placed upon the table of the Siberian evening meal, the method of keeping them being similar to that employed with meats. As soon as the severe cold sets in they are exposed to the air, if possible toward the north, where there is no sun to reach them; they thus become completely frozen. When eaten they are found to have retained their flavor marvellously, notwithstanding their change from a frozen rigidity to the thawed state necessary for use. At the moment of being served they are usually as hard as wood, and, if they chance to fall, rattle like stones upon the floor. The heat of the room gradually softens them and assume their original form.—Youth's Companion.

A Suggestion.

"If a gentleman enters the room etiquette demands that you arise from your seat and advance a few steps to meet him, with a bright, sunny smile."

"But suppose no gentlemen ever comes into the room?"

"Then of course you don't change your position; you remain just as you are."—Harper's Magazine.

FEMALE KLEPTOMANIACS.

How Women in Polite Society Get the Best of Tradesman and Friend.

The world would be surprised to know how many kleptomaniacs there are in polite society. A well-known dry goods man says he has a customer who steals about as regularly as she purchases. He makes out a rough estimate of her pilferings, and the bill is never disputed by her husband, who knows too well that the demands are just. There is a young married woman in one of the wealthiest families, who can spend a fortune a year on little things, and yet she will pick up and appropriate the merest trifles. She despoils her friend's parlor of small articles. A work-basket is a happy hunting ground for her. On an easy calculation she must have one hundred pairs of scissors. In any of the houses where she habitually calls, if needles, threads and thimbles are missing, the inquiry is heard: "Has Mrs. —— been here this morning?" A Broadway baker, to whose shop it is the custom for ladies to go to luncheon, has the family of this kleptomaniac among his customers. He makes out his monthly bill for all that he leaves at the house, and then puts in the mysterious charge: "Lunch loss, $25." She is in the habit of going to the Broadway establishment, eating a couple of dollars' worth, and then greeting the cashier with an inventory of 50 cents' worth. She will smilingly point out doughnuts and crullers and an occasional ginger snap as having formed her meal; whereas, she has steadily eaten her way round the shop, munching 10 cent tarts and 15 cent eclaires. It would never do to let her loose in the wine cellars, as the trusting Dublin restaurant keepers do with their customers. There are many places in honest old Dublin where you take your glass and go by yourself to the moldy old cobwebbed cellar, surrounded by casks on whose aged head you can read the legend of their vintage. You make your selection, help yourself, go back to the simple landlord in the little tap room above stairs, tell him what you have drunk, have a settlement, and go your way. Our New York young lady would spend an afternoon sampling, come up plum full of Lachryma Christi, and tender the deluded boniface the price of one glass of cider.

A dressmaker was telling of her troubles. A wealthy lady was shown into a parlor, the other day, and left for a few minutes to herself. Just before this visit another customer had bought some rare lace to use in the manufacture of a ball dress. This was carelessly thrown into the upper drawer of a cabinet. When, a few minutes later, it was brought to the workroom, the forewoman sent word that the quantity was insufficient for the design, and the owner was notified. The lady came promptly. She had measured the lace herself, bought it herself, and if there were five yards to the bad, it had been taken in the house. But that was impossible, urged the dressmaker, as no one had been in the room but Mrs. ——, and not one of the employees. "Say no more," laughed the owner of the lace. "We know where the lace is, if Mrs.—— has been in its neighborhood." The poor dressmaker had her eyes opened to many a petty loss since the kleptomaniac had favored her with her custom, but she had a good deal of nerve. She took the remnant of lace and rode in a Fifth avenue stage to Fiftieth street. She was admitted to the august presence on that August afternoon, and she said she thought—in fact, she knew—five yards of lace belonging to Mrs. Smith had been inadvertently wrapped up with the piece of Mrs. —— dress; that Mrs.—— had carried it away to have a hat made from, because Mathilde, her purchase clerk, had been in the room of the parlor and seen Mrs. —— gather up the pieces of silk and lace, of course, wholly by mistake. So the thief, professing astonishment at her carelessness, went off and found that such an accident had really occurred, handed over the lace, and there the matter ended.—New York Letter.

Carnegie's Scottish Purchases.

It is announced that Mr. Andrew Carnegie is about to purchase Aboyne Castle, the magnificent estate of the Marquis of Huntly, who passed through New York about a fortnight ago on his way to England. The sale, if it does take place, is more likely to benefit Lord Huntly's creditors than himself, for there is hardly a square foot of the domain which is not overburdened with heavy mortgages. There really seems to be a kind of curse resting on this Gordon family, one of the noblest and most ancient in Scotland. The Marquis is the head of the clan. He is so persistently in debt that even his father-in-law, the wealthy banker, Sir Cunliffe Brooks, has refused to come forward any more to help him out of his financial difficulties. In 1881 he was the hero of a very painful scandal in London, which involved his sudden resignation of the captaincy of the Queen's Body Guard of Gentlemen-at-Arms, and a precipitate departure for the wilds of Albania in order to avoid arrest and a criminal prosecution. The matter was one in which the words "fradulent signatures" and "fraudulent mortgages" repeatedly cropped up, and was only with difficulty compounded by his father-in-law, who did not wish his daughter's coronet to be dragged through the courts of justice. Personally, Lord Huntly is a charming fellow, extremely handsome, elegant and with a very winning way about him. His eyes, however, are unsatisfactory and unsettled. His sister has the misfortune to be the invalid wife of the Earl of Lonsdale—of Violet Cameron fame, while his brother, Lord Granville Gordon, appeared some eighteen months ago before the public as the part proprietor of a disreputable gambling hell, which had got into trouble with the police. Lady Granville Gordon is the well-known Bond street milliner, who trades under the name of Mme. Ivy & Co.—New York World.

The Latest Dodge.

The infringers of the Scott Act are having a lively time in Stanstead, seven of them having been fined last week. Some difficulty was experienced in proving two of the cases, owing to a device resorted to by the liquor sellers in the place known as "The Cave." The person desiring liquor has to go through a long corridor, when he comes to a wicket in the wall. On making known his wants a hand appears with the desired drink in a bottle, but no face or form is visible.—Missisquoi (Que.) Record.

MARK TWAIN'S COURTSHIP.

A List of Liars Furnished to His Prospective Father-in-Law.

Mark Twain has been the subject of many good stories in his time, and the appended one from the Indianapolis Journal, about a trying moment in his courtship, is worth reproducing:

As everyone knows, Mr. Clemens first met his beautiful wife while on the famous voyage of the Quaker City, and he pursued his acquaintance after their return so closely that at last the young lady's papa one day called the ardent and devoted Mark into his private study and said, after some preamble: "Mr. Clemens, I have something to say to you which bears upon a subject of grave importance, at least to me and mine. You have been coming here for some time, and your manners leave no doubt in my mind as to your object. Now, my daughter's welfare is very dear to me, and before I can admit you to her society on the footing of a suitor to her hand I would like to know something more than I do about you, your antecedents, etc. Stop a minute! You must remember that a man must be a 'good fellow' and a pleasant companion on a voyage and all that, but when it is a question as grave as this a wise father tries to take every precaution before allowing his daughter's affections to become engaged, and I ask of you, as a gentleman, that you shall give me the names of some of your friends in California to whom I may write and make such inquiries as I deem necessary, that is, if you still desire our friendship." It was now Mark Twain's turn. "Sir," said he, bowing profoundly, as became a young man who respects his hoped-for father-in-law, "your sentiments are in every way correct. I approve of them myself, and hasten to add that you have not been mistaken in my sentiments toward your daughter, whom I may tell you candidly seems to me to be the most perfect of her sex, and I honor your solicitude for her welfare. I am not only perfectly willing to give you references, but am only too glad to have an opportunity to do so, which my natural modesty would have prevented me from offering. Therefore permit me to give you the names of a few of my friends. I will write them down. First is Lieut.-General John McComb. Alexander Badlam, General Lander and Colonel W. H. L. Barnes. They will all lie for me just as I would for them under like circumstances." This conclusion broke the old man all up, and he never asked more references nor wrote to those gentlemen.

Advantage of Low Ceilings.

The advantages of low ceilings for dwellings, on account of their being more readily and completely ventilated than dwellings that are high ceiled, are now very generally admitted by builders and sanitarians. The view taken of this matter, from the standpoint of health, is, briefly, that the leakage of air which is always going on keeps all parts of the air in motion in such rooms, whereas, if the ceiling is higher, only the lower part of the air is moved, and an inverted lake of foul and hot air is left floating in the space above the window tops. To have the currents of fresh air circulating only in the lower parts of the room, while the upper portion of the air is left unaffected, is really the worst way of ventilating, for the stagnant atmospheric lake under the ceiling, although motionless, keeps actively at work under the law of the diffusion of gases, fouling the fresh currents circulating beneath it. With low ceilings and high windows no such accumulation of air is possible, for the whole height of the room is swept by the currents as the dust of the floor is swept with a broom. Again, it is urged in behalf of low ceilings that they possess the advantage of enabling rooms to be warmed with less expenditure of heat and less cost for fuel.

An Interesting Family.

A very remarkable group was yesterday photographed at Thomes Cook's gallery, Queen street. It consisted of six brothers, whose united ages amounted to 465 years, or an average of 77½ years each, as follows:

Charles Stevenson, Tignish	74
John Stevenson, New Glasgow	77
Andrew Stevenson, Fredericton	80
William Stevenson, Fredericton	77
George Stevenson, New Glasgow	73
Robert Stevenson, Rustico	74
	465

They are all hale and hearty and are fine specimens of ripened manhood. With the exception of the two younger they can all read without spectacles. They are all members of the Church of Christ on this island, Charles and John being elders.—Charlottetown Patriot.

Trouble to Come.

Fashion in husbands changes same as it does in everything else. A spell ago he had to be a coachman to be au fait. Now it is necessary for him to be a Mongolian in order to be in style. Soon the windows of Chinese laundrymen will be so darkened by fashionable girls in search of husbands that it will be necessary to light the gas so that work can go on.—Texas Siftings.

Had Only One Married.

Brown, who has married the eldest of seven girls, tried to quarrel with his mother-in-law the other evening. "Brown," said she, "I am not going to ruin my reputation by quarrelling with you. Wait till my other girls are married. At present, as a mother-in-law, I am only an amateur."

Everybody found smoking on the streets of Saugutuck, Mich., during the dry spell was liable to be arrested under the orders of the village council.

Clinton E. Williams was confronted by two wives at a Baltimore police station yesterday, and confesses to having three others. He is a deserter from the army, has been in prison, and is a worthless adventurer generally.

The Pittsburg Dispatch, alarmed by the number of people killed while walking upon the railroad track, calls upon some philanthropist to form a "Society for the Discouragement of Track Walking." The railroads of the country should form such a society and accomplish the object by abolishing grade crossings.

WHAT FATE DID.

"There is no doubt, Ethel, but that Dr. Laramie is taken with you. I need not add that I hope you will encourage him. He is very rich and of good family, and I am sure any girl might be proud of such a husband."

"Well, first the man must offer and then I must like him, and so far neither thing has happened.

"Well, as you are invited to the dinner party at the Laramies' the first thing you mention may soon occur. You can wear your amber silk and some jacqueminot roses. I'll stop for you. You must wear gloves day and night until the event, for there is nothing so taking as white hands. The colonel says mine are lovely. Now, what are you laughing about?"

"For joy, auntie," said Ethel. "I'm so glad to be married off, you know. But, really, I can't make myself helpless for three days and nights for the sake of white hands. If I go to bed in greased gloves I shan't sleep, and if I do nothing all day I shall lose my mind."

"Then you can wear mitts, which you need not remove at the table," said the aunt. "It is the style, but I don't like it."

Ethel was dressing for the party in her room and was all ready save for the roses, when an awful sound was heard through the house, evidently some one tumbling downstairs.

Into the hall all rushed. It was cook, who had gone up to her room in a flapping pair of loose old shoes and had slipped on the polished stairs. Her ankle was sprained, and when laid upon a lounge she uttered awful moans and sighs, until Ethel, arriving with a bottle of liniment and a towel pinned about her waist, assuaged the anguish.

But Ethel never heeded. She ministered to cook, who gradually grew black and blue all over, until at last that happened which Aunt Fleming had prophesied.

Over went the bottle, and down the side breadth of the amber silk poured a greasy flood of most unpleasant odor.

"I told you so! It is done for! What will you do?" cried Aunt Fleming. "How you look! and, oh! how you smell! I could baste black lace over it in what-do-you-call-'ems; but the smell! And your hair is all crooked."

"Oh, go on applyin' of it. It don't hurt when you apply it," moaned the cook, with the utter selfishness of a suffering person. "Put more on. There's a deary; do!"

Mrs. Fleming began to cry.

"Don't do that," said Ethel, warningly. "The colonel won't praise your eyes if you do; and go to the dinner and say anything you like in the way of excuse for me. I do smell dreadfully of liniment. Perhaps the truth would be best; no one could eat near me."

"More, deary—on my back," said the cook; jest below the shoulder blade.

"The colonel, mum," said Maria, the maid, looking in at the door, "and would I remind you it's getting late?"

"Go, auntie," said Ethel.

Mrs. Fleming lifted hands and eyes to heaven, but remarked:

"If you are not going I might as well take your Marechal Niel roses, with black velvet. I might mix them with the jacques, and you can't have too many flowers this winter."

The carriage rolled away, they are gone. At the hour when fashionable theatre-goers return home Mrs. Fleming reappeared. She looked very much as though the colonel had been saying sweet things to her, and she was very amiable.

"I am sorry for you, dear," she said to Ethel, "but I think the cleaners can take the spots out; or, when it doesn't smell so, black lace or a new side breadth might be bought. Where is cook?"

"In bed, asleep," said Ethel, looking very bright and sweet. "And the doctor has put her to sleep with some little pills, and——"

"I never thought that peach colored wrapper so becoming," said Mrs. Fleming. "Or have you grown prettier? Was the liniment the elixir of youth? Oh, the doctor! What doctor did you send for?"

"I didn't send. He came of his own accord. I thought you had sent him," said Ethel.

"No, I had not time," said Mrs. Fleming. "By the way, you didn't lose much of Dr. Laramie's society. He went out—called away, his mother said. So—well—you laugh so at nothing. I told him you were ministering to an aged and faithful servant. We have had a cook a year and I think she's honest. Well?"

"I hadn't quite finished, auntie," said Ethel. "The doctor was Dr. Laramie. He said he had heard how I was detained."

"Yes?" cried Mrs. Fleming, breathlessly. "Why, what is that on your finger—a ring?"

"It is Dr. Laramie's ring," said Ethel. "We are engaged. He loves me, auntie, and as soon as he told me so I knew that I loved him."

"Of all the artful creatures!" cried Mrs. Fleming. "But you have done it and I am content."

"Fate did it," said Ethel. But this her aunt has never been quite brought to believe.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

The Valley Road is now an accomplished fact; the Roller Flour Mills will soon be in full blast; and now for the STRAIGHT LEVEL ROAD TO THE STATION!! Hurrah!

The Durham Chronicle censures Flesherton people for not capturing the post-office burglars. Somebody has been "stuffing" the Chronicle scribe real bad. He seems to be much more easily gulled than his illustrious predecessor anyhow.

The Durham Chronicle is as mad as a March hare because Flesherton is rapidly distancing the ancient village called Durham in growth, comparatively speaking. He is so mad about it, that an editorial in THE ADVANCE, describing the progress of our town, had the same effect on him as a red rag would have on a bull or a turkey-cock.

When the Hanover Post man says anything about THE ADVANCE, his apprentice, the editor of the Durham Chronicle, echoes the sentiment after the manner of a grave but very foolish parrot. The Durham and South Grey Conservatives generally will need to keep their weather eyes on the Chronicle. It has basely deceived them once, and if the adage—"birds of a feather flock together"—be true, its reformation is still far from being complete.

A gentleman in this town is credited with saying, that he had been taking THE ADVANCE ever since the first number was issued, and that that paper had never said anything good about him yet. The statement is not correct. We have published many good things about him. What we have stated at any time, has been on apparently reliable authority, and if it has not always suited the gentleman the fault has not been ours. If a misstatement is made in THE ADVANCE, the columns of our paper are ever open for corrections; and surely it is not our fault if people do not avail themselves of that medium for setting things right. The gentleman himself has said many ungraceful things about THE ADVANCE without for one moment troubling himself to find out whether they were correct or not.

BURGLARY.

In criminal law, burglary is defined to be "a breaking and entering the house of another with intent to commit some felony, whether such intent be committed or not." "It is peculiar to this crime," says the same authority, "that, in England it can only be committed in the night time, which is considered as commencing at 9 in the evening and concluding at 6 in the morning of the next day. As to the matter of committing burglary, it is laid down by Blackstone that there must be both a breaking and an entry to complete it."

It will be thus seen, that if an individual enters another's premises in the manner described, intending to appropriate any article not belonging to him, he is a barglar in the eyes of the law whether he takes the article in view or not.

In this connection a few words of advice might not be out of place, in view of the desperate gang of ruffians which seems to infest the whole country at the present time, and who would not, apparently, hesitate at committing a worse crime than burglary in accomplishing their dark designs.

(1) Unchain your bull dogs and let them run at large in rooms containing valuables.

(2) Don't keep money or valuables in exposed places.

(3) Keep a loaded revolver within easy reach and shoot burglars on sight. They'll pop you over if you don't.

(4) Set bear traps near the safe.

(5) If you hear a noise, tell the hired man to jump up mighty quick and ascertain the cause thereof. Cover your own head up with bedclothes, and when you hear the hired man sing out that "its alright," jump out of bed yourself and appear suddenly before the astonished "help" with a revolver in one hand and the bootjack in the other. He will think you are a brave fellow. Then go back to your room and tell your terrified wife that you guess them burglar fellows got scared and skedaddled. Tell her she's a fool if she should express regrets about the way you have been endangering your precious life.

(6) Keep cool. Don't dodge behind empty barrels, but blaze away at the burglars until somebody gets hurt

All of which is respectfully submitted.

A New Crusade.

THE RADICAL RESOLUTION OF ATLANTIC DIVISION S. OF T.

"Inasmuch as the prevalent custom of treating to alcoholic liquors forms the main support to the liquor traffic, and admittedly contributes more than any other cause to the cultivation of intemperate habits and other manifold evils arising from the drinking usages of society.

"That in the present advanced state of temperance sentiment, it is fully warranted to ask that the pernicious and destructive practice of treating should be made an offence under the License Act, and that the enforcement of such an enactment would largely abate the evils above mentioned, reducing to a minimum drunkeness and crime.

"Resolved; That in the opinion of Atlantic Division the time has now come when an amendment to the License Act is urgently needed, making it an offence for any person to offer in an hotel, saloon or licensed premises, intoxicants as a treat or act of hospitality, and that any license keeper being a party to the same and furnishing such liquor shall be adjudged guilty of a violation of the act and be subjected to a like penalty.

"That steps be taken to bring this matter before the Legislative Assembly and Government of Ontario, and that friends of temperance generally be asked to further such action as far as possible.

"That copies of the above preamble and resolutions be forwarded to subordinate divisions of Sons of Temperance, to lodges of Good Templars, in the city and vicinity, to the W.C.T.U., and Y.W.C.T.U., respectfully requesting consideration of the above proposal and if concurred in, to ask their co-operation and support by joint committee or otherwise as may be deemed advisable.

The Result of Racing.

Saturday evening last Mr. John Dolan, who lives on the townline east, was driving home with several others in his rig, when Mr. W. C. Hall attempted to pass him with his ponies. No sooner had Hall got alongside than Dolan gave whip to his horses, but Hall succeeded in passing him. Then a race ensued, terminating in a couple of Dolan's passengers being thrown out, along with a can of coal oil and other articles. One man was stunned and sustained a cut on the head, but he was able to be around the following day. There was a big spill of coal oil.—Shelburne Economist

"What are you doing now, Thomas?" asked the minister, patronizingly.

"I am a writer for the press," said the lad proudly.

"Indeed, you are quite young for that. What do you write?"

"I direct wrappers."

Ayer's Hair Vigor keeps the hair soft and pliant, imparts to it the lustre and freshness of youth, causes it to grow luxuriantly, eradicates Dandruff, cures all scalp diseases, and is the most cleanly of all hair preparations.

AYER'S Hair Vigor has given me perfect satisfaction. I was nearly bald for six years, during which time I used many hair preparations, but without success. Indeed, what little hair I had, was growing thinner, until I tried Ayer's Hair Vigor. I used two bottles of the Vigor, and my head is now well covered with a new growth of hair. — Judson B. Chapel, Peabody, Mass.

HAIR that has become weak, gray, and faded, may have new life and color restored to it by the use of Ayer's Hair Vigor. "My hair was thin, faded, and dry, and fell out in large quantities. Ayer's Hair Vigor stopped the falling, and restored my hair to its original color. As a dressing for the hair, this preparation has no equal.—Mary N. Hammond, Stillwater, Minn.

VIGOR, youth, and beauty, in the appearance of the hair, may be preserved for an indefinite period by the use of Ayer's Hair Vigor. "A disease of the scalp caused my hair to become harsh and dry, and to fall out freely. Nothing I tried seemed to do any good until I commenced using Ayer's Hair Vigor. Three bottles of this preparation restored my hair to a healthy condition, and it is now soft and pliant. My scalp is cured, and it is also free from dandruff.—Mrs. E. R. Foss, Milwaukee, Wis.

A Silly Yarn.

On Monday morning at 2 a.m. the Post-office in the village of Flesherton, was entered, the safe blown open, and $58 in cash, and a quantity of postage stamps and cards, together with deeds, notes and papers belonging to Mr. Sproul the P. M. The noise of the explosion awoke up Mr. Sproule and four or five of the neighbors, and they all hastened out to the street to ascertain the cause, when they discovered a man walking up and down in front of the place, with a revolver in his hand, who cooly told them to keep back until his friend had made a satisfactory inventory of the effects of the safe. Strange to say these five men allowed the two burglars and robbers to depart with their plunder unmolested, they were afterwards pursued and the buggy tracked to Durham, and thence on towards Holstein. They were a brave l lot surely.—Bruce Telescope.

Fair and Square Challenge to Mr. Wiman.

From the Toronto World

The World has repeatedly charged Mr. Wiman with saying the thing which is not so, and our columns are open to him and his allies to show wherein he has been wronged. Contrary to The World's instructions to its writers, be they journalists or be they amateurs, we offer Mr. Wiman all the space he can use in contradiction of the charges made against him, and if we fail to demonstrate the falsity of his statements to the farmers of Canada, the hostility of his intentions toward the manufacturers and workingmen of Canada, and the general dishonesty of his whole course, we shall willingly forfeit any reasonable amount that he may name as a condition precedent.

Should a successful boodler scorn to enter the lists with a young Canadian paper, the door is wide open for him to fix a time and place to discuss his fad, upon equitable terms, with a speaker named by The World.

Mr. Wiman's little game has been played in a little way during a brief period. The leaders and exponents of public thought in Canada have such little notice taken of him that The World puts forth this mild challenge in order that the people of Canada enjoy a possibility of seeing how little there is of him when brought to book upon the public platform. Will he accept? Dare he accept? It remains for Mr. Wiman to say.

Attention

Is called to the following Sections of "The Liquor License Act" of Ontario, respecting the Sale of Liquor on Fair Grounds:—

SEC. 11. The License Commissioners shall not grant any certificate for a license, or any certificate whatsoever, whereby any person can obtain or procure any license for the sale of spirituous, fermented or intoxicating liquors, on the days of the Exhibition of the Agricultural Association of Ontario, or of any Electoral, District or Township Agricultural Society Exhibition, either on the grounds of such Society or within the distance of three hundred yards of such grounds.

SEC. 40. No person shall keep or have in any house, building, shop, eatinghouse, saloon, or house of public entertainment, or in any room or place whatsoever, any spirituous, fermented or other manufactured liquors for the purpose of selling, bartering or trading therein, unless duly licensed thereto under the provisions of this Act.

PENALTIES.

SEC. 51. Any person who sells or barters spirituous, fermented or manufactured liquors of any kind, without the license therefor by law required, or who otherwise violates any other provisions of this Act, in respect of which no other punishment is prescribed, shall for the first offence, on conviction thereof, forfeit and pay a penalty of not less than twenty dollars, besides costs, and not more than fifty dollars, besides costs; and for the second offence, on conviction thereof, such person shall be imprisioned in the County Gaol of the County in which the offence was committed, to be kept at hard labor for a period not exceeding three calendar months.

A Fine Imposed.

Police Magistrate Gray was in town last Thursday and gave his decision in the case of R. W. Tuck, charged with violating the Scott Act, and the report of whose trial appeared in the Economist of last week. The P. M's decision is that Tuck shall pay a fine of $50 and costs, in default that he shall spend sixty days in gaol. We understand that Robt. Allen, mentioned in a previous issue as having been fined, has not yet put up the $50 and costs. Allen is still at large.—Shelburne Economist.

Testing Milk at Cheese Factories

Farmer's Advocate.

In response to an article on this subject published in our July issue, our special dairy expert visited a large number of cheese factories between Elgin county in the west and Peterboro in the east, and tested the milk while it was being delivered from the cans of the patrons. We are pleased to say that the results were eminently satisfactory, but we regret that a large number of invitations had to be refused for want of time. The cheese-makers especially, as well as many of the presidents and directors of the factories, took great interest in the tests, and were all anxious to know how they were conducted. Our expert readily explained, and it was a source of great satisfaction for them to know that milk could be tested as fast as delivered and accurate results obtained, two test being made of each patrons milk, so that determinations were made as to whether the milk was watered or skimmed or both. The tests were quite conclusive when the evening's and morning's messes were kept in separate cans, but when the milk was mixed some latitude had to be allowed.

The methods of adulteration are numerous, but those usually practiced are skimming the evening's and watering the morning's—sometimes the one, sometimes the other, and sometimes both. Sometimes the strippings are withheld, which form of adulteration is exactly the same as skimming. Many farmers may regard themselves as innocent when, in taking a lunch before going to bed, they dip the milk from the top of the can; but this is skimming, pure and simple, and a bowl full of milk, or rather the cream, removed in this way, will be detected by the testing instruments. Another criminal practice is found in rinsing out the milk pails with water and pouring the rinsings into the cans. Slight adulterations of this kind can usually be detected. It is a striking coincidence that the older the greater the adulterations practiced. In the east the cows give poorer milk than in the west, but adulterations are not practiced on so large a scale. In some of the factories, nearly all the patrons do a little tampering with their milk, while in others the tampering is only practiced by a few, but usually on a large scale. It is impossible for all the patrons to do much tampering, for it would require such an unusually large quantity of milk to make a pound of cheese that an investigation would be the result. In some cases 25 to 30 per cent. of water was found in the milk, and the per centage of fat was reduced to 1½ whereas not less than 3 per cent. had ever been obtained from the milk of a herd of cows. On the other hand, the milk from some herds in the west analyzed nearly 4 per cent. of fat, proving that there are some excellent feeders amongst our farmers, who are honest men as well. We believe the time will soon come when each patron will be paid according to the quality of his milk, in which case the losses sustained by adulterations will fall upon the perpetrators, and progressive farmers would be encouraged in their efforts to produce good, honest milk.

Nearly all the cheese-factories have some instruments for testing milk, but the objections against them are so serious as to render testing almost impracticable and worthless. Our expert found many of the thermometers and lactometers several degrees astray. The cheese-makers have rarely time enough to spare to make even these inaccurate tests. An example will illustrate: At one factory our expert made over 70 tests while the cheesemaker was cooling one sample of milk for the purpose of taking the specific gravity with his lactometer. The sample of milk was pure, but his lactometer indicated that 15 per cent. of water had been added. At some factories tubes or creamometers are used for the purpose of testing the volume of cream raised from the milk. We warn cheese makers against these tests for they are not reliable, although by operating on the skim-milk comparative results of a satisfactory character are often obtained. The small tubes used in some factories for raising the cream and allowing the casein to coagulate are utterly worthless, the results being extremely unreliable.

It must not be supposed that the science of milk-testing can be learned in a day, although very little skill is required in operating the instruments. We believe it would pay every cheese-maker to become an expert milk-tester; his services would be in much greater demand, and the study of the subject is a pleasing occupation. It is surprising to find the difference in the various operations of cheese-making as practiced by cheese-makers. We should be highly pleased to see an organization of cheese-makers through which they could compare notes both in the manufacture of cheese and in the testing of milk. Their voices are rarely heard at our great dairy conventions. Such an organization will receive the enthusiastic support of the Advocate. Who will be the organizer! It will also receive the sympathy of our farmers. We are pleased to find that the invitations for making milk-tests have come from the farmers and cheese-makers, whose organ the Farmer's Advocate has always been and always will be.

Take Ayer's Pills and be cured. Misery is a mild word to describe the sufferings of body and mind, caused by habitual constipation. A moderate use of Ayer's Pills will invariably regulate the bowels.

Women don Male Attire.

Paris, Sept. 9.—An association of six married ladies, well known in Paris, and all having titles, have discarded the conventional dress of their sex and donned male attire. They wear their hair short and drive dog-carts. Mme. De Relbou is said to have started the movement.

It Could not be Otherwise.

The testimony of the United States press as to the unhappy condition of the United States farmer, dependent as he is upon the prices ruling the British and other European markets to which he is constrained to export, has put the advocates of the United States tariff for Canadian farmers quite out of court and altogether out of countenance. It could not be otherwise. The idea that a Canadian farmer can undersell a United States farmer, in the latter's own markets, and that discrimination against the rest of the Empire means free trade for Canada, is so preposterous that not all the "boodle" at the bank of Staten Island can sustain it. No politician of any repute in this country has dared, or will dare, to maintain it.—Toronto World.

Day and Night

During an acute attack of Bronchitis, a ceaseless tickling in the throat, and an exhausting, dry, hacking cough, afflict the sufferer. Sleep is banished, and great prostration follows. This disease is also attended with Hoarseness, and sometimes Loss of Voice. It is liable to become chronic, involve the lungs, and terminate fatally. Ayer's Cherry Pectoral affords speedy relief and cure in cases of Bronchitis. It controls the disposition to cough, and induces refreshing sleep.

I have been a practicing physician for twenty-four years, and, for the past twelve, have suffered from annual attacks of Bronchitis. After exhausting all the usual remedies

Without Relief,

I tried Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. It helped me immediately, and effected a speedy cure.—G. Stoveall, M. D., Carrollton, Miss.

Ayer's Cherry Pectoral is decidedly the best remedy, within my knowledge, for chronic Bronchitis, and all lung diseases.—M. A. Rust, M. D., South Paris, Me.

I was attacked, last winter, with a severe Cold, which, from exposure, grew worse and finally settled on my Lungs. By night sweats I was reduced almost to a skeleton. My Cough was incessant, and I frequently spit blood. My physician told me to give up business, or I would not live a month. After taking various remedies without relief, I was finally two bottles of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. I am now in perfect health, and able to resume business, after having been pronounced incurable with Consumption.—S. P. Henderson, Saulsburgh, Penn.

For years I was in a decline. I had weak lungs, and suffered from Bronchitis and Catarrh. Ayer's Cherry Pectoral restored me to health, and I have been for a long time comparatively vigorous. In case of a sudden cold I always resort to the Pectoral, and find speedy relief.—Edward E. Curtis, Rutland, Vt.

Two years ago I suffered from a severe Bronchitis. The physician attending me became fearful that the disease would terminate in Pneumonia. After trying various medicines, without benefit, he finally prescribed Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, which relieved me at once. I continued to take this medicine a short time, and was cured.—Ernest Colton, Logansport, Ind.

The Silver Boat.

The room was hushed; and the moonlight fell
In broken bands on the garret floor;
So cold and damp—the shadows of death
Had fallen three hours before.

Oh! she was the child of his old age,
The night-wind crept up the narrow stair
But fled through the window sighing.

Her yellow hair fell in sheaves of gold,
Her breathing was hurried and low.
Her mother had died a night like this,
Just seven long years ago.

Day by day, with a terrible love,
A love that was unavailing,
He had watched the light in her blue eyes,
Steadily, hopelessly failing.

His words were distracted and wild;
God help him now—for the old man's life
Is bound up in the life of his child.

"Father," she cried, with a sudden strength,
"Look, oh! look at it, sailing there!
The good Lord has sent His silver boat—
He has heard and answered my prayer.

"It came last night, but you were asleep,
The windows were fastened tight;
held out my arms but it sailed away,
Sailed far away out of sight.

The old man's eyes were blinded with tears,
As they followed hers to the sky,
And he saw only the crescent moon
In a storm of clouds drift by.

But a light not born of earth or sky
Shone now in the eyes of the maiden;
"It comes, dear father, it comes!" she cried,
"For the weary and heavy-laden.

"I shall sail on through the brilliant stars,
To God's beautiful home on high,
And He will send it again for you
In a little while 'Good-bye.'

The moonlight strayed from the garret floor,
The crescent moon sailed out of sight;
But the old man knew that his wife and child
Had met in God's home that night.

The Quiver.

SIR HUGH'S LOVES.

Well, it was not such a dull evening after all: neither of them could tell how the time had passed when Ellerton came in to say the last train had been due for some time, and, as Sir Hugh had not returned, would my lady have the house shut up; could it actually be past eleven, and Erle and she still talking about this wonderful story.

Fay's cheeks were quite pink when she bade Erle good-night; her eyes shining like stars. Oh, these dear people, she thought, how strange and sad it all was, and yet how interesting; she had made Erle describe this Crystal over and over again. She must be an odd girl, she thought—so passionate and so undisciplined, and to think she was living with the other one, with the fair hair and the pretty smile; but when she had said this there had been no answering smile on Erle's face.

"Yes," he had returned, seriously, "I have often wondered to see them such friends, they are so utterly dissimilar. Fern—Miss Trafford I mean—is gentle and yielding—more like you, Fay; and Miss Ferrers—as I suppose I ought to call her—is so high spirited and proud. I often wonder how Percy dares to make love to her, but he seems to dare anything.

Well, Fay thought about it all when she went to bed; she had got used to her big shadowy room by this time; she lay wide awake watching the fire-light flicker and dance on the walls; how odd that people who loved each other so much should misunderstand each other so strangely; of course Crystal loved this grand looking Raby, and yet of her own accord she was hiding from him; and Fay thrilled with pity and affectionate sympathy, as she pondered over the sad story. She tried to tell Hugh when he returned the next day, but he was too busy, or else unwilling to listen to her.

"Yes, I know all about it—I never cared very much for the girl," he said, hastily; and then, as Fay looked intensely surprised, he added rather irritably:

"I told you we were old friends once, and of course I saw Miss Crystal when I visited at the Grange; she was never my taste handsome, of course, but one could see she had a bit of the devil in her she had a temper of her own if you like; and Mr. Ferrers spoiled her; he was terribly infatuated—I daresay he is still—men will be fools sometimes. There, don't keep me talking, Fay; of course every one in Sandycliffe and Singleton knows the story. I am not so sure that it was not wise of the girl to run away after all."

"Hugh must have been very intimate with them all," thought Fay when she was left alone. "How I wish he were not always too busy to talk to me. Erle says he is sure he is killing himself rushing about as he does, and he does look terribly ill. I wish he would see Dr. Martin, but of course my asking him to do so would only make him angry. It is very wrong of me, I am afraid, but I cannot help longing to know why Hugh has quarrelled with them so. I don't like to vex him, but it seems to me as though I have a right to know all that concerns my husband"—and Fay's throat swelled and her eyes grew a little dim. "Perhaps when something happens he will think me older and talk to me more," she said; and though she was alone a rosy blush came over her face.

Fay was very sorry when the time came for Erle to go back to Belgrave House; she would miss him sadly she knew. They had resumed their old walks and drives, and Fay paid visits to Bonnie Bess in her stable, and taught the pretty creature to follow her over the place like a dog.

Erle was sorry to go too; he had grown very much attached to his new cousin. Mr. Ferrers was to join him a little later at Belgrave House, and he promised to write and give her full particulars of their visit to Beulah Place. In his heart he had a secret longing to feel Fern's hand in his again, and to see her bright welcoming smile. "I have been here a whole month," he grumbled; "no wonder Hugh is tired of me by this time."

Fay was rather surprised then to receive a letter from him two or three days afterwards telling her that Mr. Ferrers' visit was indefinitely postponed.

"Everything has gone wrong," he wrote; "and the fates, those mischievous cross-grained old women with the one eye between them, are dead against us.

"I went over to Beulah Place the first evening just to reconnoitre, and was much disgusted to hear that Miss Davenport—Miss Ferrers I mean, only I stick to the old name from habit—was nursing one of her pupils with the measles. The little rascal—it is a boy—had refused to be nursed by any one else; and there she is in the curate's house kept in durance vile; and, to make matters worse, there is some talk of her going out of town with them.

"I wrote off to the Grange at once, and Miss Ferrers answered me. Her brother would defer his visit for the present, she said, until Miss Davenport was back in her old quarters. He was much disappointed, of course, at this delay; but he was satisfied to know that she was in good hands, and he was used to disappointments. I did feel so sorry for the poor old fellow when I read that." And the rest of the letter was filled with lively descriptions of a ball where he had met Miss Selby and danced with her half the night.

Fay shook her head over this part of Erle's letter. He was an incorrigible flirt, she was afraid; but she missed him very much. The old Hall seemed very quiet without Erle's springy footsteps and merry whistle, and somehow Fay was a little quieter too.

With the new hope there came a new and tender expression on her sweet face.

She grew less child-like and more womanly, and day by day there grew a certain modest dignity that became her well. Hugh was very gentle with her, and careful to guard her from all imprudence; but life was very difficult to him just then, and he could not always restrain his growing irritability.

He was ill, and yet unwilling to own anything was amiss. He scoffed at the idea that his nerves were disorganized; and with the utmost recklessness seemed bent on ruining his fine constitution.

His restlessness and inward struggles were making him thin and haggard; still any fatigue was better than inaction, he thought. Often, after a long day spent in riding over the Redmond and Wyngate estates, he would set out again, often fasting, to walk across ploughed lands and through miry lanes to visit some sick laborer, and then sit up half the night in his solitary study.

Years afterwards he owned that he never looked back on this part of his life without an inward shudder. What would have become of him, he said, if the hand of Providence had not laid him low before he had succeeded in ruining himself, body and soul?

No one but Hugh knew how often he had yielded to the temptation to drown his inward miseries in pernicious drugs; how in those solitary vigils, while his innocent child-wife was sleeping peacefully like an infant, his half maddened brain conjured up delirious fancies that seemed to people the dark library with haunting faces.

But he never meant to harm himself really; he would say in his sober daylight reflections he was only so very wretched. Margaret's influence had always kept him pure, and he was not the man to find pleasure in any dissipation.

No, he would not harm himself; but he wanted more to do. If he could represent his county, for example; but he had lost his seat last election to his neighbor Colonel Dacre! If he could travel; if Fay would only spare him! And then he shook his head as he thought of his unborn child.

"You look so ill, Hugh," Fay would say with tears in her eyes when he came up to wish her good by, "I wish you would stay with me a little."

But Hugh would only give a forced augh and say that his "Wee Wifie was becoming more fanciful that ever, and that he should not know what to do with her if she went on like this:" and then, kissing her hastily, and unloosening the little hands from his neck, he would go out of the room pretending to whistle.

But one evening when they were together in the library he fell asleep while she was talking to him, and looked so strange and flushed that Fay got frightened and tried to wake him.

"Come, Hugh," she said, softly, "it is 11 o'clock, and I cannot leave you like this, and I am so tired and sleepy, dear;" and she knelt down and put her hand under his head, and stroked back the hair from his hot forehead. But Hugh only muttered something inaudible, and turned his face away.

"Saville," she said, as the man entered the room, "I do not know what is the matter with Sir Hugh to-night, he sleeps so heavily and looks so strange. If it were not so late, and I were sure that he would not mind it, I would send for Dr. Martin."

"Nonsense," exclaimed her husband drowsily, for this threat of sending for the doctor had roused him effectually, and he managed to sit up and look at them.

"Why, what a white shaking child you look, you are not fit to be up so late, Fay; why don't you take more care of yourself?"

"I was so frightened, dear," she whispered; "I could not bear to leave you. I am sure you are ill, Hugh; do let Saville help you to bed."

"Oh, is that Saville? I thought—I thought—well never mind. There is nothing the matter with me, Saville, is there?"

"No, Sir Hugh; only it is late, and I expect you are tired, as my lady said."

"Oh, but she said I was ill"—very querulously; "I have never had a day's illness in my life, have I, Saville? Mrs. Heron will know; ask Mrs. Heron—well, I think I may as well go to bed and have my sleep out."

And the next day he reiterated the same thing, that there was nothing the matter with him, nothing; only they had not called him at the usual time, and he had slept late; but he had no appetite, and did not care to rise.

It was foolish to have tired himself out so, he owned. But if Fay were good and would not scold him, she might sit with him and read something amusing. But he did not tell her, or Saville either, that he had tried to dress himself and had fallen back half fainting on the bed, or of the strange horrible feelings that were creeping over him, and that made him dread to be alone. Only Fay was very disappointed that he did not seem to hear anything she read; or remember a word of it. It was the shooting pain in his head, he told her; and then he laughed in a way that was hardly mirthful, and said he would try to sleep.

But that night he never closed his eyes, and yet the next day he would not allow Fay to send for the doctor, though she begged piteously for permission. Doctors were old women, he said, and Dr. Martin especially. It was only the pain in his head that kept him awake and made him so feverish; but towards the evening his eyes began to shine beautifully, and he grew quite lively and talkative.

He said he was much better, if only his head and hands were not burning like live coals; and that he meant if it were fine to drive Fay out in the pony-carriage to-morrow, and they would go and call on Margaret.

Fay stared, as well she might. Did Hugh mean Miss Ferrers? she asked, timidly.

And Hugh, speaking thickly, like a drunken man, said, "Yes, certenly! and why not?" and he would ask Margaret to go with him to Shepherd's Corner to-morrow, and see Tim Hartlebury, who was lying dying or dead, he did not know which; but apropos to the Sudbury politics, and the old Tory member, Lord Lyndhurst of Lyndhurst, at whom the Radical party, with the publican of the "Green Drake" at their head, had shield rotten eggs, would Lady Redmond assure him that the Grange was not infested with serpents. The old hydra-headed reptile had lived there in his father's time, and there was a young brood left, he heard, that were nourished on Margaret's roses. No, he repeated, if there were serpents at the Grange they would not drive there, for he was afraid of Raby, and he hated parsons, for even blind ones could see sometimes, and they might tell tales—lies—he said, beating wildly on the bed-clothes; lies, every one of them, and would they please take away his Wee Wifie, for he was tired of her. And Fay, trembling very much, called out to Saville to come quickly, for Sir Hugh was talking so funnily, she could not make out what he meant. And Saville, as he stood and held his master's hands, thought his talk so very funny that he summoned Mrs. Heron and Ellerton at once, while the groom saddled one of the horses and galloped off for Dr. Martin; and when Dr. Martin arrived, and had seen his patient, the mystery was soon cleared.

Sir Hugh had brain fever; and that night Ellerton and Saville had to hold him down in his bed to prevent him throwing himself from the window. He very nearly did it once in the cunning of his madness, when they left him unguarded for a moment; and after that they had to strap him down.

They had taken his Wee Wifie from him almost by force; she had clung to him so—her poor mad Hugh, as she called him. But Mrs. Heron took the distracted young creature in her motherly arms when Dr. Martin brought her downstairs, and soothed her as though she were a child. Fay put her head down on the housekeeper's shoulder and cried until she could cry no longer. "Will he die—will my darling die?" was all she could say at first; and then she would ask piteously to go back to him.

But no one ventured to let her cross the threshold. After this there were two hospital nurses sent down from London, and Dr. Conway, a well known physician in town, met Dr. Martin in consultation. Saville and Ellerton were always in the sick-room when wanted. Everything that money could procure, or faithful attendance could give, was lavished on the patient, but for a long time there was no improvement.

The nurses were too much accustomed to such scenes to take much notice of their patient's wild talk; but the trusty old servants, who knew their master's secret, shuddered as they heard him, for his talk was always of Margaret. He never even mentioned his Wee Wifie.

"Oh for Margaret!" he cried, to give him water to quench his thirst; for he was in torment, and no one would give him drink. Oh for Margaret's cool hand—for Maggie—for his own love Margaret; and so on, and so on, through the long hours of that fevered dream.

How that one idea beset him!

She was a star, and he went seeking her through space till he got lost and entangled in the Milky Way, and revolved madly through the infinite.

She was in Paradise, standing on the topmost star of the golden ladder, stretching out her hands and calling to him to come to her before the door was shut; and ever as he tried to climb, the fiends came swarming from their pits of darkness, and dragged him down with endless fallings and precipitous crashings, while his Wee Wifie laughed mockingly from the distance.

"Oh for Margaret, Margaret, Margaret!" and so on through the day and through the night, until they thought it must have killed him.

Those were terrible days at Redmond Hall. The very servants went carefully about the house with hushed voices, looking after their young mistress with pitying eyes, as she wandered like a lost spirit from one room to another, generally followed by the faithful Janet. Erle came down once, but Fay grew so hysterical at the sight of her old favorite that Mrs. Heron was quite frightened, and begged him to go away; and, as he could do no good, he acquiesced very sensibly in this piece of advice.

Mrs. Heron was growing quite unhappy about my lady. Nothing she could say would make Fay cease from those aimless wanderings; she could not eat, she could not rest, and her fits of weeping seemed only to exhaust her.

Nothing did her any good until Dr. Martin came to her one day, and, taking the thin little hand in his, gave her his faithful promise that, if the fever abated, and she were strong enough, she should help to nurse him by and by, but it would depend upon herself, he said, meaningly; and Fay promised to eat and sleep that she might be fit to nurse Hugh.

She meant to be good and keep her promise; but one evening the longing to see her husband was too strong for her.

Saville had just gone downstairs for something and had left he dressing-room door ajar. Fay, gliding down the corridor in her white dress, caught sight of the half opened door, and the temptation was too strong for her; the next moment she was in the dimly lighted room, with her finger on the handle of the closed door.

It yielded to her touch at once, and Fay's hungry eyes tried to pierce through the semi-darkness.

It was the oriel chamber, and Sir Hugh lay on the very bed where, Mrs. Heron had solemnly assured Fay, many a Redmond had breathed his first and last breath. It had been found impossible to move him, but Fay did not remember this as she stood with beating heart, not daring to move a step.

It was very quiet and still—one of the strange nurses was sitting by the bed with her face toward the patient; she had not heard Fay's stealthy entrance; the next moment Fay choked back a sob that threatened to rise in her throat, for she had caught sight at last of the white changed face that lay on the pillow; and then, regardless of everything but her love and longing, she glided quickly to the bed, and kissing the wide staring eyes, laid the shaven head tenderly upon her bosom.

"Oh, my lady!" exclaimed the nurse, in a terrified voice, "this is very wrong—very wrong indeed."

"Hush—I am his wife—I have a right to be here. You know me, do you not, my darling Hugh?"

Poor Fay! she had her punishment then; for Hugh did not know her in the least, and seemed to shrink from her with horror; he begged her to send Margaret to him—his dear Margaret, and not stand there like some white horrible statue dressed up in grave-clothes.

"You had better go, my lady, you are only exciting him," observed the nurse, quietly; and Fay wrung her hands and hurried from the room. Saville found her crouching against the dressing room door, with her face hidden in her hands, and fetched Mrs. Heron at once to coax her away; but Fay hardly seemed to understand their meaning; her face had a white, strained look upon it as Mrs. Heron put her arm round her and led her tenderly to her room.

CHAPTER XX.

"LITTLE JOYCE."

In the cruel fire of sorrow
Cast thy heart, do not faint or wail,
Let thy heart be firm and steady,
Do not let thy spirit quail.
But wait till the trial be over
And take thy heart again,
For as gold is tried by fire,
A heart must be tried by pain.

Adelaide Anne Procter.

"Oh, my lady, what will Dr. Martin say?" exclaimed Mrs. Heron, as she almost lifted her young mistress on to the couch, and stood over her rubbing her hands. It was a warm April evening, but Fay was shivering and her teeth chattering as though with cold.

"What does it matter what he says?" returned Fay; the girl's lips were white, and there was still a scared look in her eyes. "Is that why they would not let me see him—because they have cut off his hair and made him look so unlike himself, and because he talks so strangely?"

"Yes, my lady, and for your own good, and because—" but Fay interrupted her excitedly.

"My good? as though anything could do me good while my darling husband suffers so cruelly. Oh, Mrs. Heron, would you believe it? he did not know me; he looked as though he were afraid of me, his own wife: he told me to go away and not touch him, and to send Margaret. Oh," with a sort of restless despair in her voice, "who is this Margaret of whom he always speaks?"

Mrs. Heron's comely face paled a little with surprise—as she told Ellerton afterwards, she felt at that moment as though a feather would have knocked her down. "My heart was in my mouth," she observed, feelingly, "when I heard the pretty creature say those words, 'who is this Margaret of whom he always speaks.' Oh, I was all in a tremble when I heard her, and then all at once I remembered Miss Joyce, and it came to me as a sort of inspiration."

"Indeed, my lady, there is no telling," returned the good housekeeper, cautiously; "it is often the case with people in fever that they forget all about the present, and just go back to past days; and so it may be Sir Hugh thinks about the little sister who died when he was a lad at school, and of whom he was so fond."

"Sir Hugh never told me he had had a sister," replied Fay, roused to some animation at this. "Was her name Margaret?"

"Yes, to be sure." But Mrs Heron forebore to mention that the child had always been called by her second name Joyce. "Ay, she was a pretty little dear, and Master Hugh—I mean Sir Hugh—doated on her; she had the whooping-cough very badly, and Miss Joy—I mean Miss Margaret was always delicate, and it just carried her off."

"And my husband was fond of her?" was the musing reply, "and yet it seems strange that he should go back all those years and think of his baby sister."

"I don't think Dr. Martin would say it was strange if you were to ask him, my lady," was the diplomatic answer. "We might mention it to-morrow, and see what he says. You may depend upon it that folk travel backwards in their mind when the fever gets hold of their brain. Most likely he is thinking a deal of his mother and Miss Margaret, for he was always an affectionate lad was Master Hugh."

"Dear Margaret! that was what he called her."

"Ay, no doubt, precious little lamb. I can see her now, with her curly head and white frock, as she pelted Master Hugh with rose-leaves on the lawn. Now, my lady, you are only fit for bed, and there is not a morsel of color in your face, and Ellerton says you hardly touched dinner. Now, I am going to bring you up a glass of wine and a sandwich, and you will let Janet help you undress."

Fay was too weary to resist. What did it matter, she thought again; but with her usual sweet courtesy she thanked Mrs. Heron, and tried to swallow a few mouthfuls, though they seemed to choke her, but she was glad when they left her alone. Sleep? how was she to sleep, with this nightmare of horror oppressing her? Again, the poor shaven head was lying in her bosom. She was kissing the wide staring eyes. Why had he pushed her from him? "Oh Hugh, you ought to have known me," she sobbed, as she tossed wearily in the darkness. Janet who was sleeping in the adjoining room, heard her once and came to her bedside.

"Were you calling me, my lady?" she asked.

"No, Janet," answered the poor child. "I am only crying because I am so unhappy."

"Better go to sleep, my lady," was Janet's sympathising reply; "things seem always worse in the dark; most likely we shall hear the master is better to-morrow. Saville says he has a deal of strength in him and will cheat the doctors yet;" and somehow this homely consolation soothed Fay, and by and by she slept the unbroken sleep of youth.

Dr. Martin listened to Mrs. Heron's account with a very grave face the next morning, but he chose to make light of the whole affair to Fay.

"You hardly deserve to be told that this escapade of yours, Lady Redmond, has done our patient no harm," he observed in a half-joking voive. "Sir Hugh is quieter to-day—much quieter. I should not be surprised if there be decided improvement in a few hours, but," as Fay's eyes filled with tears of thankfulness, "it was a very risky thing to do, and as you deserve to be punished for it, I must insist that these ponies of yours, who are eating their heads off with idleness, shall be put in harness at once, and you will please take a long drive that will not bring you within sight of Redmond Hall for the next two hours."

Fay laughed at the Doctor's grim face, but she was ready to promise him obedience if Hugh were better; she was quite willing to take the drive; she rang and ordered the ponies at once, and took the reins in her own hands. The fresh spring sunshine was delicious; the soft breezes seemed laden with messages of hope. Dr. Martin was right when he ordered that drive. Fay's little pale face looked less miserable as she restrained her ponies' frolics. She found herself listening to the birds and noticing the young spring foliage with her old interest as they drove through the leafy lanes. Fay had just turned her ponies' heads towards a winding road that led straight to the shore, when the frisky little animals shied playfully at a lady in a grey cloak who was standing by the hedge looking at a nest of young linnets. As she turned Fay saw that it was Miss Ferrers, and involuntarily checked her ponies, and at the same moment Miss Ferrers stepped into the road.

"Oh, Lady Redmond," she said, and Fay wondered why she was so pale. Had she been ill too? "This is a most unexpected pleasure. May I—may I"—hesitating for a moment, "ask you to stop and speak to me?"

"Certainly," returned Fay; and with quick impulse she handed the rains to the groom, and sprang into the road. "Take the ponies up and down, Ford; I shall not be long. I was just going down on the beach for a breath of sea-air," she continued, turning to Margaret, "and I am so glad I have met you, because we can go together," for she thought Hugh would certainly not mind her exchanging a few courteous words with Miss Ferrers when they met face to face; besides Miss Ferrers had asked to speak to her.

"I wanted to know—but of course I see by your face—that Sir Hugh is better," began Margaret, but her dry lips would hardly fashion the words.

"Oh yes," returned Fay, eagerly. "Dr. Martin says he is quieter, much quieter, this morning, and he hopes to find decided improvement in a few hours; oh, Miss Ferrers, it has been such a terrible time, I do not know how I have lived through it."

"It must have been dreadful for you, and your are looking ill yourself, Lady Redmond," with a pitying glance at the small white face that looked smaller and thinner since she saw it last.

"I do not know how I have been," returned Fay, simply. "I seemed to have no feeling, the time passed somehow, it was always meal-time, and one could not eat, and then night came, but it was not always possible to sleep. I was always wandering about, and it did not seem easy to pray, and then they came and told me it was wrong to grieve so, but how could I help it?"

"Was there no one to come to you, to be with you, I mean? but Fay shook her head.

Timber Profits.

An Albany correspondent of the Gardeners' Monthly gives the actual amount of timber grown on the farm of I. G. Smock, of Holmdel, N.J., one portion of which, containing thirty-seven hundreths of an acre or fifty-nine square rods, produced 1,406 five holed fence posts, which sold at 40 cents each; 150 smaller posts at 15 cents each, and 250 stakes at 5 cents, amounting to $597.40, or at the rate of $1,614 an acre. Other portions of the farm gave 4,000 posts at 40 cents each or $1,600, besides smaller amounts. The cost of cutting, dressing and boring is not stated. The trees were raised on broken portions of the farm, too rough for tillage, and were cut nine years ago. They were planted at intervals since 1830, the average age of the trees being about fifty years. The management which they received is not stated. On the measured portion it will be perceived that the annual profit per acre on the growth of the trees, not including interest, was $32. As this result appears to have been obtained from rough land which was not subjected to cultivation, it would be interesting to know what could be had from good, well cultivated ground. The area cut over nine years ago is now covered with a luxuriant growth of handsome young trees which have sprung up from the cuttings.

A Terrible Threat

An Irish laborer in Boston was starting out one morning for his work and a small boy of 3 or 4 years insisted on trotting along after him. The father kept telling the dirty little morsel of humanity to go back, but the urchin kept steadily on, until they came to a place where it was necessary to cross the street. Here the father turned to his offspring, with an air of one speaking a great finality. "Now, Patsy," he said, sternly, "if yez don't be afther goin' straight away home this blessed minute I won't niver git yez on the police force." The little Irish mite stopped as if a spell had arrested his footsteps. He looked up at his stalwart father, to see if it were possible that he could mean anything so terrible, and then, perceiving no relenting in the face above him, he turned on his tracks like a flash, and ran home with all the swiftness his little legs could compass.—The Argonaut.

Royal weddings ought to be numerous within the next few months. Recent statistics point out that there are now in Europe 108 princes and sixty-six princesses of marriageable age. Only six of these are betrothed.

CURRENT TOPICS.

One of the new English peers is 83 years years old. He used to be a very active business man, but, of course, wasn't eligible until he got over that.

At Bennington Center, Vt., will presently be seen a monument with this inscription: "On this spot William Lloyd Garrison edited the Journal of the Times, October 3rd, 1828—March 27th, 1830. Hither came Benjamin Lundy to enlist him in the cause of the slave. Garrison departed hence to lift up in Baltimore the banner of immediate emancipation."

A popular fallacy, according to A. W. Hare, of the Royal Society of Edinburgh, is the belief that the water from a rushing torrent is safer for drinking purposes than water from a sluggish stream, for the reverse is really the fact. Sewage-contaminated water contains fewer organisms after ten or twelve days than river water, for the reason that the microbes' rapid growth during the first two or three days exhausts their food supply.

About a year age a young man named Saunders, living in Huntingdon, Eng., stabbed his sweetheart in the chest with a sword cane. The girl apparently recovered, but she has always insisted that a piece of the weapon must have broken off and remained in the wound. Professor Humphrey, of Addenbrooke's Hospital, Cambridge, has just succeeded in extracting from the girl's body a piece of the blade more than six inches long. It was taken out from her back, broken end first, showing that it had turned completely around since she was stabbed.

On the day of the visit of the London Metropolitan Board of Works to the Fire Department headquarters, Captain Shaw complained that he had too few horses for his engine. Just then an alarm called the department to a large fire in Southwark. "Now, gentlemen," said he, "how can I send another engine?" At that moment another alarm rang for a fire in Fore street, and as there were no horses to drag the spare engines the flames had no hindrance. It was an illustration worth a hundred arguments, and Captain shaw will get his horses.

Briquettes, or fuel bricks from coal dust, are growing in favor and demand in Europe. Scotland has at last fallen into the ranks of briquette-making nations. One of the largest coal mining and pig iron making firms there is now erecting a plant with a capacity of 200 tons per day. In France and other continental nations the business is large and growing. Jules Chagotolia, of France, and Carlo Raggio, of Italy, have each increased their plants by one new one annually for the last six years, till now they have a yearly capacity of nearly 350,000 tons each. Other firms have also gone into the business largely. The business is likely to get a start in this country soon, where, as coal dust costs nothing, the profits would be large.

Dr. A. B. Griffiths has demonstrated that iron sulphate, or copperas, acts upon the cellulose of the microscopic fungi which prey upon plants, but does not effect that of the higher plants themselves. It is therefore a remedy for the most virulent epidemics which attack field and garden crops and destroys such parasite germs and fungi as the potato disease, wheat mildew, etc. In one English district this year's crop of winter beans has failed on account of a growth of fungus on the roots of the plants, a disease which a timely application of iron sulphate would have cured. It is also said to be an efficient remedy for poison by ivy: Dissolve a tablespoonful of copperas in two-thirds of a teacup of boiling water, and when cold apply with a cloth to the poisoned places.

Dr. Blache states, in the Bulletin de Therapeutique, that a refiner of petroleum having been prohibited by a prefect the distribution of petroleum in medicinal doses, the fact led to an inquiry being made as to its utility in affections of the chest—the native petroleum from Pennsylvania and Virginia being that first experimented with. Dr. Blache states, as the result, that in chronic bronchitis, with abundant expectoration, it rapidly diminishes the amount of the secretion and the paroxysms of coughing, and in simple bronchitis rapid amelioration has been obtained; its employment in phthisis has been continued for too short a time, as yet, to allow of any opinion being delivered as to its efficacy, beyond the fact that it diminishes expectoration, which also loses its purulent character. The petroleum is popularly taken in doses of a teaspoonful before each meal, and, after the first day, any nausea which it may excite in some persons disappears.

The London Times prints an interesting account of a new system of shoemaking which may work a revolution in one of the most ancient and honorable of handicrafts. In the new plan the method of securing the soles, uppers and insoles is the exact reverse of that now in vogue in the ordinary wholesale trade. The plan is making notable headway in England, and in all probability will not be long in crossing the ocean.

New York Standard: "Henry George's teachings are not opposed to the doctrines of the Catholic Church," said Cardinal Manning to a World correspondent in London some months ago, "unless they fall into Socialism." The significant repudiation of Mr. George and his teachings by the Socialists within the past month ought to convince even the stupidest of Archbishop Corrigan's followers that these teachings have not "fallen into Socialism."

At a recent meeting of planters and others at Atlanta, Ga., Senator Colquitt said: Could you be allowed to sell where you could get the best price and buy where you could buy cheapest, your incomes, let them be great or small, would be enhanced perhaps thirty-three and one-third per cent.

Salmon are becoming very scarce in the upper Rhine. Though vast numbers of the fish go down the river to the sea, only a small portion ever return again, for the Dutch fishermen intercept the salmon on their way back by a most ingenious and complete system of nets. Lately the Dutch caught over twelve thousand salmon in a week, so that the German and Swiss fishermen higher up the river complain itterly.

Gounod's Newest Mass.

Paris Letter to the London Telegraph.

Gounod's new mass, composed in honor of Joan of Arc and named after her, was performed for the first time yesterday in the historic Cathedral of Rheims. The work, which had been carefully rehearsed under the baton of the composer, was listened to by about six thousand persons, and, heard within the vast and venerable pile, it had a telling effect. It was first suggested to M. Gounod by Cardinal Lavigerie, who wanted it for the festival of Pope Urban II., of Crusade memory, but the composer found that he was more inspired by the history of the peasant girl of Domremy than by that of the Pontiff. The mass is accompanied principally by the organ, with the aid of trumpets and trombones in the prelude and of harps in the Benedictus. In some parts the voices are heard without accompaniment, and the work is mainly distinguished by its simplicity and severity, the florid effects of what are called "dramatized masses," or those with orchestra and choirs, being avoided as much as possible. M. Gounod has followed the simple plain-chant Palestrina school. There are several soli, but no preponderance of any particular voice or instrument, the whole of the music being written with an eye to the general ensemble, of a strictly and severely religious character, harmony being in every instance combined with simplicity. In the prelude the organ alternates with the trumpets and trombones; the soprano voices take up the Kyrie, and the fullest treatment is given to the In Terra Pax, which abounds in melodious motives, the character of simplicity being, however, well maintained. The sanctus is short, and, like the Agnus Dei, for the choir only. The mass, although it will, no doubt, be used in many foreign and Provincial churches, will hardly be popular, except, perhaps, as a temporary curiosity in Paris, where florid church music is preferred.

Interviews are published here with a large number of prominent citizens on the accusation made by Manager Van Horne, that annexation sentiment prompted the present agitation in this Province. The insinuation is indignantly repudiated, and it is pointed out that no Province has been more loyal to Confederation and British connection than Manitoba. But if any thing is calculated to upset this feeling it is the line of action now being pursued by the Dominion Government and the insults of Mr. Van Horne.

She Was Very Much Engaged.

Since the first issue of my journal sixty-four offers of marriage have been made to me by parties I never saw. From such a list I could undoubtedly select a curiosity worthy of mummifying. But the plain, naked truth is that a few years since I actually met a crank face to face who had the courage to vocalize his offering. I at first positively refused, directly relented, shortly acquiesced. The fact is, I am married and have three youthful daughter and a husband.—Lady Editor of Douglassville (Ga.) Industrial.

A Mother's Devotion.

An Onna, Ill., despatch says: Mrs. Hawkins, wife of a section foreman on the Mobile & Ohio Railway near Kaolin, jumped from the station platform in front of a train, yesterday, to save the life of her infant son who had strayed upon the roadbed. She was struck by the locomotive and her skull was fractured. She may possibly recover. The child got off the track itself just in time to escape injury.

MILK, WHEY AND FRUIT JUICE.

Remedies in Vogue at a Favorite Invalid Resort in Austria.

Before describing the attractions of Meran as a winter residence, I shall briefly mention the other forms of cure in vogue there. Among them the milk and whey cures are pre-eminent. Meran cows' milk is remarkable for its excellence: the whey made from goat's milk here is remarkably rich in sugar. The patient who is under a milk diet gets milk alone, but he gets plenty of it, the dose being nearly a quart every three hours. If after existing on milk for a week the patient longs for something more substantial, he is allowed a roll or two soaked in milk; at the end of a fortnight he is given a little meat, and after three weeks' treatment he is either quite recovered or he ought to be, the fault being his own if the cure is not complete. Milk is obtainable at different times in the year; the period of the whey cure, however, begins in April and ends with May. Whey is drank in the morning and some mineral water is often taken along with it. Those persons whose cases are not adapted for the milk or whey cure may find benefit from koumiss prepared from cows' milk. The dose at the beginning of the treatment is an imperial quart, taken in two portions daily, one in the morning, the other in the afternoon. The quantity taken is gradually increased till the dose is three imperial quarts. All the forms of cure I have named are not peculiar to Meran, though they are pursued here in a more systematic fashion than in other places. The last I have to mention cannot be had in like perfection elsewhere. It is a plant juice cure, and is available in the spring only, when certain plants unfold their first green leaves on the slopes of the Alps. The juice is expressed from them and the patient drinks it. It may interest the botanist to learn the names of plants so employed: they are Achillæa millefolium, Nasturtium aquaticum, Rumex acetosa, Ruta graveolens, Leontodon taraxacum, Urtica dioica and Menyanthes trifoliata. The decoction is green in color and bitter in taste. Cases of indigestion and poverty of blood are said to be benefited by this cure, which is practised from the middle of March to the middle of April.—London Times.

Plenty of Wife.

Very nearly a year ago a lady named Mrs. W. C. Lake was killed in an accident on the Chicago & Northwestern Railroad. The sorrowing husband was so deeply grieved that he sued the company for a poultice of $10,000, and there's no telling but that he might have collected it had not a few facts been brought out in preliminary evidence. It seems that he has served two terms in State prison and has had four wives. One is in the poorhouse in Winnebago County, and the latest he married about ten days ago. He was not married to the one that was killed, but considered her a good enough wife to sue on. Women must be rather plentiful in some parts of Wisconsin.—Buffalo Courier.

A Farmer's Odd Experience.

Four weeks ago Farmer C. S. Van Horne, of Mill Point, N.Y., went home from the wheat field with a sore throat. The soreness increased, the throat swelled and nothing gave relief. Then the soreness disappeared from the inside and a swelling appeared on the outside of the throat, and finally a few days ago the cause of all this discomfort was apparent when the swelling broke out and from it came a wheat beard an inch long. Van Horne had taken it into his mouth, it had lodged in the throat and then worked its way through.

They Didn't Take to Vaccination.

Two of the intermediate passengers on the Sarmatian refused to be vaccinated on their arrival at Rimouski on Sunday. As a result they were told that they must either submit to the operation or go into quarantine at Grosse Isle. They then consented to be vaccinated, threatening that they would bring an action for damages against the Canadian Government. There is a little lesson in this incident. It is that anti-vaccinationists should travel first-class.

A Cow's Long Fast.

The Grimsby Independent says: A valuable cow belonging to Mrs. Lally, lost on Sunday, Aug. 20th, and which was supposed to have been stolen, was found on Monday, 29th, by Mr. Andrew Allan, lying in a sink hole in one of his fields. The sink hole, which was about ten feet in diameter and six deep, was covered with brush, and it is supposed the cow fell in while trying to pass over the brush. Strange to say the cow was not injured in any way, and beyond being very weak and emaciated seemed none the worse for her enforced and long fast of eight days.

Prince Bismarck has been writing good advice in an English "Mees's" album. The young lady petitioned the prince pathetically for his autograph, declaring that a few lines of his hand-writing would make her happy for life. So the Chancellor wrote on the front page of the book: "Beware, my child, of building castles in the air, for they are buildings which we erect so easily, yet they are the most difficult to demolish."

An eccentric friend of a paragrapher of the Boston Post, who has a knack of picking up stray truths that get under other people's feet, tells him that infants are animals much more mysterious and "capable" than is generally supposed There is, he declares, a great deal of magnetism or fascinating power in a baby, to which all dumb creatures are very suspectible. He is personally acquainted with one infant in continual use by its male parent as a kind of horse tamer. When ever the father desires to catch a particular Houyhnhym which becomes very wild when let loose in the pasture, the baby in the carriage is brought out, and his four-footed friend comes up, pokes his nose in the baby's lap, and is quietly secured. This infant is thus able to do with ease the work that six men struggling for an hour have often failed to accomplish.

WOMEN'S SAVINGS.

High Interest Bad Security—Beware of the Younger Brother.

A writer in Cassell's Magazine treats of an interesting subject interestingly as follows: Experience shows that of the women who do save a large number lose their little stores. This is chiefly by investing them in concerns which promise large interest. It cannot be too often repeated that large interest means risk. No company would go about offering high interest if it could get the money it needed for less, and there are so many people with money to invest that any safe concern can get as much as it wants at a low rate. Even if the grand promises of bubble companies could be realized your interest would probably be gained by oppressing or defrauding others. But they seldom or never are realized, and it is a well-known fact that a very large proportion of their victims are women who, ignorant of business, and weary of the lengthy process of aiding little by little to their savings, hope to become rich all at once, and so grasp at the shadow to find that they have lost the substance. Again, do not be too kind to your relations. I do not say that you should be selfish or mean, but only prudent. Before lending money to be used in their business see that the business is a safe one: you may have the fullest confidence in the honest intentions of the borrower, but make sure that his capability is also to be depended on. Many teachers give their savings to help in the education of their brothers. Here, too, charity should be guided by prudence. It is not true kindness to help a stupid boy to a university education; you had much better help him in some other way. It is also bad for him to take your savings without any recompense. In most cases you had better lend them give, the knowledge that he must repay what he now spends out of his future earnings will help to keep him from extravagance.

Is This What Ails You?

Do you have dull, heavy headaches, obstruction of the nasal passages, discharges falling from the head into the throat, sometimes profuse, watery and acrid, at others thick, tenacious, mucous, purulent, bloody and putrid, eyes weak, watery and inflamed, ringing in the ears, deafness, hacking or coughing to clear the throat, expectoration of offensive matter, together with scabs from ulcers, voice changed and nasal twang, breath offensive, smell and taste impaired, is there a sensation of dizziness, with mental depression, a hacking cough and general debility? If you have all, or any considerable number of these symptoms, you are suffering from Nasal Catarrh. The more complicated your disease has become, the greater the number and diversity of symptoms. Thousands of cases annually, without manifesting half of the above symptoms, result in consumption and end in the grave. No disease is so common, more deceptive and dangerous, or less understood, or more unsuccessfully treated by physicians. The manufacturers of Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy offer, in good faith, a reward of $500 for a case of this disease which they cannot cure. The Remedy is sold by druggists at only 50 cts.

The news was received with the utmost satisfaction by the community that he had terrorized, but the arrest of a disease that is stealing away a loved and valued life is an achievement that should inspire heartfelt gratitude. It is a purely vegetable detective, that will ferret out and capture the most subtle lung or blood disorder. Druggists.

"John," said the broken-hearted lady to her sick husband, "the minister is downstairs; would you like to see him?"

"I think it would be advisable," responded John, feebly.

"And John, he may suggest that you endow a chapel, or something of that sort?"

"Don't be alarmed," responded the invalid, reassuringly, "I am not sick enough for that yet."—Tid-Bits.

A Good Patient.

"Do you still visit old Guskins?" asked a conscientious friend of a doctor.

"Yes," was the reply; "he's one of my best patients."

"But I thought you said he was incurable?"

"So he is."

"If that's the case, how can you accept pay for curing him?"

Though detested by the gardener, the vine of the wild cucumber is a great beautifier of the landscape, says the Kingston Freeman. It has a handsome leaf, and its very exuberance of growth makes it the more valuable. Wherever there is an unsightly spot, plant the wild cucumber, and in an almost incredibly short space of time the place will be covered with a rich mantle of green that will charm the eye and completely hide the ugly object from view.

WHAT AILS YOU?

If you have all, or any considerable number of these symptoms, you are suffering from that most common of American maladies—Bilious Dyspepsia, or Torpid Liver, associated with Dyspepsia, or Indigestion. The more complicated your disease has become, the greater the number and diversity of symptoms. No matter what stage it has reached, Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery will subdue it, if taken according to directions for a reasonable length of time. If not cured, complications multiply and Consumption of the Lungs, Skin Diseases, Heart Disease, Rheumatism, Kidney Disease, or other grave maladies are quite liable to set in and, sooner or later, induce a fatal termination.

From its marvelous power over this terribly fatal disease, when first offering this now world-famed remedy to the public, Dr. Pierce thought seriously of calling it his "CONSUMPTION CURE," but abandoned that name as too restrictive for a medicine which, from its wonderful combination of tonic, or strengthening, alterative, or blood-cleansing, anti-bilious, pectoral, and nutritive properties, is unequaled, not only as a remedy for Consumption, but for all Chronic Diseases of the

The Thornbury Standard gives an interesting and amusing account of the exploits of the burglars in Thornbury and Clarksburg. The N.R. station safe was literally blown to pieces and every drawer broken open but the burglars got "nary red." They then went to Clarksburg and burst open all the drawers in the banking office there but took nothing, although they discovered "14 coppers and 14 cents in postage stamps." They then visited Hartman's drug store, where they secured $1.50 in silver currency. And this was the amount of their "haul." The death occurred at Aylmer on Tuesday, at the advanced age of 78 years, of Thomas Jenkins formerly a well known woollen manufacturer of Vienna, who in 1874 contested the east riding of Elgin in the Conservative interest at the election for the House of Commons.

Three Owen Sound bank clerks undertook to manage a sail boat on the bay one day last week. When the boat capsized they became convinced that they were only amateurs after all. They managed to cling to the boat until assistance arrived, when they were rescued.

The Ayton post-office was entered by burglars on Tuesday night of last week the day after Flesherton post-office burglary—and ten dollars in cash, some papers and a key carried away. The key opened the safe, which contained $300, but the burglars overlooked the fact.

While Nelson Anderson, of Puslinch, was leading one of his horses to water the animal kicked him in the face, the cork of the shoe cutting out one eye, completely destroying the sight, and through the bridge of his nose, mutilating that member fearfully. He is slowly recovering.

Tuesday night the drug and jewelry store of C. McGeorge of Ayer was burglarized. The safe was blown open and watches, rings and other jewelry to the amount of $600 secured by the midnight marauders. There was no money in the safe. No traces whatever of the burglars.

A number of Markdale boys went out camping recently. One of them was putting in a charge in a gun when the hammer slipped, causing the gun to go off, discharging a bullet in the face of another who chanced to come up at that moment. Dr. Sproule's services were called into requisition. The lad will recover.

This is how the Owen Sound Times puts it:—"The editor of the Flesherton Advance announces that he is building a new brick house and office. We extend our congratulations to Bro. Fawcett, on such unprecedented success in running a paper that he is able to advance in that direction." Thanks, Bro. Creighton—we are advancing in all directions—So also is our town.

One day last week a little child of Mr. Thos. Bolen, of the 5th con., S. W., Melancthon, accidently swallowed a pin. Mr. Bolen saw her child put the pin in its mouth and went to get it, when the child began to laugh and the pin became lodged crossways in its throat, and before she could get it out the child gave a choke and swallowed it. No serious results have as yet ensued.—Shelburne Economist.

A fatal accident happened to a man named Wm. John Rogers, at the barn of Wm. Bruce, Peel, a few days ago. He was on a pea mow when a "patent" forkful of peas, after being deposited, rolled towards him, and crowded him off before he realized it or could save himself. In falling he struck the rack and fell from thence to the floor. He was fatally hurt and died soon afterwards. He was only 21 years of age.

Maxwell.

From our own Correspondent.

On Friday evening last, the barn of Mr. Wm. Sproule was discovered to be on fire, and although plenty of help was on hand in a few minutes, nothing could be done to save anything. The whole contents of this years crop beside all his farm implements were consumed. Much sympathy is expressed for Mr. Sproule, as his loss is very heavy and no insurance.

The house of Mr. S. Winters of the Third Line was burned on Sunday evening, caused by the falling of an old stove. The contents were all removed mostly in a safe condition, and, as the house was an old log one the loss is not supposed to be very heavy.

Threshing continues to occupy the attention of the farmers and the yield of grain is reported to be an average yield.

The Dakota man expected here did not arrive until Saturday, and his object was not to lecture but to entice visitors to see that great country, of which, he gave glowing accounts. There are some anxious to go but are not able to afford the expense.

The Scott Act fines in the County of Bruce, during the past two months, amounted to $2,900, which, with costs, would be considerably over $3,000. The Scott Act evidently is not much of a "farce" in Bruce.

A Collingwood tame bear got loose the other day and wandered through the streets of that town in an uncertain fashion, to the terror of children and natives. As the only thing he made away with was a cake of soap, it is not thought he had any serious intentions of offering himself as a sort of walking cemetery for the repose of the remains of Bro. Brady of the Enterprise.

Mr. John O'Mellia, of this town, received a telegram from his brother on Monday morning, announcing the death of his father. The sorrowful event occurred in the town of Collingwood, where deceased and his aged partner have been residing for the past few months. Deceased, who was well up in years, formerly resided in Artemesia.

Several boys in this town have a habit of firing stones at everything animate and inanimate they chance to come across. If they could only be persuaded to practice throwing at certain objects without hurting anybody, it would be alright. But they don't, and there is a likelihood that several of them will be interviewed by Squire Armstrong, in an official capacity, one of these days. Be careful, boys.

Quite an excitement was caused in town on Tuesday when Jerry O'Brien brought in the news that Jones, one of Mr. Mat. Stanley's employees was lying dead in Scone. Word was sent to Mr. Joseph Thompson, undertaker, who immediately hired Mr. J. W. Henry to drive him down, when to his utter astonishment he found the supposed corpse lying dead drunk. It was a good joke, but take care that it is not carried too far.—Chesley Enterprise.

James H. Gilmour, of T. Gilmour & Co., Wholesale Grocers, Brockville, says—I have used Tamarac Elixir for a severe cold and cough, which it immediately cured.

Died.

BRADLEY.—On the 14th Sept. inst., Martha May, second youngest daughter of Mr. Wm. Bradley, Flesherton, aged 9 years, 4 months, 14 days.

Lines Selected by Mrs. Bradley, on the Death of her Daughter Martha May.

All day long, we watched and waited,
Waited at our darling's side,
While her frail bark slowly drifted
Out upon a shoreless tide.
We had wept in bitter anguish,
We had prayed with burning tears,
While our hearts drew back affrighted,
Looking down the lonesome years.
All in vain, our tears and pleading,
All in vain our sorrowing,
We could only watch and listen
For the coming of the King.

O, the terror of the coming
Of the grim and ghastly foe.
O, the darkness of the pathway,
Where our darling's feet must go.
O, the glory of the summer,
Bending so blue and clear,
And the splendor of the roses,
And the birds sing far and near.
Must she leave this world of beauty,
All the joy our love can bring,
And lie down in darksome silence,
At the coming of the King?

Came he solemnly and slowly,
As a Lord would claim his own,
Touched the white hands clasped together
And they grew as cold as stone.
Suddenly the blue eyes opened,
While our hearts grew faint with fear,
In their depths in solemn rapture,
Faith and hope were shining clear.
Did she see the golden portals,
Hear the songs the blessed sing?
"Perfect peace," she softly murmured,
At the coming of the King.

When the days are long and lonely,
Summer days most sweet and fair,
When we gather in the glooming,
Round our darling's vacant chair,
Say we softly to each other,
Fairer scenes than we can know,
Sweeter airs and softer voices,
Made our darling glad to go.
Shines her happy face upon us,
Still a smile is lingering,
So, in patient trust we tarry
For the coming of the King.

The Farmer's Wife.

In the fields and woods so bright,
'Mong the singing birds and the lowing herds,
And the clover blossoms white.
The note of the morning's heavenward lark
Is the music so sweet to me:
As the dewy flowers in the early hours,
The gems I love to see.

Oh, give me the breeze from the waving trees
The murmur of Summer leaves:
And the swallow's song as he skims along,
Or twitters beneath the eaves!
The plowman's shout, as he turneth out
His team, at rise of sun:
Or his merry "good night" by the firefly's light
When his daily work is done.

And give me the root of the luscious fruit
My own hands reared for food:
And the bread so light and the honey white,
And the milk so pure and good.
For sweet the bread of labor is,
When the heart is strong and true,
And blessings will come to the heart and home
If our best we bravely do.

The members of the W. C. T. U. were grieved to see a dancing stand erected on our public streets on the 12th of July last. Alarmed at the tendencies and dangers of the dance we believe it our duty to warn the young men and women who would be tempted to stoop so low and lend their influence to attract others in the same direction, we do hope the same thing will not be seen during fair time or any succeeding gathering. We speak in love for God and Home and Native Land.

The Wonderful Country.

There once was a time when, as old songs prove it,
The earth was not round, but an endless plain;
The sea was as wide as the heavens above it—
Just millions of miles, and begin again.
And that was the time—ay, and more's the pity
It ever should end!—when the world could play,
When the singers told tales of a crystal city
In a wonderful country far away!

But the schools must come with their scales and measures,
To limit the visions and weigh the spells;
They scoffed at the dreamers with rainbow treasures,
And circled the world in their parallels;
They chartered the vales and the sunny meadows,
They sounded the depths and they pierced the shadows
Of that wonderful country far away.

For fancies they gave us their microscopes;
For knowledge a rubble of fact and doubt;
Wing-broken and caged, like a bird from the tropics,
Romance at the wandering stars looked out,
Cold reason, they said, is the earthly Eden;
Go, study its springs, and its ores assay;
But fairer the flowers and fields fort idden
Of that wonderful country far away.

They question the slumbering baby's a ghter,
And cautioned its elders to dream by rule;
All mysteries past and to come hereafter
Were settled and solved in their common school.
But sweeter the streams and the wild bird singing,
The friendships and loves that were true alway;
The gladness unseen, like a far bell ringing,
In that wonderful country far away

Nay, not in their reason our dear illusion,
But truer than truths that are measured and weighed—
O land of the spirit! where no intrusion
From bookmen or doubters shall aye be made!
There still breaks the murmuring sea to greet us
On shadowy valley and peaceful bay;
And souls that were truest still wait to meet us
In that wonderful country far away!

—John Boyle O'Reilly in Scribner's Magazine

SIR HUGH'S LOVES.

"I did not want them. Aunt Griselda would have come, but I would not let them send for her, she would only have troubled me. Erle—Erle Huntingdon—I mean came down, but I did not want to see him; it only made me cry, so he went away, and since then I have been alone.

"Poor child," returned Margaret, softly. Yes, she was not too young to suffer; she and Raby had not done full justice to her. The childish face had lost its baby roundness; the beautiful eyes were dim with weeping; the strained white look of endurance that one sees on older faces was on hers; and, with a sudden impulse that she could not control, Margaret stooped and kissed her. "Oh, I am so sorry for you, what you must have suffered," she said, in a voice that seemed full of tears.

Fay responded to the caress most warmly. "Oh, you are always so kind; one feels you understand without telling. I thought you would be sorry for me. Do you know I did something dreadfully wrong yesterday; they have never let me see him—they have shut me out of my husband's room—but last evening Saville left the door ajar, and I went in."

"You went in; oh, Lady Redmond!" and Margaret shuddered as though the sea breezes chilled her.

a husband not knowing his wife. They had cut off his beautiful hair, and he looked so strange, and his eyes were so bright and large, and then, when I kissed him, he pushed me away. Miss Ferrers"—with a quick remembrance of the housekeeper's words—"you were old friends, at least Hugh said so; do you remember his ever speaking of a little sister who died?"

"Oh yes," returned Margaret, quickly; "little Joyce; he was very fond of her as a boy, she was a lovely little creature."

"Joyce, but her name was Margaret, Mrs. Heron says."

"To be sure, I remember now, Margaret Joyce; it is engraved so on the tombstone, but they never called her Margaret, it was always Joyce."

"How strange," replied Fay, in a puzzled tone; they were standing on a little strip of beach now, and the waves were coming in with a lazy splash and ripple; there was no one in sight, and only a little boat with sails rocking in the distance; how calm and still and peaceful it looked. "Little Joyce," she repeated dreamily, while the soft sea breeze fanned the little tendrills of hair from her temples; "but it was dear Margaret for whom he was asking."

There was a quick gasp strangled before it rose to a sob—for one moment Margaret thought she was in danger of swooning—the sky seemed whirling, the sea was all round her, the sand was nothing but a giddy circle of purple and rose, and blinding yellow; then it passed, there was firm ground under her feet, the mist cleared before her eyes, and Fay was holding her by the arm.

"Were you giddy? how white you looked. Shall we sit down a little? your hand is trembling still."

"It was nothing, I have not been strong lately; yes, we will sit, the air will do us both good. What were you saying, Lady Redmond?" as though the words were not burnt into her memory, "dear Margaret, why, the very angels must have wept to hear him!"

"Whom could he mean," continued Fay, with nervous reiteration. "I don't believe Mrs. Heron was right when she said that he was thinking of his baby sister; he would have called her Joyce. Margaret, there is no one that I know who has that name except yourself; but," looking at her doubtfully, "though you were old friends, it was not likely that he meant you."

A deep flush rose to Margaret's face, a quick petition for help and wisdom to guide her at this critical moment rose from her heart.

"He used to call me Margaret, in the old days," she said, in a very low voice. "That need not surprise you, Lady Redmond, as we were such old friends; his mother called me Margaret too."

"You knew his mother."

"Yes, when I was a child, Sir Hugh and I were playfellows; has he not told you that; ah, well, it is sad when old friends get estranged. Lady Redmond, I see you have a question on your lips, may I ask you not to put it. I think that it would not be acting honorable to your husband if you should hear anything from our lips; he cannot tell you himself now, but it will not hurt you to wait."

"No," replied Fay, slowly, "no, it would not hurt me to wait, as you say, but then you see Hugh may refuse to tell me, as he did before."

"Will you ask him again, and see if he refuse? will you tell him that Margaret Ferrers begs him most earnestly to tell you why Redmond Hall and the Grange are estranged? tell him, that no consideration for us need seal his lips any longer, that he has always been free to speak, that we will willingly take our share of the blame; will you tell him this?"

"Oh yes," returned Fay, in a relieved voice; "and he will be sure to tell me now: no doubt he was afraid of paining you in some way. Hugh is so kind-hearted, he hates to make any one uncomfortable. I will not try and find out any more by myself; I will be good and patient until he gets well."

"As I love Hugh," was the soft response, "dear Miss Ferrers, I must go now; the ponies will be growing restless, and I am a long way from home."

"Yes, I must not keep you. God bless you, Lady Redmond. Will you forgive me if I stop here, for I have been walking from Pierrepoint, and need rest," but Margaret did not add that her strength had forsaken her, and that she dared not move from her place for fear her limbs should refuse to carry her; she would wait a little until strength came back, and she could meet Raby with her usual calmness.

"Yes, you look very tired," was Fay's unconscious answer; "but you will soon get rested with this lovely air." And then she kissed her affectionately, and went up the beach with her old elastic step, and Margaret watched her sadly until she was out of sight.

"She is sweet and good, but he does not love her yet," she said to herself; "but it will come, it must come in time."

Fay drove happily home, and was met at the lodge gates by the good news that Sir Hugh had had an hour or two's refreshing sleep, and that Dr. Conway, as well as Dr. Martin, were quite satisfied with the progress he had made.

"Oh, could it be quite true," Fay asked, when she reached the Hall.

Yes, it was quite true the fever had abated. Sir Hugh's wonderful strength and vitality had triumphed at last, and the doctors soon announced that he was out of danger.

There were still days of weary waiting for Fay before it was pronounced safe for her to enter her husband's sick-room; but at last the day came, and one sweet spring evening, Hugh waking up from a brief doze, felt tears falling on his forehead, and saw Fay leaning over him. He was too weak even to put out his hand, but a faint smile came to his lips. "My Wee Wifie," Fay heard him say, but the next moment the smile had died away into sadness.

CHAPTER XXI.

"LET ME SEE MARGARET."

Be with me, love, when weak and worn,
My life chord vibrates to and fro;
When with the flood-tide's backward flow
My soul stands waiting to be gone.

And let me, with my failing hand,
Hold fast to that I love so well,

Be with me that my closing eyes
In that last hour may seek thy face,
Thine image so can none displace,
But soar with me through yonder skies.
Helen Marion Burnside.

"But they were not out of the wood yet," as Mrs. Heron observed to Ellerton.

When he had reached a certain point Sir Hugh failed to make any further progress. The London physician, Dr. Conway, frankly owned that Sir Hugh's case completely baffled his medical skill and experience.

Just when they had least expected it the fever had abated, and he had begun to amend, and now he as steadily refused to get well.

Day after day he lay in an extremity of weakness that was pitiable to witness; and ever, as time went on, seemed sinking slowly from sheer inanition and exhaustion. After all there must be some strange mischief at work, he said; but Dr. Martin was of a different opinion.

He had seen enough of his patient by this time to be sure that there was sickness of heart as well as of brain, and that it needed some other healing power than theirs before the man could throw off the load of oppression that was retarding his recovery and, gathering up his wasted energies, take up his life again.

But now he seemed very far from recovery.

Day after day he lay with that far-off look on his face that it made Fay weep to see, for she thought that he must surely die.

Hugh thought so too.

Hour by hour he felt himself drifting nearer to the dark valley which, to his tired eyes and heart, seemed only like some still haven of repose. Only to sleep, he said, to sleep—to rest—and with his white lips he murmured, "and may God have mercy on my soul." And ever he longed and prayed that he might see Margaret again.

And one night he dreamt of her.

He dreamt that he was dying—as he surely believed he was—and that Margaret came to his bedside and looked at him. He could see her distinctly; the pale, beautiful face, the folds of her dress, the wave of her dead-brown hair. And when he awoke and saw only the spring sunshine filling the room, and quivering light under his eyelids, and knew that the fresh day was drawing brightly to all but him, he could not suppress the groan that rose to his lips, "Margaret, Margaret."

Fay was sitting by him, but the curtain concealed her; she had been curled up for hours in the big arm-chair that stood at the head of the bed. It was her habit to rise early and go to her husband's room and send the nurse to rest; indeed, Dr. Martin had to use all his authority to induce her to take needful exercise, for Fay begrudged every moment spent out of the sick-room.

She was looking out at the avenue and listening to the soft soughing of the spring breezes in the tree-tops and thinking of the summer days that were to bring her a marvellous gift; but at the sound of Hugh's agonized voice her day dream vanished. "Margaret, Margaret," he had said, and then almost with a sob, "my one and only love, Margaret."

No! she was not asleep, the words were ringing in her ears. Hugh, her Hugh, had spoken them, "My one and only love, Margaret."

He must take back those words, that was her first thought. Oh, no, he could not mean them; it would not be possible to go on living if she thought he meant them; but he was ill, and she must not agitate him, she must speak to him very quietly for fear the fever had returned, and his poor head was confused again.

"You have been dreaming," she said, gently—oh so gently. "What is it you want, my dearest."

And Hugh, folding his wasted hands together as though he were praying, looked up to her with unutterable longing in his eyes, and panted out "Margaret."

"Margaret," she repeated slowly; "what Margaret do you mean, Hugh?"

"Margaret Ferrers," he whispered. "Oh, Fay, dear Fay, if I have wronged you, forgive me. In the old times before I knew you Margaret and I were engaged—she had promised to be my wife, and then she took back her promise. Child, I meant to tell you, I always meant to tell you, but I did not like to grieve you by what was over and gone; but I am dying—God knows I cannot live in this weakness—let me see Margaret once, and bid her good-bye before I go."

Ah, there was no doubt now! slowly but surely the color faded out of the sweet face.

If he had raised that helpless arm of his, and felled her to the ground, she could not have felt so stunned and bruised and giddy as she stood there winding and unwinding the fringe of the quilt between her cold fingers, with that strange filmy look in her eyes.

She understood it now. The arrow so feebly winged had sped to the depths of that innocent heart, and what she would not have believed if an angel had told it her she had heard from her husband's lips.

Margaret was beloved and not she, and Fay must bear it and live.

And the fair child-face grew whiter and whiter, but she only took the nerveless hands in hers and kissed them.

"Do not fret, Hugh, it shall be as you wish," she said in a voice so low that he only just heard her, for a sobbing breath seemed to impede her utterance; "it shall be as you wish, my dear husband," and then, not trusting herself to look at him, she left the room.

In the corridor she met Saville.

"Please find the nurse and send her to Sir Hugh," she said, hurriedly, "and tell Ford I want him to take a note over to Sandycliffe," and then she went into the library and wrote a few words.

"DEAR MISS FERRERS—My husband wishes to see you: will you come to him at once? He thinks that he is very ill, and cannot live, and he wishes to bid you good bye. He has told me the reason, and it is quite right, and I hope you will come, for I cannot bear to see him fret."

And then she remembered that she had not ordered the pony-carriage, and that Ford would be saddling one of the horses; so she rang for Ellerton, and made him understand very carefully that Ford was to drive over to the Grange and take the note, and that he must wait and bring Miss Ferrers back with him. "For you perceive, Ellerton," she said, with servants, "that Sir Hugh feels himself worse, and wants to say good-bye to his old friend", "for of course" thought Fay, when Ellerton had left the library with tears in his eyes, "if Hugh and she were engaged, all the servants must know, and it was better for me to speak out like that."

When Margaret read that poor little note the tears fell fast and blotted the page. "Thank God she knows at last," she said to herself as she folded it up, and then hurriedly prepared to obey the summons.

She hoped that she would not see Lady Redmond before that parting with Hugh were over, for she needed all her strength for that; and to her great relief only Ellerton received her. She was ushered for a few minutes into the empty drawing-room, and then Sir Hugh's nurse came down to her, and said Dr. Martin had just left the house, and her master would see Miss Ferrers now.

And there was no one in the sick-room when she entered it, though the nurse had told her that she would be in the dressing-room within call. There was no one to see the flash of joy in the sick man's eyes, when Margaret's cold lips touched his forehead, or to hear his low "Margaret, darling," that greeted her.

But when she had looked in his face she knew he would not die, and that her work was before her; and while poor weak Hugh panted out words of passionate longing and despair, she was girding up her strength for what she had to say, and praying for help that she might be able to comfort him.

And no one knew what passed between them but their guardian angels; only Hugh's miserable selfish passion sank down abashed as he listened to this brave sweet woman who was not ashamed to tell him how she loved him, and how she would love him to her life's end. And as he saw into the depths of that pure heart, its stainless purity, its unrepining sorrow, he trembled and was silent.

"What am I that I should touch even the hem of her garment?" he said to himself afterwards.

And she told him what he had never guessed, that were he free she would never marry him or any other man, for in her trouble long ago she had vowed herself to heaven; and with a few forcible words she showed him the plan and purpose of her future life—when Raby should have ceased to need her; drawing such calm pictures of a tender ministry and a saintly sisterhood, that Hugh, looking at her with dazzled eyes, thought he could almost discern a faint halo round her head.

"You were always too good for me, Margaret," he muttered, but she only smiled at him, and still holding his hands as she knelt beside him, she whispered that her prayers were heard, and that she knew he would not die, that it was only his weakness, and he would soon struggle back to life again.

"But what good is life to me without you, Margaret?" he asked, in a despairing voice.

"What good? have you forgotten your wife, Hugh?"

"No," he murmured restlessly, "but she is only a child;" but Margaret shook her head.

"You are wrong, she is not a child, nor ever will be again." And then very gently she urged him when he was stronger to tell Fay the whole story of their engagement; for she was afraid those few words that he confessed were all he had said must have made her very unhappy; but Hugh would not allow this. He told Margaret that she did not understand Fay, or how young and innocent she really was; she had not seemed agitated or disturbed when he had asked to see Margaret—she had answered him quite tranquilly; he was sure she would not suffer from the knowledge of their engagement, for he was always kind to her and she loved him; and then he added bitterly that the suffering was his, but when he got well, if he ever did get well, he would go away, for he could not go on living like this.

And when Margaret saw how it was she did not dissuade him; perhaps, after all, it would be better for him to go away for a little, and come back and begin his life anew, doing a man's work in his generation.

"One day you will love your wife," she said to him, "and indeed you cannot fail to love her, and then you will only remember that you have a sister Margaret praying for you every day of her life. No, do not look at me like that, Hugh. Up in heaven it will be no sin to love you—I can keep my love till then." And she then tried to leave him, for, strong as she was, she could not have borne this scene much longer, and Hugh was terribly exhausted.

"Will you kiss me once more, Margaret?" he had asked, faintly, and she had stooped over him again and kissed his forehead and eyes, and then gently bade God bless him.

Was this a woman he had loved or an angel, Hugh wondered, as she closed the door and left him alone in the sun-light; but he was too weak to carry out the thought. When the nurse came to his side he had fallen into a refreshing sleep.

As Margaret crossed the threshold of the dressing-room she caught sight of a listless little figure sitting in one of the deep window-seats of the corridor. There was something in her attitude that struck Margaret—an air of deep dejection, of utter forlornness, that went to her heart. The beautiful little head seemed drooping with weariness; but as she went closer and saw the wan face and the baby mouth quivering, with the under lip pressed like a child's in pain, she gave an involuntary exclamation. She would not suffer, Hugh had said, she was so young and innocent; and now—the angels comfort your broken heart, sweet Fay.

"Hush!" she said, turning round as she heard Margaret's voice; "we must not talk here, it would disturb him, and he must be kept very quiet—oh! very quiet, Dr. Conway says. Come in here, if you wish to speak to me," and she led the way into her little room. "Will you sit down?" she went on, with the same passive gentleness; "you were good to come, but—but—it must have tired you."

"Oh! Lady Redmond—" But here Margaret could say no more. She seemed to have no strength left for this; she felt as though her calmness and fortitude were deserting her.

"I told Dr. Conway that you were coming, and he thought it would do no harm, and Dr. Martin said the same. He knows would be very wise and quiet, that you would not excite him. No, do not tell me anything about it. I—I can trust you, and Hugh would not like me to know."

"Never mind that. Do you know, Miss Ferrers, that Dr. Conway says that my husband is better, that he will not die, it is only weakness and a nervous fancy; but though he is so slow in getting well, they notice a gradual improvement."

"Thank God, for your sake, Lady Redmond." But as she said this a painful flush mounted to Fay's forehead.

"You should say for his sake," she returned, quietly. "What does it matter about me? Perhaps before the summer is over we may be at rest together, baby and I."

Yes, she who had parted dry-eyed from her lover wept bitter tears for the deceived and unhappy wife.

"Why do you cry, Miss Ferrers?" asked Fay, in the same subdued voice. "It seems to me that if God would take us both it would be so much better for us all. Nobody wants us"—and here her lips quivered—"and I should not like my baby to live without me. What could Hugh do with it, you know?"

"My child," replied Margaret, checking her sobs, "is this your faith? is this your woman's courage? Would you who love him so be content to die without winning your husband's heart?"

"It is yours to win," she continued. "Oh! do not look at me like that, as though I have murdered your happiness. What have you done, you poor child, that you should suffer like this for my sake. For the sake of my future piece of mind I entreat you to listen to me."

And then, as Fay did not refuse, Margaret took the listless little hand and told her all. And she judged wisely in doing so, for it was out of her great pity for him that Fay learnt to forgive her husband, and that the vague hope arose in her heart that she might comfort and win him back. And when Margaret had finished her sad story, Fay put her arms round her and kissed her.

"Oh, I am so sorry for you; how unhappy you must have been when you gave him up; but it was noble of you, and you did it for his sake. Forgive me if I wronged you, for when you were in that room talking to him, I felt angry and bitter with him and you too; but I see it is no one's fault, only we are all so unhappy, please forgive me, for indeed you are better than I."

"There is nothing to forgive," replied Margaret, gently. "Yes, I tried to do my duty, and if your husband has failed in his, remember that he is not patient by nature, that men are not like us. One day he will be yours, and yours solely, and then you will be able to think of me without bitterness." Then, taking the little creature in her arms, she added, "Good-bye, be brave and patient and generous for your husband's sake, and it will all come right," and with a low word of blessing she let her go.

And when Hugh woke that evening from his long trance-like sleep he found his Wee Wifie as usual beside him.

She had been sitting there all day, with her tearless eyes fixed on vacancy; refusing to take rest or food, never moving except to droop her head still lower over her clasped hands.

"You are tired, Wee Wifie," he said, as she stooped over him and asked how he felt. "You will wear yourself out, my child;" and he felt for the little hand that generally lay so near his own. Fay put it in his, and bent over him with an unsteady smile.

"I am not so very tired, and I like to take care of you," she said, with a quiver in her sweet voice. "I promised in sickness as well as health, you know; let me do my duty, dear," and Hugh was silent.

But that night, while Hugh slept, and Margaret knelt praying pitiful prayers for Fay, Fay, tossing in her lonely chamber, sobbed in the desolate darkness:

"Oh, if it would please God that when the summer has come baby and I might die together; for if Hugh cannot love me, my sorrow is greater than I could bear."

The Area and Population of Europe.

General Strelbitski, who was selected by the International Statistical Congress, held at the Hague to prepare a report upon the area and number of inhabitants in the different countries of Europe, has completed his labors, the gist of them being that the total area of Europe is 6,233,060 square miles, of which 3,423,185 square miles belong to Russia, 391,000 to Austria-Hungary, 338,000 to Germany, 333,435 to France, 312,810 to Spain, 281,615 to Sweden, 203,375 to Norway, 196,615 to Great Britain and Ireland, 180,310 to Italy, 163,350 to Turkey in Europe and Bosnia, 88,810 to Denmark, 82,125 to Roumania, 55,690 to Portugal, 40,435 to Greece, 30,370 to Servia, 25,875 to Switzerland, 20,625 to Holland, and 18,430 to Belgium. The Russian Empire in Europe alone covers more than half of the whole continent, embracing the Kingdom of Poland, the Grand Duchy of Finland, and part of the Caucasus. Russia also stands far in advance of all the other nations in respect to her population, which is given by General Strelbitski at 93,000,000, the countries which come next being the German Empire (47,200,000), Austria-Hungary (39,900,000), France (38,300,000), Great Britain and Ireland (37,200,000), Italy (30,000,000), Spain (16,900,000), Switzerland (7,900,000), Belgium (5,850,000), Roumania (5,400,000) Turkey in Europe (4,900,000), Sweden (4,700,000), Holland and Portugal (4,400,000 each), Denmark (2,190,000), Servia (2,000,000), and Norway (1,960,000). The density of population is very different, for while Belgium has 201 inhabitants to the square kilometre (five-eighths of a mile), Holland 133, Great Britain and Ireland 119, Italy 105, the German Empire 86, Switzerland 71, and Austria-Hungary 59, Spain has only 35, Turkey 27, Russia 17, Denmark 15 and Norway 6. But the population of Russia is increasing at the rate of 1,250,000 a year, and in half a century it will at this rate exceed 150,000,000.

The Time for Vacations.

The writer once knew in a distant city an interesting old fellow who simply laughed at the idea of summer vacations. He had money in plenty, and could do as he pleased, but one thing he would not do and that was to travel in the heated term. "What! leave my home at this time?" I have heard him say often on sweltering summer days; "Not so long as I remain in possession of my senses." And he never did. But when the cool days of middle September came he would start out on his annual jaunt and return five or six weeks later, looking rosy and round. "All the summer people were gone," was his usual testimony, "and I had the best rooms and service at the hotels. There was no rush, no crowd. Try it next year and see." Of course I was disposed to consider him a crank, but I followed his advice one year and have never taken my vacation in midsummer since. The old man, by the way, was sensible in other things, and wore the whitest of garments and the lightest of hats throughout July and August.—Philadelphia Times.

Fun at Blarney Castle.

Louis P. Beyer tells some amusing experiences connected with his trip to Europe. He was relating several incidents to friends, and among others he said: "One day a jolly old Irishman took me to Blarney Castle. As I looked at the castle I said, 'it must be very old.' 'Yis, sur,' he replied. 'How old is it,' I asked. 'O, very ould, sur.' 'But how old is it?' 'Well, sur, ever since Adam was a little boy.' Coming out of the place I observed a barefooted but pretty colleen, to whom I said: 'You're a very pretty girl. I'd like to marry you.' 'God bless your Irish face,' said she, 'but the blarney-stone has had a bad effect on ye.' The idea of having an Irish face was too good."—Buffalo Courier.

A Tiresome Evening.

Girl—Isn't Mr. De Blank funny?

Youth—I noticed you seemed to think so.

"Why, he has kept us laughing half the evening. Didn't you enjoy his wit?"

"I found it very tiresome!"

"Tiresome? O you don't mean it. I know you have a keen appreciation of humor. Why didn't you enjoy Mr. De Blank's jokes?"

"Well, the fact is, he takes the same funny paper that I do."

A Unique Case.

There is an old mendicant that wanders up and down Main street bearing on his breast a board reading: "I am a poor man which is tottaley blind." If he ever recovers it will be a miracle. There isn't another case like it in the medical books.—Buffalo Courier.

THE LADIES' COLUMN.

The Bustle Must Go.

Finding myself the other day in the company of some charming American women, and noting the almost entire absence of anything like tournure to mar the flowing lines of their most becoming and long trailing gowns, I began to put some faith in the report we are on the eve of another dress revolution. Everything points toward a decided reduction in the volume of skirts; the question will be—is, almost—how to do with the least possible amount of "improvement" whereas hitherto it has been all the other way. Worth has for some months past left very little room in the foundation skirt for any fulness at the back, and in the arrangement of the upper draperies simplicity is and has been the prominent feature. A couple of breadths of lined or merely edged, are pleated to the waist and allowed to fall loosely; or one single wide breadth of woolen has two of its sides arranged in folds, so that a single long point hangs behind; or again, the tunic is a second rather scanty skirt lifted up in one or two places at the sides. The dress-makers who pleat and gather a large quantity of stuff about a lady's figure are not following the best models, and I must warn the reader against imitating too closely the plates in the fashion book.—Paris Cor. London Telegraph.

Sunny Husbands.

We often doubt whether the male head of a family ever really appreciates the opportunity he has for diffusing sunshine at home, or apprehends how much of gloom he can bring into the family circle by entering its precincts with a dark frown on his countenance. The wife and mother is within four walls from morning until night, with but few exceptions, and must bear the worriment of fretful children, inefficient servants, weak nerves and many other perplexities; and she must do this day after day, while the husband goes out from these petty details of home care, has the benefit of the pure, fresh air, meets with friends, has a pleasant time, which altogether acts as a charm on the physical man; and, if he does as he should, he will come home cheerful and thereby lighten the home life for his wife. Some men can be all smiles away from home, but at home they are as cross as bears; and yet we hear it said on every side, "Wives, meet your husbands with a smile."

Late Fashion Notes.

Sashes constantly grow in popularity; nearly all gowns have one loop and two long ends set under the basque.

Bangs are steadily decreasing in favor. Every one whose face can stand the severity of the style combs the hair straight back in a loose, careless Pompadour.

Blue gray, known as old blue; Gobelin blue, a somewhat deeper tint, and a warm pinkish gray will be the fashionable shades in new autumn costumes, always, it is understood, combined with white.

A pretty sample of an autumn costume sent from Paris recently was a cashmere of the new pinkish-gray shade known as "twilight." The shade was of a diagonal plaid, consisting of fine stripes of gray, brown and pink on a white ground. This was gathered and fell loosely over a narrow plaiting of the twilight-colored cashmere. The drapery, drawn high on the hips and the body, was of cashmere, cuffs and [illegible] coat being of the plaid.

The draped and folded waistcoats of contrasting color and different material which have distinguished so many of the summer gowns reappear on the costumes being prepared for the coming season and have every prospect of a long lease of favor.

For house dresses the wide bias, half-girdle fronts will be used in combination costumes. The upper part of the shirred corsage will be of plain silk or wool and the bias part of stripes, beginning in the under-arm seam just below the sleeves, tapering towards the waist and fastened there with a buckle.

Cock's plumes will be much worn on the autumn hats. They are dyed to match all shades of costumes and are made up in erect, stiffly curled bunches, which have a very military effect and in no way resemble the natural, graceful fall of the plumes when not stiffened by artificial means. The breasts of birds—which for some strange reason does not excite the ire of the Audubon Society as much as the whole body of the bird—stiff wings and multitudinous bows of ribbon will trim the coming season's headgear.

Braiding promises to be more than ever popular. The plain skirts, often of white, under Gobelin blue or twilight-gray draperies, are heavily braided with braid to match the color of the overdress. This is repeated on the white waistcoat, cuffs and collar. Dresses of fine gray plaids have blue plastrons of braid which comes in ready-made sets of three pieces for plastron, collar and sleeves, and can be applique very easily and quickly. These ready-made sets of braiding are shown in all colors and very elaborate designs for the autumn.

For carriage boots and for house-w patent leather, with the uppers of soft kid, is much liked. Almost all now have a tip of patent leather, or slippers it grows more and more ton Shoes for the coming season will only very high around the ankle and best be slightly pointed. JOHN WESLEY'S SPECTACLES.

A Pittsburg Printer Has Them, the Great Methodist Having Forgotten Them.

John Walton Fields, a compositor living in Lawrenceville, has at present in his possession a relic that is a very venerable one, being no less than a pair of spectacles worn by John Wesley, the founder of Methodism. They were made a present to Mr. Fields, who is quite a curiosity-seeker, by Walter M. Moorhouse, another compositor, who got them from his father, who was a local Methodist minister in England. The spectacles came into his (Mr. M.'s father's) possession from an old farmer, who was a stanch Methodist, and whose father had handed them down to him, and were secured in the first place by John Wesley, who, during one of his religious pilgrimages through England, had stopped at this farmer's house over night, and in the morning left, forgetting his spectacles. The glasses themselves are very peculiar looking. They are very large-sized, and the frame is of iron, the glasses being set in them very much the same as a light of glass is set in a window at present, only, instead of using putty to hold them in their places, bone or a piece of horn is used. The glass is in a perfect state of preservation, and any one can readily see through them. Connection with them is that Mr. Fields also received at the same time a small photograph, taken from a large painting of "John Wesley at His Mother's Grave." The inscription of the tombstone is so small that it is impossible to read it with the naked eye. The writer placed the antiquated-looking spectacles on and the inscription was easily read. There is no doubt as to the genuineness of the relic, and Mr. Fields places a very high valuation on them, and he would not part with them at any price. —Pittsburgh Commercial Gazette.

The benefit of closing the public houses reland on Sunday is demonstrated by Parliamentary return. Last year there are 1,839 fewer arrests on Sundays than the year previous to the passing of the Act.

Lady Burdett-Coutts opened on the 16th ult. at Baltimore, in West Cork, an industrial fishing school, which is to be accessible to all Irish boys, who will learn there the most approved modes of fishing, as well as carpentering, coopering, boat-building, net, rope and line-making, sail-making and fish-curing.

In the Police Court at Belfast, on the 22nd ult., Rev. Thomas Fullerton, of the Irish Episcopal Church, was committed for trial, charged with forging two cheques, one on the Northern Bank, Belfast, for £370, and one on the Belfast Banking Company for £500. Evidence of the detective who arrested accused in London showed that when taken into custody he had fac similes of signatures of Lord Salisbury, Lord Iddesleigh, the Archbishop of Dublin, Lord Crichton and others.

The Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland, on the 22nd ult., conferred the honor of knighthood on the following gentlemen at the Viceregal Lodge, Dublin: Mr. James Haslett, Mayor of Belfast; Mr. Thomas Lecky, Mayor of Londonderry; Alderman Moyers and Alderman Cochrane, of Dublin; Mr. James Spraight, of Limerick; Mr. Patrick Maxwell, President of the Incorporated Law Society; Mr. Robert Herron, Chairman of the Kingstown Township Commissioners, and Mr. Howard Grubb, the well-known telescope manufacturer.

RETRENCHMENT WAS NECESSARY.

Mrs. Bixby Determined to Make the Household Bills as Light as Possible.

Mrs. Bixby became convinced the other day that retrenchment was absolutely necessary in her household expenses.

"Business is dull," she said, "and I must make our bills as light as possible. Poor husband is quite worried over our affairs. Now, how can I save $5 or $10 and show Mr. Bixby that women can be economical if necessary? I know," she said suddenly, in the joyful tone of one who has had a happy thought. "I will do without the hat I intended getting to wear with my new gray suit. I can wear my black imported straw with it very well, and I will, too. I just must learn to economize."

Then she put on her hat and went down town, so elated over her "clear saving of five whole dollars" that she intended walking home with Mr. Bixby at noon and telling him all about it.

"I wonder now," she said, as she stopped before the windows of a glove store, "I wonder if I couldn't afford a new pair of those tan kid gloves with stitching on the back. I really need them, and I've saved $5 by going without my hat, so—yes I'll get them; they'll cost only $2."

"This ribbon is really very cheap," she was saying to herself, "and I need a lot of ribbon awfully. I wonder if I could afford it to-day. Let me see, I—oh, of course I can, after saving $5 on that hat."

"Just what I need," she said, "but I've been doing without because I wanted to economize; but I'm sure Charles couldn't say anything if I bought a little when I've saved five whole dollars."

So she bought "a little" for $1.75. Then she got "the greatest kind of a bargain" in remnants of French gingham for $1.50.

"I never would have bought it," she said to herself, "but it was so cheap, and then I'd saved five dollars this morning."

Before reaching her husband's office with the cheering news of her economy she had bought four yards of lace, three of insertion, a pound of candy, two collars and a pair of cuffs, a pair of slippers, two pairs of hose, handkerchiefs, three yards of lawn, a fan, a bunch of roses, another pair of gloves, and six linen handkerchiefs and two neckties for Mr. Bixby.

Then she repaired to Bixby's office with the tale of her economy, and ended by saying:

"And here's a few little things I thought I could afford after saving so much by going without my hat."

Bixby asked a few questions, made a rapid calculation, and said in an utterly heartless tone:

"See here, Sally, don't you economize any more. You'll break me sure if you do. You've got $16.98 worth of things already out of that $5, and ——"

How Mr. and Mrs. Cornelius Vanderbilt Entertained.

At the great Vanderbilt reception at Newport Tuesday evening the masterpiece of table ornament was a large owl on a perch, the bird being composed of 700 pieces of sugar and almonds, the eyes alone containing sixty pieces. A chain of confections in imitation of silver held the bird of wisdom to his candied perch. The other decorations included baskets of Parisian glace fruit, with apparently natural leaves, large beehives, upon which the sugar bees clung, and a gilded lyre, on which rested an angel. One of the most effective pieces was a large representation of fishermen hauling their nets, in the meshes of which were salmon. The grounds were illuminated. The Casino orchestra furnished music, and during the supper was located in the billiard-room, hidden by banks of flowers. Leading cottagers, prominent belles, members of the diplomatic corps, and, in fact, everybody in society was present. It is said that $10,000 will scarcely pay the cost of to-night's festivities at the Breakers. Among the decorations were sedan chairs and these, with the Russian sleigh heavy enough for a good pair of trotters, were the subject of much curiosity. It is the finest Russian sleigh in this country or England, and cost exclusive of duties about $1,000.—Boston Herald.

Becoming Orthodox.

Prof. Huxley is getting quite a reputation for orthodoxy. The Christian Advocate says of him: "Prof. Huxley's latest scientific deliverances, notwithstanding occasional supercilious flings at his theological opponents, are of such manifestly veracious and honest character, and withal so serviceable to revealed truth, that we cannot but hope and pray that he may be long spared to continue his illustrious labors. Whatever else may suffer from his writings, the religion of Christ is sure to be the gainer."

Ben Butler's Theory.

"As a depleter of the human race," said Gen. Butler at the banquet, "war makes emphatically real the survival of the fittest." Does this mean that flying bullets pick out the unfit men and spare the good, or that the men who stay at home and don't get killed are better than those who go to the front?"—Boston Globe.

He has been compelled since to close the park to the public.

ATE TILL HE BURST.

Remarkable Death of a Texas Sheep-Herder.

[San Antonio (Tex.) Corr. Globe-Democrat.]

Richard Gerfers, a ranchman in the northwestern part of the county, comes to town with the story of a very strange death which recently happened in his neighborhood. Joseph and Freiderich Blanck, were two young men living near him engaged in raising wool. For some time the latter had been ailing with a disease which baffled the physicians and rapidly sapped his strength. Its most marked symptoms were extreme emaciation and a marvellous appetite. It was not tapeworm, that was certain, but further than this the doctors could not go. "He could eat," said Mr. Gerfers, "a half bushel of food and still be hungry." He finally grew so weak that he did but little work, putting in the time sitting about the ranch and cooking for himself. He became a by-word for miles around, and many neighbors come to see the living skeleton get outside of anything within reach that was edible. On the day of his death he volunteered to take out a small flock of sheep and herd them until sundown. His brother agreed, and in the morning Frederic left the house with some 300 sheep in charge, and swinging on his arm was a gallon tin bucket filled with the ordinary Mexican frijoles, or beans. His brother visited him about noon and found him all right, sitting in the shade watching the flock graze. Late in the evening Jacob became uneasy at Friederich's absence and began a search for him. He found the sheep scattered by twos and threes, and further on, lying directly in the path, was Friederich's dead body. He had evidently been walking and fallen dead as he stepped, for his feet rested in the tracks they had made. His lean face was in a mass of half-digested beans, partially glued together and thoroughly soaked in a torrent of blood, which had welled from his throat. He was not cold when found. A jury of inquest was summoned. They rendered a verdict to the effect that the man died from a gorge of half-cooked beans, which had swelled and ruptured the stomach. It is supposed that young Blanck had been too impatient to wait until his meal was thoroughly cooked, had filled himself with the semi-raw vegetables and then drank a quantity of water. He was sitting near a pool when his brother last saw him alive.

He Can't Get Over It.

John Stillman, who was conductor of the fatal train at Chatsworth, went into the wreck weighing 194 pounds. He now weighs 151 pounds, a loss of forty-three pounds in twenty days. He is unable to eat heartily, and has not known a night of restful slumber since the accident. When he does sleep his slumbers are broken by visions of the wreck, and in imagination he hears the terrible cries of the wounded and dying till he wakes, more worn and restless than before. He is now taking an unlimited vacation at the expense of the road.

But ladies who read of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription, read it again, for they discover in it something to prize—a messenger of joy to those suffering from functional derangements or any of the painful disorders or weaknesses peculiar to their sex. Periodical pains, internal inflammation and ulceration, readily yield to its wonderful curative and healing powers. It is the only medicine for women, sold by druggists, under a positive guarantee from the manufacturers, that it will give satisfaction in every case, or money will be refunded. This guarantee has been printed on the bottle-wrapper, and faithfully carried out for many years.

Besides the way he hawks and spits is disgusting." "Don't break the engagement for that; tell him to take Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy. It will cure him completely." "Well, I'll tell him. I do hate to break it off, for in all other respects he's quite too charming." Of course it cured his catarrh.

Remarkable Surgery.

The science of surgery has made such wonderful progress in modern times that the most intricate and delicate operations are now undertaken and carried to a successful issue. There are now several well authenticated cases of what is known as pneumotomy, that is to say, the removal of diseased portions of the lungs in cases of consumption. While, however, this delicate operation has sometimes been successfully performed, the risks attending it are so great, and the chances of recovery so slight, that it is seldom resorted to. The safest plan in consumptive cases is to use Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. This will always cure the disease in its earlier stages, thoroughly arresting the ravages of the terrible malady, by removing its cause and healing the lungs.

is offered by the manufacturers of Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy, for a case of Chronic Nasal Catarrh which they cannot cure.

SYMPTOMS OF CATARRH.—Dull, heavy headache, obstruction of the nasal passages, discharges falling from the head into the throat, sometimes profuse, watery, and acrid, at others, thick, tenacious, mucous, purulent, bloody and putrid; the eyes are weak, watery, and inflamed; there is ringing in the ears, deafness, hacking or coughing to clear the throat, expectoration of offensive matter, together with scabs from ulcers; the voice is changed and has a nasal twang; the breath is offensive; smell and taste are impaired; there is a sensation of dizziness, with mental depression, a hacking cough and general debility. Only a few of the above-named symptoms are likely to be present in any one case. Thousands of cases annually, without manifesting half of the above symptoms, result in consumption, and end in the grave. No disease is so common, more deceptive and [illegible] or less understood by physicians.

By its mild, soothing, and healing properties, Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy cures the worst cases of Catarrh, "cold in the head," Coryza, and Catarrhal Headache. Sold by druggists everywhere; 50 cents.

"Untold Agony from Catarrh."

Prof. W. HAUSNER, the famous mesmerist, of Ithaca, N. Y., writes: "Some ten years ago I suffered untold agony from chronic nasal catarrh. My family physician gave me up as incurable, and said I must die. My case was such a bad one, that every day, towards sunset, my voice would become so hoarse I could barely speak above a whisper. In the morning my coughing and clearing of my throat would almost strangle me. By the use of Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy, in three months, I was a well man, and the cure has been permanent."

"Constantly Hawking and Spitting."

THOMAS J. RUSHING, Esq., 892 Pine Street, St. Louis, Mo., writes: "I was a great sufferer from catarrh for three years. At times I could hardly breathe, and was constantly hawking and spitting, and for the last eight months could not breathe through the nostrils. I thought nothing could be done for me. Luckily, I was advised to try Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy, and I am now a well man. I believe it to be the only sure remedy for catarrh now manufactured, and one has only to give it a fair trial to experience astounding results and a permanent cure."

Three Bottles Cure Catarrh.

ELI ROBBINS, Runyan P. O., Columbia Co., Pa., says: "My daughter had catarrh when she was five years old, very badly. She is now eighteen years old and sound and hearty."

EDITORIAL NOTES.

The Durham Chronicle says that THE ADVANCE says that the Hanover Post says what is not true in reference to "whiskey papers." For once the Chronicle tells the truth.

At this season of the year it might not be out of place to advise juvenile sportsmen to adopt precautionary methods in order that they may shoot game instead of shooting themselves. "A word in sayson, Misther Hayes, sor-r-r!"

There are some envious mortals in this world, who cannot bear to see anybody get along well except themselves. In grasping for the whole earth, it maddens them to find that somebody else has been getting a few stray chunks as well as themselves. Such, at least, is the opinion of THE ADVANCE.

The time has arrived when a determined effort should be made to carry out the long contemplated Station Road improvements. A good straight level road to the C.P.R. depot will do more towards developing the grand resources of the town and entire community generally than many people think. By and by the suburb and the town might become united. Stranger things have happened, you know.

Police Magistrate Gray's letter to the Dufferin Advertiser last week—and which we give in full elsewhere in these columns—contains a flat denial to the Dufferin Post's report of a speech alleged to have been made by him (Mr. Gray) in which the Scott Act was said to have been characterized as a farce and high license as the only remedy for the liquor business. However, the letter speaks for itself: read it.

According to the Grey Review, a Durham merchant threatens to smash every other business man in the town into fragments, (commercially speaking) should the roller mill bonus by-law be carried. The Review says many business men in that town stand a chance of getting smashed if the bonus is defeated. So that, in either case, it would appear that the ancient village, yclept Durham, is in a fair way for a big "bust-up!"

The "poet," to whom we addressed a few words of seasonable advice a couple of weeks ago, called at THE ADVANCE office on Saturday last, and was quite indignant at our reception of his doggerel. If it is any comfort to his lacerated feelings, we may tell him that the Editor of this paper, when very young, wrote doggerel in a somewhat similar strain. Thank Heaven, however, it was never published. Our young friend will be equally gratified when he thinks it over calmly and dispassionately.

A story is going the rounds that a certain man—living not fifty miles from Flesherton—recently handed a copy of THE ADVANCE to his solicitor, and, pointing to an article referring to himself, said: "If there is ground for a libel suit in that piece, I want you to take action at law against the Editor and Proprietor of that paper at once and shove it as far as it will go!" No lawyer in Christendom—of any standing—would risk his reputation in the matter, as the article contained nothing libellous.

THE ADVANCE rises to remark that the Toronto World is the model daily paper of Canada, and no live, wide-awake publisher, business man, farmer, professional man, or mechanic would be without its cheery company one hour, if they only new what an energetic gatherer of short, snappy, bright, vigorous, racy, pointed and reliable news items it is. And what paper on the continent contains such witty, pungent and brilliant editorials? None, Brutus, none. And it only costs $3 to get it every day in the year, Sundays excepted. THE ADVANCE wouldn't be without it if it cost $12 a year instead of the paltry $3.

The Owen Sound Advertiser—in an editorial last week addressed "To Young Conservatives"—advises the said "Young Conservatives" to "cut themselves loose from the old party moorings and move along with the broad progressive current of the times." Which, being interpreteth, means, that they should sacrifice their political convictions on the altar of the Reform party, and meekly follow the leading strings of the Globe, Advertiser, and other elegant moulders of public opinion! Splendid idea—great head—long ears!!! Following the same line of argument, how would it suit the profound illogical commentator of the Advertiser if the "Young Liberals" "cut themselves loose from the old party moorings," &c., &c.?

The Hanover Post is as innocent of guile as a spring chicken—at least it would like its readers to regard it in that light. But, although young politically, the Post is piloted occasionally by a cunning old bird, who is not unacquainted with the labryinths of party politics. As THE ADVANCE has proved somewhat of a stumbling-block in the brief political career of the Post, we find the services of the "pilot" frequently called into requisition. Last week he came on deck in quite a flippant and gay mood, and reminded "Bro. Fawcett" that he had supported Sir John McDonald, knowing that the latter voted for the repeal of the Scott Act. We were not aware of the fact, if fact it be; but we do know that the "cunning old bird" himself did all in his power to destroy the usefulness of that self-same Scott Act. Eh, "Bro." Ashley?

The explosion in front of Mr. R. Trimble's store here was made the subject of lengthy but interesting communications, by the Flesherton correspondent of the Markdale Standard and Dundalk Herald, last week. In view of the circumstances, we still maintain it was a cruel and senseless trick, whereby the life of a most estimable Christian lady was endangered. Possibly those concerned in it did not intend creating anthing more than a scare, but that does not render the offence any the less reprehensible. Not knowing whether they really were burglars or not, Tommy Hollinger would have been perfectly justified in shooting at the "practical jokers," on the plea of defending the property and perchance the life of his master. If somebody had been shot, what then? There is a note of warning in this, however, which intending jokers (?) will do well to heed.

Underlying the "great" question of Commercial Union with the United States, there are a multitude of disagreeable little problems, which disciples of Erastus Wiman in this County will do well to ferret out and ponder over deeply. For instance, here is one clipped from the columns of that well informed Canadian Journal, The Week:—

"The reins of Protection would seem to have passed from the hands of the manufacturers in the States into the hands of Labour. Six English weavers, landed at New York en route for a manufacturing establishment at Bridgeport, Connecticut, for whose service they had been imported, were ordered back to England on the ground that they had come over in violation of the Contract Labour Law. What would American labour say to the throwing open of the American labour market to Canadian workmen under Commercial Union (for we suppose labour is to be exchanged as well as commodities)? Or would it consent to repeal the Contract Labour Law at the request of the manufacturers? This incident does not look like it."

The Last Question on Examination Day.

We were ranged on the floor in front of the visitors on examination day to be looked at, and answer such questions as they or the teachers saw fit to ask.

"Where was John Rogers burnt to death?" said the teacher to me in a commanding voice.

I couldn't tell.

"The next."

"Well," says the teacher, "if Joshua knows he may tell."

"In the fire!" said Joshua, looking very solemn and wise.

This was the last question. We had liberty to make all the noise we pleased for five minutes, and then go home.

Day and Night

During an acute attack of Bronchitis, a ceaseless tickling in the throat, and an exhausting, dry, hacking cough, afflict the sufferer. Sleep is banished, and great prostration follows. This disease is also attended with Hoarseness, and sometimes Loss of Voice. It is liable to become chronic, involve the lungs, and terminate fatally. Ayer's Cherry Pectoral affords speedy relief and cure in cases of Bronchitis. It controls the disposition to cough, and induces refreshing sleep.

I have been a practicing physician for twenty-four years, and, for the past twelve, have suffered from annual attacks of Bronchitis. After exhausting all the usual remedies

Ayer's Cherry Pectoral is decidedly the best remedy, within my knowledge, for chronic Bronchitis, and all lung diseases.—M. A. Rust, M. D., South Paris, Me.

I was attacked, last winter, with a severe Cold, which, from exposure, grew worse and finally settled on my Lungs. By night sweats I was reduced almost to a skeleton. My Cough was incessant, and I frequently spit blood. My physician told me to give up business, or I would not live a month. After taking various remedies without relief, I was finally

For years I was in a decline. I had weak lungs, and suffered from Bronchitis and Catarrh. Ayer's Cherry Pectoral restored me to health, and I have been for a long time comparatively vigorous. In case of a sudden cold I always resort to the Pectoral, and find speedy relief.—Edward E. Curtis, Rutland, Vt.

Two years ago I suffered from a severe Bronchitis. The physician attending me became fearful that the disease would terminate in Pneumonia. After trying various medicines, without benefit, he finally prescribed Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, which relieved me at once. I continued to take this medicine a short time, and was cured.—Ernest Colton, Logansport, Ind.

Mr. Milne, son of Mr. Wm. Milne, Tp. Clerk of Osprey, occupied the pulpit in Thornbury and Heathcote very acceptably during the past few months. The Thornbury News thus speaks of him: "We will expect in a few years to come that in him we will witness one of the brightest stars in the Presbyterian church in Canada."

Endeavoring to Impeach a Witness.

An eminent lawyer in this city, just deceased, once received a severe reprimand from a witness on the stand whom he was trying to browbeat. It was an important issue, and in order to save his cause from defeat, it was necessary that Mr.—— should impeach the witness. He endeavored to do it on the ground of age. The following dialog ensued:

Lawyer—"How old are you?"

Witness—"Seventy-two years."

Lawyer—"Your memory, of course is not so brilliant and vivid as it was twenty years ago, is it?"

Witness—"I do not know but it is."

Lawyer—State some circumstance which occurred, say twelve years ago, and we shall be able to see how well you can remember."

Witness—"I appeal to your honor if I am to be interrogated in this manner; it is insolent."

Judge—"You had better answer the question."

Lawyer—"Yes, sir; state it."

Witness—"Well sir, if you compel me to do it I will. About twelve years ago you studied in Judge B——'s office, did you not?"

Lawyer—"Yes."

Witness—"Well, sir, I remember your father coming into my office and saying to me: 'Mr. D——, my son is to be examined to-morrow and I wish you would lend me $15 to buy him a suit of clothes. I remember, also, sir, that from that day to this he has never paid me that sum. That, sir I remember as though it were but yesterday."

Lawyer (Considerably abashed)—"That will do, sir."

Witness—"I presume it will."

Three Collingwood boys caught 185 perch in less than two hours at the breakwater on Tuesday morning of last week. The catch weighed 45 lbs.

Our Sparkling Champagne.

The well known lawyer and lecturer W. Pittmann, who has recently returned from a lecturing tour in Great Britain, heard this story related by one of the temperance orators with a view of making wine drinking unpopular:

"An American traveler in the streets of Paris, seeing the words, "Wine baths given here," exclaimed:

"Well, these French are a luxurious people!"

Then, with true Yankee curiosity and the feeling that he could afford whatever any one else did, he walked in and demanded a "wine bath."

Feeling wonderfully refreshed after it and having to pay but five francs, he asked in some astonishment how a wine bath could be afforded so cheaply. His sable attendant, who had been a slave in Virginia and enjoyed a slight bit of humor, replied:

"Oh, massa, we just pass it along into anudder room, where we gib bath at four francs."

"Then you throw it away, I suppose."

"No, massa; den we send it lower down and charge three francs a bath. Dar's plenty of people who ain't so berry particular who will bathe in it after this at three francs ahead. Den, massa, we let de common people hab it at a franc apiece."

"Then, of course, you throw it away!" exclaimed the traveler, who thought this was going even beyond Yankee profit.

"No, indeed, massa," was the indignant reply, accompanied by a profound bow; "no, indeed, massa, we are not so 'stravagant as dat comes too; we bottle it up den and sends it to 'Merica for champagne!"

Sore Eyes

The eyes are always in sympathy with the body, and afford an excellent index of its condition. When the eyes become weak, and the lids inflamed and sore, it is an evidence that the system has become disordered by scrofula, for which Ayer's Sarsaparilla is the best known remedy.

Scrofula, which produced a painful inflammation in my eyes, caused me much suffering for a number of years. By the advice of a physician I commenced taking Ayer's Sarsaparilla. After using this medicine a short time I was completely

Cured

My eyes are now in a splendid condition, and I am as well and strong as ever.—Mrs. William Gage, Concord, N. H.

For a number of years I was troubled with a humor in my eyes, and was unable to obtain any relief until I commenced using Ayer's Sarsaparilla. This medicine has effected a complete cure, and I believe it to be the best of blood purifiers.—C. E. Upton, Nashua, N. H.

From childhood, and until within a few months, I have been afflicted with Weak and Sore Eyes. I have used for these complaints, with beneficial results, Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and consider it a great blood purifier.—Mrs. C. Phillips, Glover, Vt.

I suffered for a year with inflammation in my left eye. Three ulcers formed on the ball, depriving me of sight, and causing great pain. After trying many other remedies, to no purpose, I was finally induced to use Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and, three bottles of this medicine, have been entirely cured. My sight has been restored, and there is no sign of inflammation, sore, or ulcer in my eye.—Kendal T. Bowen, Sugar Tree Ridge, Ohio.

My daughter, ten years old, was afflicted with Scrofulous Sore Eyes. During the last two years she never saw light of any kind. Physicians of the highest standing exerted their skill, but with no permanent success. On the recommendation of a friend I purchased a bottle of Ayer's Sarsaparilla, which my daughter commenced taking. Before she had used the third bottle her sight was restored, and she can now look steadily at a brilliant light without pain. Her cure is complete.—W. E. Sutherland, Evangelist, Shelby City, Ky.

WOULD NOT LEAVE THE MORMONS.

A Mother Refuses Her Daughter's Appeal and Goes to Utah.

A despatch from New York says: Rev. Thomas D. Drum, a chaplain at Castle Garden, received a telegram Tuesday from the Rev. T. J. Danner, of New Brighton, Pa., asking him to watch for the arrival of Mrs. Barnes, a steerage passenger on the steamer Wisconsin, from Liverpool. The telegram further stated that Mrs. Barnes was in the hands of the Mormons, and that her daughter was anxious to prevent her going to Utah. When the passengers of the Wisconsin arrived, it was found that of the 800 more than half were Mormons, bound for Utah in charge of President John Isaac Hart, of Ogden, the Mormon missionary. Mrs. Barnes was found among them, and escorted to the Immigrant Post Chaplaincy. It was then learned that the woman was accompanied by her second husband and two stepdaughters.

She is a comely and elderly English woman, apparently several years younger than her husband. He embraced the Mormon faith twelve years ago, and succeeded in converting Mrs. Barnes about two years ago. Barnes is a shoemaker and both were residents of Manchester. On seeing the telegram from her daughter, Mrs. Barnes said: "I have not been kidnapped, and am going to Salt Lake City of my own free will. My husband and two daughters go with me. I guess I am 21. I love my daughter with a mother's devotion, but in this I must be actuated not by worldly motives, but a desire to save my soul. I love the Mormon religion and sincerely believe in it. I would like to see my daughter, but my duty to my husband and to my religious vows compels me very reluctantly to decline the invitation to go to Pennsylvania." Under the exhortations of Dr. Kramer, her determination forsook her, and large tears trickled down her cheeks. "Yes," she suddenly exclaimed, "I am almost inclined to go to see my daughter." The husband hurriedly whispered something to her which at once restored her stoicism and she reiterated her determination to go to Salt Lake. Barnes appeared to be very much attached to the woman, and when asked why he did not wish her to go to see her daughter, he said he knew that if she ever got there she would be persuaded to abandon the Mormon faith. A short time previous to the departure of the Mormon party, Dr. Kramer made another attempt to dissuade Mrs. Barnes, but it was equally unsuccessful. The clergyman says that he knows nothing of the case beyond what was stated in the telegram and what the woman told him.

The whole party of Mormons, which is the largest that has arrived here in some time, left for Utah yesterday afternoon over the Erie. Many of them have friends already settled there. During the voyage one of the party gave birth to a boy. He was immediately christened Edward Wisconsin. President Hart, who conducts this party, has brought over three others nearly of the same size. During the past eighteen months he has baptized 250 in the Mormon faith in England.

FORTIFYING HALIFAX.

The City's Defences to be Strengthened—More Troops to be Quartered There—A Coaling Station Provided.

A Halifax, N. S., despatch says: It is learned that the British Government is prepared to further strengthen the defences of Halifax harbor. A new fortification is being erected at the extreme point of McNab's Island, on which will be stationed two 10-inch breech-loading guns, weighing 64 tons each. These guns will have an explosive power of 200 pounds of powder, and will carry 800-pound shot a distance of six miles. York Redoubt has hitherto been regarded as the chief outer defence of the harbor, but it was discovered at the time of the sham naval engagement, during Jubilee week, that it was possible for a war vessel to get safely past this defence. The new fort on McNab's Island is being erected to meet such a contingency. It is said Halifax is also to be made a great coaling station and the headquarters for the British American squadron as soon as the dry dock here is completed. The Bermuda dockyard staff will be removed to Halifax, and three batteries of artillery will also come. Beside this, the Scottish regiment at present quartered in Jamaica will arrive here in November to remain. It is estimated that the squadron and additional troops to be located here will involve an expenditure in this city of not less than half a million dollars a year.

A special despatch from North Sydney, N.S., says: A fit and happy ending to a romantic courtship occurred Friday afternoon in the marriage of Miss Isabel Ferguson, of England, late nurse in the London Hospital, to Duncan McDonald, of Little Bras d'Or. McDonald, it will be remembered, was one of the Nile voyageurs, and one of the bravest, being the only one who remained and nursed the late Col. Kennedy when down with the most violent type of smallpox in London. Taken with the disease himself, Miss Ferguson was the nurse who attended him through his illness. An attachment was there formed and an engagement followed, and which was happily not affected by the great distance between them after McDonald's arrival home. They had intended to be married in Halifax, but Miss Ferguson arrived this morning from London, and the happy couple were quietly united in marriage this afternoon at the manse, Sydney mine. They will reside at Little Bras d'Or. Thus has true affection found a fitting sequel in this somewhat romantic attachment.

Married After a Telegraphic Courtship.

A Chattanooga, Tenn., despatch says: A very romantic marriage has just taken place at Starke's Station, Ga. H. S. Harris, a telegraph operator at Dalton, and Miss Ella Phillips, an operator at Sugar Valley, courted over the wires and met by agreement at Starke's Station, where they were married under a big hickory tree. They went from there to Dalton and then departed for their respective posts of duty.

New York boatmen made heaps of money last Sunday by rowing people around the Thistle as she lay at anchor off Tompkinville, Staten Island, at 75 cents a person.

The pay of circus clowns ranges from $20 to $50 a week.

THE CANADIAN NORTHWEST.

A Battleford special says Dr. Miller was found dead in his room yesterday with his brains blown out. Deceased was a medical officer of the Northwest Mounted Police.

Dr. King, Supreme Prelate of the Knights of Pythias, is expected here from Port Arthur to-morrow. He will deliver a lecture and be given a reception by the Winnipeg Knights.

Only seventeen days remain in which action can be taken towards unseating Mr. Scarth, member for Winnipeg. It is thought that the petition will be dropped.

J. R. Benson shipped his great natural curiosity, a two-legged colt, to the Toronto Exhibition last evening.

While the Hon. Thomas White, Minister of the Interior, was in Battleford, he received numerous petitions and complaints from settlers setting forth their grievances. One petition set forth that the greatest dissatisfaction prevails in consequence of the deductions made from legitimate claims for losses during the Riel rebellion by the commissioners appointed to investigate them, and that settlers were desirous of having the whole question reopened for a more impartial investigation, which they believed would result in justice being done. The residents of Bressaylor settlement, near Battleford, who have on the report of the commissioners been refused compensation for losses sustained, on account of alleged disloyalty, also appealed to Mr. White to have their case reconsidered, and demand a fair trial.

A young man named William McDougall, employed at Charles Ward's hotel at Rat Portage, was shot through the right lung last night, and his recovery is doubtful. A man named Duff, lately down from the woods, has been arrested on suspicion of the crime. Robbery is supposed to have been the motive.

The wheat harvest is practically completed, but considerable oats are still uncut. The threshing yields are even more favorable than was hoped for. The price paid for wheat runs from 57c. for No. 1 hard at Winnipeg to 45c. for No. 2 Northwestern at outlying points.

Mr. J. H. Brock, in a letter on C. P. R. rates, points out that they are still 20 per cent. higher than the St. Paul & Manitoba road, and 200 per cent. higher than where close competition exists.

The hearing of the Browning injunction was resumed this morning before Chief Justice Wallbridge. The whole day was consumed by Messrs. Aikins and Ewart, Q. C.'s, in argument for the plaintiff. Mr. Aikins said the case might show an apparent conflict between the two Governments of the Dominion and the Province. He read Browning's patriotic sentiments as to the course he had taken to stop the road, and contended that plaintiff had a substantial interest in the land which was being injured, and he had a perfect right to come to the Court to have the defendants restrained from interfering with his rights. He referred to the disallowance of several Acts by the Dominion Government. A proclamation, dated 22nd July, proclaimed that the R. R. V. Road should be a public work of the Province of Manitoba under the Public Works Act. He contended that the Public Works Act did not authorise the construction of the railway, and that the fact that an amendment to that Act was passed showed that the Government must have been of the same opinion. The defendants had placed a man in charge of parts of the lots taken, to hold possession by force if necessary, and that, he contended, showed that defendants must feel themselves in the wrong. Concluding, Mr. Aikins said: "The Ministers are the delegates of the Legislative Assembly, but they are amenable when they authorise a wrong to be done to a subject of the Crown. Here the railway was directly negatived by the Crown as represented by the Dominion Government, which disallowed the Act, notwithstanding which some of the defendants, acting as Ministers of the Crown, had proceeded with the road. They are amenable when they exceed their authority, as they have done here. Mr. Ewart will continue his argument to-morrow.

It is pretty well understood that no further construction of the Hudson Bay Railway will be done this fall.

Eighty immigrants arrived to-day. The majority of them were from England and the remainder Icelanders.

The following further particulars are learned of the terrible self destruction of Dr. Miller, of the Northwest Mounted Police, who committed suicide last night by blowing his brains out. He had been about his duties all day as usual, and had treated a serious case, after which he returned to his quarters. During the absence of his servant he undressed himself and put cotton around the room to prevent blood from spattering the walls. He then lay down on the bed, and with his toe pulled the trigger of a Snider rifle. The charge completely blew off his head from the chin up. The deceased was unmistakably insane. He left no word or letter explaining his action. Coroner Laurie has been sent for, and it is not known whether an inquest will be held or not.

The Result of a Wish.

A Kansas City (Mo.) despatch says About 5 o'clock last evening a heavily-laden lumber waggon caught in a deep rut about two miles beyond Main street, on Indiana avenue. The brutal driver began whipping up his horses, giving the animals a fearful beating. People in the neighborhood congregated about the place and remonstrated with the driver. He paid no attention, but went on whipping his horses. Among the spectators was a young lady whose name could not be ascertained. She threatened the man with arrest and ended her stinging remarks with the words:

The lady had no sooner uttered these words when the waggon upset and the driver was taken from under the lumber seriously and possibly fatally injured. He sustained a fracture of the shoulder blade and severe internal injuries. The man's name is Harding and he is now being cared for at his home in the city.

The Mud Lake drainage scheme, by which hundreds of acres will be reclaimed in Ernesttown and Sydenham, is being strongly pushed. A survey will be made this fall.

THE GREAT JUBILEE IN ROME.

St. Peter's to Have an Organ at Last—Beautiful Gifts to the Pope.

A Rome despatch says: The projected Papal Jubilee has in the last few days become the all-engrossing question of the hour. Pilgrims from all over the world will begin arriving in the City on the Seven Hills about the middle of October. Already Peter's pence in large sums has been received from many quarters.

It is said in many quarters usually well informed that on the occasion of the fiftieth anniversary of his entrance into the priesthood the Pope will once for all cast off the last shred of the Pio Nono policy, drive through the streets of Rome and give up the somewhat undignified attitude of apostolic prisoner. This assumption is based wholly on surmise, yet in view of the very progressive and enlightened policy pursued by the Pope since his succession it appears to me neither unlikely nor improbable. Certainly a formal acquiescence in the actual state of things would never be more acceptable than now to the Quirinal, and King Humbert would be the first to show his reverence and veneration for a Pope unhampered by temporal possessions.

Among the many rich and rare presents which the Holy Father will receive I mention only a few. Two magnificent Sevres vases from Marshal and Mme. MacMahon. The Society Bibliographique of Paris sends a magnificent tome, containing the pater noster printed with illuminated text in 150 languages. The Archdiocese of Rheims will send a reduced copy of the colossal statue in bronze of Urban II., recently unveiled at Chatillon. The Catholics of Vienna, with the Kaiser at their head, sends a massive gold cross, valued at $60,000. Alsace sends a curious production of the Strasbourg clock, complete in every minute particular.

But of the many rich gifts undoubtedly the most remarkable is the colossal organ designed by the celebrated French organ-maker, M. Caville Coll, for St. Peter's, hitherto wanting only, as some one has said, a melodious voice to bring perfection. When he first proposed the building of an organ of sufficient power to fill the great Basilica many laughed at him and prophesied failure, as had been the fate of so many predecessors with similar plans. Now, however, a committee of the Academie des Beaux Arts have examined the model and pronounced the problem solved. On the committee were such men as Ambrose Thomas, Gunod, Massenet, Saint-Saens and Leo Delibes. Architects as well known as Barrias and Cavalier are agreed also that the erection of an organ will not injure the aspect of the nave, as has been feared; and so by a French hand this winter the wondrous work of Berinn, Raphael and Michael Angelo will be completed.

VICE-REGAL BALL IN QUEBEC.

A Quebec despatch says: The Vice-Regal ball at the Citadel last night was one of the most brilliant events ever seen here, its splendor being considerably added to by the presence of the English and French Admirals and officers of the five frigates now in port, as well as of various batteries of garrison artillery stamped on the Isle of Orleans. The Marchioness wore a dress of white silk brocade and tulle, ornaments diamonds and pearls, including a magnificent tiara. Lady Florence Streatfeild wore black lace trimmed with red bows.

The quadrille d'honneur was danced by His Excellency and Lady Caron, Sir A. P. Caron and Lady Lansdowne, the Mayor and Madame Casault, Judge Caron and Madame Routhier, Hon. C. A. P. Pelletier and Lady Florence Streatfeild, Judge Casault and Mrs. Dobell, Sir Fred Middleton and Madame Caron, Col. Montizambert and Mlle de Salaberry. The ball-room was handsomely decorated, and "B" Battery band supplied the music.

The Governor's Terrace, on the summit of the Citadel, overlooking the river, and on to which the ball-room opens, was also handsomely illuminated and used for promenading purposes. The toilets of the ladies were extremely rich and much admired, and the numerous naval and military uniforms made one of the most gorgeous scenes ever witnessed here. The supper table was resplendent with an immense array of the Lansdowne plate.

A London cable says: Lord Advocate Macdonald stated in the Commons last night that the Government had carefully considered a colonization scheme for the islands of the Highlands of Scotland, but a difficulty had arisen regarding security proposed to be advanced by the Government to ensure the Imperial exchequer against loss. The Government hoped to overcome the difficulty by obtaining a guarantee from the local authorities or otherwise for the security required. If this very desirable object were attained the Government were ready to carry out the proposed scheme next session and introduce any requisite legislation. The scheme which the Lord Advocate refers to provides for the settlement of the Crofters in the Canadian Northwest.

A Fatal Dose.

A New York despatch says: On Friday last the 13-months-old daughter of Mrs. Mason, 136 Phillip street, Jersey City, was taken sick. Mrs. Mason sent to Fountain's drug store for some castor oil. In the absence of her husband Mrs. Fountain put up the medicine. On Saturday the infant died from the mixture, which proved to be camphorated oil. An inquest has been ordered.

English railroads do the major portion of their own carting, collecting and delivering freight at the freighters' doors. One of the largest companies, the Midland, has in constant employment no fewer than 3,200 horses, and of these 1,000 are located in London. Some of these horses are, however, employed in switching cars, at which business heavy horses, weighing about 2,000 pounds, are employed.

The butcher's bill for the Burmah campaign has been received from Simla. The British army has lost from disease and in action, 35 officers dead, 54 wounded, 125 invalided. Soldiers: 624 dead, 111 wounded, and 1,592 invalided. Natives of all ranks: 1,004 dead, 385 wounded, and 2,594 invalided.

PLANTING TEETH.

A Dentist Astonishes the International Congress of Physicians.

A Washington despatch says: A man of about 40 years of age, short, pleasant faced and with the appearance of an epicure, was watched with keen interest yesterday by a roomful of dentists at the Franklin school building, as he performed a clinic in operative dentistry upon a portly Englishman who lay back in the dental chair. The clinic was a practical demonstration of the art of implanting teeth. The man was Dr. William J. Younger, of San Francisco, and the operation was the result of a dispute between the dentist from the Golden State and an English dentist, who had stoutly asserted his disbelief in the practicability of planting a tooth in a man's mouth and making it grow there. The dispute waxed so warm that the Englishman offered himself as a subject if no other person could be found to be operated upon. It was not found necessary, however, to hold him to this promise, as a fellow countryman was secured. It is claimed that, although a man may have been without his natural teeth for years, the process which Dr. Younger has discovered will allow sound teeth to be inserted in the place of the lost ones, and thus do away with that trite subject for puns—false teeth. By the process diseased teeth can be removed, cleansed and replaced.

"Dr. Younger takes a sound tooth corresponding in space to the hole left by the missing tooth, ligates the gum and separates it from the alvial process and drills a cavity, into which he places the tooth, and then ligates it to another tooth to retain it in position."

DEAD TO HER MOTHER.

A Columbia (S.C.) despatch says: The mother and other members of the family of Miss Rachel David, the young Hebrew lady who on Tuesday last eloped with H. A. Harth, the Gentile broker, and was married to him by Governor Richardson, take the matter bitterly, and their home has been one of mourning and lamentation ever since as if for the dead.

The mother refuses to be comforted, and declares she will never forgive the eloping couple. The room and bed lately occupied by the runaway daughter have been heavily draped in mourning in accordance with the Hebrew custom when death occurs in the family, and the lately loved and petted daughter is now considered dead so far as her family are concerned.

Two of Gladstone's Children.

A London correspondent writes: "Mr. Herbert Gladstone, M.P., son of the ex-Premier, looks very much more like his mother than his father. He is of medium height, with straight, well-moulded figure; he has a good head, a clear, clean, expressive countenance and a gentle manner, indicative of a modest and retiring temperament. He appears to be in the neighborhood of 40 years of age. He wore a light gray suit and white waistcoat and white hat. His sister, who stood upon the right of Mr. Gladstone during his famous speech on the occasion of the presentation of the American testimonial, is taller even than her father. She is a blonde, with luxurious, clear-combed hair twisted high upon her gracefully shaped head. Her eyes are blue, her complexion a dainty pink and white, her nose is a delicate retousse, her mouth is small, with a most pleasant expression. She wore a summer dress, the yellow lace work revealing the shape of her shoulders and the rounded lines of her arms. She was the most attentive listener in the group. She felt every word of her father's address, and paid the same unflagging attention to the speech of the presentation."

Died Under Chloroform.

A Montreal despatch says: A young lady named Beauvais, aged 19 years, came from Laprairie to Notre Dame Hospital here last night to have a tumor removed from her mouth. She was also suffering from heart disease, and upon the doctors giving her chloroform while she was undergoing the operation she never recovered consciousness.

A Remarkable Well.

A Cerro Gordo, Ill., despatch says: Samuel Gerber, while digging a well on his farm near Argenta, found water and gas at a depth of about forty feet. There is a constant rumbling sound coming from the bottom of the well, the noise resembling that of a boiling spring. Several times has the water risen to a depth of twenty feet in ten minutes, and as suddenly disappeared.

Clement Baldwin is a day laborer about the grounds of Union College, Schenectady. He is a man of education and was born of wealthy and aristocratic parents in Ireland. He squandered a fortune and is now in his old age obliged to work for his living.

Some of the land at Violet, over which bush fires swept recently, belonged to Sir Richard Cartwright. On Wednesday and Thursday about 150 men were out fighting the flames and preventing them from consuming valuable buildings and their contents. The fire at Bicknell's Corners swept over the country as far as Milton, burning woods and fences and three houses. A blind man named Davy perished in the flames.

On Saturday afternoon a young man called at the store of Mr. Pitt, a Dundas street jeweller, London, to get some article that had been prepared, and tendered a bill in payment. While the jeweller was making change the young fellow seized the article and the bill and darted from the shop. Mr. Pitt gave chase, but in doing so fell and dislocated his shoulder and had to be taken in a cab to his home. The fellow who caused the trouble was captured, but was allowed to go on settling the costs.

The town of Brandon, in Suffolk, England, does a large business in flints for guns and pistols and also for tinder boxes. They are carefully cut, packed in kegs and sent to both the eastern and western coasts of Africa, where flint lock guns are still numerous and where matches are not wholly satisfactory for lack of trousers to cover the most convenient scratching places.

ALL FOR IRELAND.

Two Men Killed in a Fight With the Police at Mitchellstown—Warrant for O'Brien's Arrest—Dr. Kane Writes Gladstone.

The Parnellite whips have issued an urgent summons for a full attendance of members in the Commons on Monday, when the debate begins on the Government's action in proclaiming the Ennis and other meetings. The Conservative members also have been recalled to take part in the debate.

Mr. John O'Connor, Nationalist, is about to resign his seat in Parliament for business reasons.

A special meeting of the Irish Privy Council was held in the Castle to-day. There were present the Lord Lieutenant, Lord Ashborne, Justice Fitzgibbon and the Earl of Meath. It is reported that the Council decided to have Mr. O'Brien arrested if he does not appear before the court at Mitchellstown to-morrow in answer to the summons served upon him, also to institute actions against the leaders of the recent meeting at Ennis. Messrs. Labouchere, Dillon and other members of Parliament will proceed to Mitchellstown to-morrow.

London, Sept. 9.—A meeting of the Cabinet was called suddenly to-day for the purpose, it is believed, of discussing the progress of business in the House of Commons.

Dr. C. Kane, Grand Master of the Order of Orangemen, recently wrote to Mr. Gladstone asking him to state whether in his future proposals for Home Rule the representatives of Ireland, as an integral part of the United Kingdom, would be retained in the Imperial Parliament. Mr. Gladstone has replied that the subject of the exclusion of Irish members from the Imperial Parliament is not involved in the question of Home Rule for Ireland.

Mitchellstown, where the case of the Government against Mr. Wm. O'Brien under the Crimes Act was to have been heard to-day, was crowded all day with civilians, police and soldiers. Mr. O'Brien did not appear to answer the summons. The service of the summons was proved and the Judge granted a warrant for Mr. O'Brien's arrest. An open air indignation meeting was subsequently held. Mr. Henry Labouchere and others made speeches denouncing the Government for their course in regard to Ireland.

Mitchellstown is now quiet. Mr. Dillon remains there but Mr. Labouchere has gone to Cork. The persons killed were an old man named Riordan, a resident of the locality, and an elderly cabman from Fermoy. The injuries received by the police consist principally of scalp wounds and bruises.

All was quiet throughout the night at Mitchellstown. All the persons who attended yesterday's meeting have returned to their homes. Fifty-four constables were injured to such an extent that physicians' services were required. One hundred and fifty civilians were also injured.

The police at Mitchellstown assert that the trouble there yesterday was due to the Nationalist leaders shouting for the mob to hold together. The town to-day is quiet. The Nationalists are exultant over the good fight they made yesterday. A Tipperary boy broke though a squad composed of twelve policemen and fought them single-handed. The police finally overpowered him, but the mob made a rush and rescued him from his captors. The police paraded this morning. A majority of them wore bandages over the wounds they received yesterday. Fourteen policemen who were injured during the rioting were carried to the hospital.

DEATH BY THE GUILLOTINE.

The Head and Body Immediately After Decapitation.

The Progres Medical publishes a paper by Drs. Regnard and Loye on the examination of the head and body of a convict immediately after his decapitation by the guillotine.

The prisoner was calm to the last and not pale, even when his neck was fixed ready to receive the fatal knife. Two seconds after decapitation the cheeks were still rosy, the eyes wide open, with moderately dilated pupils, the mouth firmly closed. When a finger was placed close to one eye no change of expression took place, but on touching an eye or the tips of the lashes during the first five seconds, the lids closed just as in life. This reflex action could not be excited from the sixth second after decapitation. The jaws were tightly closed and could not be opened by manual force. No similar muscular contraction could be detected in the trunk or extremities. One minute after death the face began to turn pale, the trunk remained flacid, the carotids continuing to throw out blood remaining in the circulatory area. At the end of four minutes the face was quite pale, the upper lids were half closed, the jaws less firmly clinched than before. The knife passed through the lower part of the fourth cervical vertebra.

These researches show that not a trace of consciousness remains two seconds after beheading; that reflex movement of the cornea can be excited for two seconds; that the heart may beat for an hour, the auricles continuing to pulsate alone for half that period, and that, putting aside the reflex movements of the eyelid, the contraction of the jaws and the jets of blood from the carotids, it seemed in this case as though a corpse had been decapitated so inert were the remains of the convict. Drs. Regnard and Loye note how calm and free even from physiological death-struggle symptoms is death by the guillotine. There is not even asphyxia.—British Medical Journal.

A train, with one passenger car attached, and a freight train collided on the Cumberland Railway, near Springhill Junction, N. S., late on Saturday. The engines were running tenders first, and both tenders were telescoped and completely demolished, but the machinery of the locomotives was not seriously injured. The engine drivers and firemen were all more or less hurt, but only one received fatal injury. Fireman Richmond, 17 years old, was thrown on top of one of the tenders and received internal injuries from which he died yesterday. One of the drivers forgetting his orders is supposed to be the cause of the disaster.

CURRENT TOPICS.

NEARLY all the English papers were fooled into publishing a statement that Prince Bismarck was taking twenty baths every day at Kissengen, remaining in the bath twenty minutes each time. Allowing ten minutes for undressing and twenty minutes for drying and dressing, the Chancellor's bathing programme would have occupied sixteen and two-thirds hours of each day, leaving the exhausted man only seven and one-third hours for sleep, meals and recreation.

ZEBEHR PASHA, who has just been released from a three years' imprisonment at Gibraltar, has played an important part in African politics for twenty-five years past. He has been an English prisoner ever since his capture by Gen. Gordon, over ten years ago. He was on parol in Cairo for eight years until his intrigues in behalf of the Mahdi obliged the British to shut him up at Gibraltar. Whether he will be contented to remain quietly in Cairo or will attempt to regain his sceptre in Darfur is an interesting problem.

A CURIOUS anæsthetic used by the Chinese has recently been made known to Dr. U. Lambuth in his third annual report of the Soochow hospital. It is obtained by placing a frog in a jar of flour and irritating it by prodding it. Under these circumstances it exudes a liquid, which forms a paste with a portion of the flour. This paste, dissolved in water, was found to possess well marked anæsthetic properties. After the finger had been immersed in the liquid for a few minutes it could be pricked with a needle without any pain being felt, and numbness of the lips and tongue was produced by applying the liquid to them.

London Society says: "Her Majesty is a lover of sentimental ballad music, but the words must be to her liking or she quickly has the piano shut down with a bang. 'In the Gloaming' the Queen would never allow after the first hearing, presumably because the young man and young woman under tuneful discussion didn't quite hit it off together. But 'In the Twilight,' by Violet Fane, set to music by Lady Macdonald, a pretty chanson, in which the interested parties think anything but bitterly of each other, has taken the royal fancy so keenly that the dedication thereof has been accepted by the Queen. If Her Majesty could only arrange to introduce an improvement on 'The Lost Chord' in the same way she would earn the undying thanks of people within range of the street instruments which are still searching for that infernal chord."

YOUNG ladies who fear to cross the "old maid" chalk mark may find comfort in this from the Chicago News: "The longevity of girlhood has increased in the last dozen or fifteen years. A girl is not an 'old maid' now until she is past 30. Once she was an 'old maid' at 25. In the better circles girls do not enter society at as early an age as they did when the tag 'old maid' was affixed to them if they didn't marry by the time they were 25. The lass of 16, 18, or even older, is in school occupied with her music and other studies now, and not receiving beaux alone in the parlor evenings. The largely increasing number of independently situated women who prefer to live unmarried is likely to work a decided change in the status of the 'old maid.' The girl who prefers the luxuries of her father's home to sharing a flat or a boarding house with a salaried young man is multiplying rapidly."

DISCUSSING women's rights, the Pall Mall Gazette says: "English women of rank exercise indirectly a very considerable influence upon public affairs. As a rule they are so completely one with their husbands that the latter have no secrets from them, and yet run no risk of imprudent revelations. The wife of a Minister is first and foremost his Private Secretary. Considering the inconvenience caused by Blue-books and the freedom of the press, State secrets are kept closer in London than anywhere else, while the most important public business is chiefly settled by confidential private notes. Now, there are many delicate questions, especially for a Prime Minister, that it would be dangerous to make known to a secretary. In such cases the Minister himself writes the letter, but before sending it off gets his wife to make a copy for his private papers. Lady Palmerston, as well as Lady Derby, Lady Clarendon, and Lady Russell, all did this confidential work."

SOME times a man's own medicine makes a very effectual remedy. Maryland reports that wife-beating has diminished more than one-quarter since the law punishing offences by the lash went into operation three years ago.

ENGLISH sporting words are rapidly becoming common property on both sides of the channel. "Match" is already imported into France, "jockey," "starter," "ring" and "handicap" bear it company. And, so far as entering the Gallic newspapers in italics as strangers, they appear in ordinary type.

MRS. FRANK LESLIE, widow of the well-known New York publisher, has returned to that city from Europe, and talks very frankly to a reporter of her romantic adventure with Prince Eristoff de Gourie, whom she refused to marry. She says of the Prince: "He is the most charming man I ever met—about 40 years old and the manners of a polished diplomat, and he plays the piano exquisitely. He is accomplished and a perfect dresser." It is by such expressions as these that a woman shows how she really can "be a sister" to disappointed men.

THE Sanitary News describes a somewhat novel plan for disposing of sewage in the system which Colonel Waring has engaged to construct for San Diego, California, at a cost of about 400,000 dollars. The main sewer runs a quarter of a mile into the harbor to an outlet reservoir constructed alongside the deep ship channel. The reservoir will have an area of one acre and cost some 50,000 dollars. The collected sewage will fill this reservoir not more than 1½ foot deep. High tide will add 3½ feet of sea water to the mass. The contents thus diluted will be discharged into the outgoing tide by automatic gates opening an hour after high tide, and closing an hour before low tide. At Stockton and Sacramento, where the conditions are nearly identical, Colonel Waring will make wells in various flat parts of the cities, connecting with a deep outlet well by large syphons. It is stated that Colonel Waring has employed this plan for two years successfully at Norfolk, Virginia.

PROFESSOR GUSTAV RETZIUS has a chapter in his sketches of Finland respecting the uses which the Finnish people make of birch-bark. Shoes are made of it. The bark, having been peeled, is cut into strips, rolled up carefully and put away for future use. When the Finnish peasant wants a pair of new shoes he takes one of his rolls, cuts it up into strips of suitable width, soaks it in water to soften it, and then weaves it into the form he desires. It is all done very rapidly; a half hour or less sometimes suffising for the whole work. Many other uses are found for birch-bark. The sheath in which the peasant carries his inseparable knife is made of it. It is woven into pockets or bags of various sizes, which are used all over Finland. Birch-bark is made into salt-tubs, cords and lines, brushes for washing out wooden vessels, boxes, sieves and tubs, and many other articles for which we use wood or basket material.

Mathison's Canaries.

The members of the press party have not so soon forgotten the awfully green couple that so much sport was made of at Peninsular Park Hotel, where they were regarded as the softest pair that had came under the notice of any of them for many a long day. At the solicitation of Mr. Matheson, Superintendent of the Belleville Deaf and Dumb Institute and an ex-publisher, this loving couple, that had attracted considerable attention on the boat going over from Barrie by their flashy attire of cheap goods and general get up of their personnel, were invited to accompany the press party to the hotel and partake of the complimentary lunch. On reaching the main entrance they were introduced to the majority of those present, taking everything in good part and still remaining in locked arms. This part of the ceremony being over they were asked to register their names as guests but the groom was not accustomed to writing and the gentlemen seeing them through persuaded the bride to do the honors, which she did in the following manner without raising her gauzy veil or removing her white cotton gloves: "Mr. an Mrs. Blossom an wife Orillia." They occupied seats at the festive board and were apparently very proud of the attention paid to them. The Press party left them at Big Bay Point, and for the balance of the trip the gestures or attire of this soft couple were a favorable topic of conversation. Mr. Bogart, our photo. artist, offered to give them half a dozen cabinets if they would sit for a negative, but they somehow declined to accept his generous offer. The members of the party will no doubt be greatly surprised to learn that this same pair were no less than Scott Act detectives, and in a few days after their departure convictions for illegal selling were quite numerous, not only at the Point, but also in Barrie and vicinity, while week before last alone $550 were imposed in fines. Police Magistrate Partridge has imposed fines to the amount of $2,150, all of which have been paid except $250. The "green pair" no doubt have laughed in their sleeves many a time to think how they fooled the "quill drivers." The Barrie Gazette says that the past two or three weeks have been the liveliest that country has witnessed since the Scott Act became law in Simcoe.—Newmarket Era.

Faithful to the Last.

A touching instance of fidelity on the part of a dog has just occurred in the east of Paris. Some gendarmes, going their rounds a day or two since, found on a waste land near Menilmontant gate a man hanging to a shrub. His suicide was a most determined one, for his legs were extended along the ground, and his hands touched the soil, so low was he suspended. Between his legs a dog lay sleeping. The poor animal; when aroused by the footsteps of the gendarmes, tried to make them understand in dumb show what had happened to his master. The body was cut down and carried away to the morgue, in spite of the frantic protestations of the faithful friend and the latter was locked up. There being nothing on the body to show its identity, the Police Commissary made use of the dog to ascertain the abode of the suicide. The animal was released and made to follow a house in the Rue des Harles. The police on arriving there, found that a working carpenter was missing, and the dog was recognized by the concierge as belonging to him. The animal has been adopted by some of the inmates of the house.—Galignani's Messenger.

The Fish Story of the Season.

I see stories regarding the intelligence of dogs are going about, and I should like to tell you my dog's tale. He is a clever and generally well-behaved dog. Every day I give him (in the approved manner of clever dog-owners) the sum of two pence, wherewith he goes to the baker's and the newsvendor's to buy a roll for himself and a Daily News for me. Yesterday, however, he came home with neither physical nor mental pabulum, but smelling strongly of smoke. To-day I again gave him the two-pence, but followed him at a discreet distance. He went up to an automatic cigarette box at a railway station, stood upon his hind legs, dropped his penny in, pressed the knob with his nose and took his cigarette. He was just making for the similar match provider hard by when I arrested him.—London Globe.

Crushed to Death.

William Jackson, a wealthy farmer living on lot 21, 4th concession of West York, was rolling in the fields on Thursday, when his feet became entangled in the lines, and he fell from his seat. The roller passed over him, crushing him to death.

The London Echo points out that so long ago as the time of Edward I. the busiest part of the metropolis had something like a compulsory Early Closing Act, for the Lord Mayor and aldermen decreed "that there shall be no market in Chepe or Cornhill after curfew rung at St. Paul's."

HUNTING FOR FROGS.

"Ever go frogging? No? Well, you ought to go. Talk about a deer. They're no wilder than a ripe frog. You have to be very cunning. I like the early morning best for spearing. Getting in a boat, I am paddled noiselessly around the grassy shores of some lake, where I find the frogs blinking their big, watery eyes, just preparatory to going to rest for the day. The frog is a night bird, you know, and many persons, especially those who hunt them for market, go frogging by lantern-light. Sometimes they wade along the shores slowly, but the best way is to use a boat and jack-light. You can go more stilly and always have better success."

The reporter dropped into a popular downtown restaurant a few days later and just in time to hear a gentleman in sporting attire exclaim:

"Ah there, Charley, a dozen frogs will be about my size to-day."

The reporter sought the chef.

"Who eat frog legs?" repeated he. "Well, you see, the sporting people are particularly fond of them. In fact they are eaten by Americans generally, although it was originally a French dish, as we all know, and so distinctively so that France became popularly styled the nation of frog-eaters. To stigmatize a Frenchman as a frog-eater has come to be an ancestral chestnut. Very few Germans will eat them. I don't know whether it is because of any squeamishness or whether they dislike frogs, just because their hated neighbors, the French, make so much of them. Whatever the reason, they won't eat them. Our Milwaukee frog supply is obtained from the little lakes, marshes and creeks over the State, and Wisconsin is a great frog State. Just now the receipts of hams are quite large from Muskego, Roscobel and Prairie du Chien. The supply is larger this year than last, but it is still much short of the demand as so many more people call for them. Big frog legs measure from eight to ten inches in length, and for this size we pay from 80 cents to $1.20 a dozen. We dish them out at from $1.20 to $1.50 a dozen, and fix them up so that seven legs make a dozen. At this size they will run about six legs to the pound. We pay from 35 to 60 cents a dozen for the smaller ones, and get from 75 to 80 cents for them on the table. We are going to have some monsters in to-morrow. They are on their way, and wish you would call in and see them."

"How do you prepare them?"

"There is only one way to dish up frogs, and that is to fry them like oysters, in a batter of cornmeal and eggs. They mustn't be too well cooked, and if just right, a more tempting dish was never set before an epicure. They are such a great delicacy, too. Why, we have numerous calls from invalids for frogs' legs, who say such a diet has been prescribed by the attending physician. A sick person can eat, enjoy and digest a dish of frogs, when any other meat you might name would produce almost mortal agony or very harmful results."—Milwaukee Sentinel.

A Faithful Servant.

The following comes to "Listener" from a Maine city, and it strikes him that, for once, he may break in its behalf, the old rule never to call a story a good one before it is told:

One evening not long ago there was arrested a gentleman of position and of cherry habits. The policeman said he had found the old gentleman on the street drunk. Complaint was entered against him, but as he seemed to be able to get about, he was released on his recognizance and sent home in a hack, which he paid for with great alacrity. When his case came up in court the only witnesses summoned to prove his condition were the policeman and the old family servant of the accused, a faithful and devoted retainer. The policeman had given his testimony, which was unqualified as to the fact of the old gentleman's intoxication. Then the old servant was called to the stand. There was a mingled expression of indignation and determination on his countenance. He testified flatly, to the surprise of the court-room, that the old man was sober when he came home. The prosecuting attorney proceeded to question.

'You say that Mr. — was sober when he came home?'

'Yes sir.'

'Did he go to bed alone?'

'No sir.'

'Did you put him to bed?'

'Yes sir.'

'What did he say when you put him to bed?'

'He said Good night.'

'Anything else?'

'He said as how I was to call him early.'

'Anything else?'

'Yes sir.'

'What was it? Tell us exactly what he said, every word.'

'He said as how I was to wake and call him early, for he was to be Queen of the May.'

The courtroom roared. And in spite of the old servant's very positive testimony the accused was convicted and fined.

Sober Second Thought.

"You say you want to marry my daughter; have you spoken to her?"

"Yes, sir," replied the young man, "and have gained her consent."

"Well, if she has said yes, that settles it. Anything I might say or do wouldn't have the slightest influence."

Then the young man goes home and wonders if he isn't too young to marry such a girl.—Puck.

ANTOINETTE SOMES' ROMANCE.

She Runs Away to Marry Her Lover and Returns the Wife of a Future Baron.

Several days ago a handsome lady, accompanied by a bright pale-faced boy of some 5 years, registered at the Troy House as "Mrs. I. Maitland and son, Shanghai, China." There is quite a romance connected with Mrs. Maitland's life. Some twenty years back Mrs. Maitland lived with her parents on North Third street. She was a romantic school girl of some 15 summers, and was then known as Antoinette Somes. In some inconceivable way the girl formed an attachment for a young man living out of town. The Somes people were of the stern Quaker blood, and, hearing of their daughter's clandestine meetings with the young man from out of town, Antoinette was forbidden to keep further company with her lover. But where is the young school girl that reasons at the age of guileless 15? The parents meant well, but their daughter looked at their opposition as merciless persecution. The girl accordingly made arrangements with her lover to leave the city. An elopement was the result, and Antoinette was renounced by her watchful sire. Everything went well with the young and romantic couple. They were married and settled in California. After a few years of married bliss Antoinette lost her husband. Some friends were going to China, and they persuaded the young woman to accompany them. So in far-off China the Troy girl found a home. Her parents lost all trace of her whereabouts for many years. The young woman seemed to possess a lucky star. She was courted and flattered by the gay colony of Americans at Shanghai, and reigned a belle for years. One day she was taken sick and her life hung by a thread for many weeks. She was advised to visit a health resort in China, and accordingly did as she was bidden. While the invalid was slowly gaining strength she formed the acquaintance of a wealthy Scotch merchant named I. Maitland, the eldest son of Sir John Maitland, a Scotch Baron, who possesses many acres in the land of Caledonia. Mr. Maitland fell in love with the Troy girl, and, to make a long story short, married her. This is our Troy girl's romance. Mrs. Maitland was advised some months since to leave her home at Shanghai, China, owing to the poor health of her son. A trip to America was recommended, and accordingly Mrs. Maitland started with her boy for the far-off home she had left so many years ago. A great many changes had occurred in Troy since Mrs. Maitland so suddenly departed. Her father had died, but her mother, Mrs. Maria Somes, and a sister still lived at the old home on North Third street. It is needless to say that the wanderer was received with open arms by the delighted relatives, and that the foolish little escapade of Mrs. Maitland's girlhood was entirely overlooked. Mrs. Maitland is now visiting with friends on the Albany road. She intends to remain in Troy until spring, and possibly longer if her son's health does not improve. The boy, John Maitland, is the future heir to the estate and dignity of his Scotch grandfather, Sir John Maitland. —Troy Press.

Two Lamentable and Fatal Accidents.

On Monday night James Ellrington, aged about 19 years, only son of Mr. Robert Ellrington, of Drummondville, went with two or three others coon hunting. They treed a coon, and this young man resolved to climb the tree and dislodge the animal, but, to the horror of his companions, poor James fell to the ground from the height of forty or fifty feet, and, of course, never spoke another word. He lingered till noon on Tuesday, and then died.

About the time James Ellrington expired a fire broke out at the residence of Mr. John Trice, next door to where the above young man was taken when the accident occurred and where he expired. Mr. Trice entered the dwelling to try and secure, as it is thought, his cash box, containing, it is said, over $200, but the unfortunate man neither saved himself nor money. He was so badly burned that he only lived about two hours after the accident. He leaves a widow and two children to mourn their sad loss.

The Wise and Foolish Virgins.

Ingersoll Sun: Last Saturday evening the Salvation Army introduced a novel and attractive feature in their usual parade. It consisted of ten young ladies arrayed in white robes, somewhat after the oriental style of garments, and each carried a lamp in her hand. Five of the lamps were lighted and the other five were not. The object was to represent the parable of the ten virgins who went out to meet the bridegroom, as recorded in the 25th chapter of Matthew, of whom five were wise, and five were—otherwise. It attracted considerable attention from the large crowd on the streets.

A Growing Child.

Conductor—Madame, did I understand you to say this girl is not 12 years old?

Mother—She will be 12 next spring.

"And you want to go all the way to New York on this car?"

"Yes."

"Then you should not go on this train."

"Why not?"

"Because this is a slow train, and if that girl keeps on growing as she has been, by the time we get to New York she will be so large that she will not be able to get through the car door. The company can't afford to take the car to pieces on a half-fair ticket.

A Dime Novel Hero.

Edward Horne, a lad 16 years of age, from Galt, supplied himself with a bulldog revolver, loaded up to the brim, $73.60 in cash and a false moustache and went to Toronto. Detective Alf. Cuddy saw him acting strangely at the Union station and took him into custody. He explained that he was only fooling with the moustache and wanted to play a joke on a friend he expected in on the train, but the excuse would not go down and he was locked up.

Katydids and fireflies are articles of trade in Japan. The former are sold in little bamboo cages for the modest sum of two cents. The fireflies are sold by the dozen in little gauze cages, and are purchased chiefly by juvenile customers.

HER FATHER'S WORDS CAME TRUE.

A Girl Repents an Elopement that Came of a Seaside Flirtation.

Leonard H. Wager, a well-known young man of Troy, eloped from New York with Nellie Nugent, the pretty daughter of a contractor in that city. The father, mother and sister of Miss Nugent followed her to Troy and tried to induce her to return home with them. She was at Wager's mother's house, and Wager had introduced her as his wife. Mr. Nugent made a charge of larceny of a watch against his daughter when other efforts failed to persuade her to leave Wager, and went to the house with an officer. Wager, who was not present at the first interview, then appeared and called Miss Nugent out of the room. Wager and the girl quickly left the house by a rear door, entered a carriage and were driven to a minister's house, where they were married. Mrs. Wager then refused to return to New York. Her father left, telling her she would rue the day of her foolish act. His words have come true. Several of Mrs. Wager's relatives visited her Friday at her residence, and when they left she accompanied them to a hotel and remained over night. It is said that arrangements were made to have Wager sign certain papers on Saturday, but when the party returned to Wager's house he was not there. However, Mrs. Wager and her husband agreed to separate, and she has gone back to her father's residence in New York. The elopement and subsequent marriage were the result of a seaside flirtation.

Dealing in the Dark.

Four blind men, graduates of the Pennsylvania Institute for the Instruction of the Blind, played a game of draw-poker Monday night in a room in the Moon and Stars a quaint old inn on the Germantown road, and it is stated that $135 was won by one of the players, who cleaned out the other three. The men played with cards devised and manufactured by John Stevens, who was one of the losers in the game. They were about three times as thick as the ordinary cards. The body of the card bore no marks whatever, but in the upper left-hand corner of each were the sunken marks which signified the card's value. The suits were designated by the letters D, H, C and S, and the cards by the letters or numbers beneath them, the ace of spades for instance, being marked S, with the figure 1 beneath, and the Queen of hearts H, with the letter Q beneath. All four of the players have been using the cards for some time, and have become quite proficient in handling and reading them. The winner of the game was Philip Wormser, a musician, who plays the organ in one of the Philadelphia churches. The winning hand was four queens. Stevens held an ace high flush, and the other two players held a "jack full" and a "seven full" respectively. A curious feature of the game was that the players played with the usual red, blue and white colored chips, and distinguished the colors entirely by the sense of touch.—Oil City Blizzard.

Is There a Methodist Boycott?

Rev. Dr. Potts in his remarks on College Federation the other evening said that, although the Methodists of this country comprised one-third of the population, they were scarcely represented in any of the higher positions in the land. Only one Methodist judge sat upon the Bench, Justice Rose; in the Ottawa Ministry, not one; in the Ontario Ministry, not one; in the Dominion Senate, only two or three; in the Ontario Legislature, only half a dozen or so; and if the High School Boards could keep them out in favor of Toronto University, they would be kept out. We told the doctor afterwards that for one thing we felt devoutly thankful—there were no Methodists in the Ottawa Ministry. We have a profound respect for good Methodists, and we would not like to see them in any position where they would be in constant danger of being morally polluted and corrupted; nor did we wish any of them, good or bad, such a fate as consignment to that state of oblivious deadness and uselessness, the Senate. As to the other positions, it never occurred to us that there were no Methodists in them. So long as they were well and worthily filled, we never questioned whether the incumbents were Methodists, Episcopalians, Catholics, Presbyterians or Baptists. Soon as good Methodists are in demand to fill good fat positions, out of danger of contamination, we will present ourselves.—Mitchell Recorder.

Another Counterfeit.

A new counterfeit American silver dollar is in circulation in the States and it is not unlikely than an attempt will be made to pass some of them here. It is evidently made by casting from a mould taken from a genuine piece. It is not stamped by a die. In color it is somewhat lighter than genuine silver, having a clean, soapy appearance and feel which prevent ordinary grit or dust from adhering to it. The lines of the engraving are not at all sharp, like the original, and the coin is noticeably thicker, the milling lines on the edge longer, and the diameter slightly shorter. The "s" in the word "pluribus" is noticeably bad.

Realism With a Vengeance.

In a serial story by Mr. W. D. Howells, which is running in a magazine, he says of the act of a young woman: "She did it with a cold, bright smile, making white rings of ironical deprecation around the pupils of her eyes." This is realism with a vengeance.—Chicago News.

EVEN the conservative Chinese appear to be up to date. The regular Chinese troops are being armed with a repeater. In principle it is very similar to the Lee, the bolt action and the magazine attachment below the breech being unmistakable adaptations from that weapon. The cartridge is small, and the rifle is sighted to 600 yards.

The peace and quiet of Sabbath evenings in Chesley have been disturbed very much of late by drunken rowdies. It is not known where they get their whiskey. Probably they suck eggs, for the antis will resort to any artifice,—however mean and base,—in order to hurt the Scott Act, and people have been known to find something more than egg juice inside of egg-shells before to-day. A man is pretty low down in the social scale when he has to resort to such tricks to defeat the ends of justice.

Every farmer within a radius of at least five miles of Flesherton should attend the grand Harvest Home Festival, to be held in the Methodist Church, Flesherton, on Wednesday next, Sept. 28th. Supper will be served in the basement of the church from 5 to 7 p. m., after which will come the Platform meeting, when addresses will be delivered on interesting topics by a number of ministers and laymen. Good music is being specially prepared for the occasion. To avoid the rush for seats, it will be necessary to come early. Bring yourselves, your wives and your families, and spend a pleasant and profitable evening. Tickets for supper and entertainment, 25 cents. See bills just issued.

A Box for the Printer's Devil.

A sweet, pious old lady was visiting a fair journalist one day and was very much interested in the apparent neatness and good order of her desk, as well as the many oddities that ornamented it, and commented upon it all, admitting she "expected to find a literary woman's desk all helter-skelter." She also noticed the journalist frequently opened a drawer and sought for some article in a box that seemed to have just what she wanted, and the old lady's curiosity prompted her to ask what in the world that box was for?

"That's my little hell-box," was the grave answer.

"Mercy!" exclaimed the visitor, putting on her eye-glasses, "your what?"

"Why, my hell-box; there is everything useful in it from a corkscrew to a cathartic pill," said the journalist, still absorbed in her work.

"Bless my soul I never heard of such a box as a—"

Suddenly it dawned upon the hostess that the old lady never heard of that article of typographic significence, and a peal of laughter burst from her lips as she answered:

"You do not know that a 'hell-box, is a very useful article in a printing office, do you?"

"No," said the old lady, sadly, "I have heard about the printer's devil, but I never knew they had a box for him."

Another Lie Nailed.

From the Orangeville Advertiser.

We have received the following letter from Police Magistrate Gray, denying the statements attributed to him by The Dufferin Post in its issue of Sept. 1st.:

Editor of The Advertiser.

My Dear Sir,—I am not in general a reader of The Orangeville Post, therefore not acquainted with the news it gives to the public, to any great extent. But my attention has been drawn by Inspector Anderson —who was present at the time spoken of—to an article in The Post representing me as saying I have become thoroughly convinced that the Scott Act is a complete farce. In another place in the same article I am represented as saying I am convinced from my experience that the imposition of high license is the best and only way of regulating the liquor traffic. I never gave utterance to such sentiments. The Scott Act in the abstract was not the subject of conversation after the trial of Bennett, as referred to by The Post, but the subject that formed our conversation was the difficulties I met with in enforcing the Scott Act in Dufferin, and on that subject I did say witnesses are prepared to purjure themselves to defeat the ends of the law. I did say that when a case is brought into court I find it almost impossible to secure a conviction, for all the legal talent of the county appears to be arrayed against me, and the greater part of those persons who voted for the Scott Act are dead to the enforcement of it. I believe the law of 1878 is the best law ever enacted to put down the vice of intemperance when properly enforced; but in the enforcement of it how have the officers of the law been met by the lawless creatures who are determined to sell the poison in the face of all law! Let the firebrand and Mr. Jull's shops and saw mill answer that question. When Mr. Munro was appointed Police Magistrate and tried to enforce the Scott Act, he and the Inspector were met by the deadly dynamite, five explosions given to them. When I was put into office my first summons was torn into shreds, the constable abused and assaulted, and the law and myself defied. With such a record of defiance it is not to be wondered at that some of the Government officials should say to me that Dufferin was the most lawless county of any in Canada This is the statement I made at Grand Valley respecting the lawlessness of Dufferin; and not as The Post has put it: That at Grand Valley a few weeks ago, Mr. Gray said that he was informed by the Government that nowhere throughout Ontario was the administration of the law more disgraceful and corrupt than in the County of Dufferin during the Munro regime.

There is another false statement made by The Post, which is as follows: The Ontario Government is to-day holding an investigation to ascertain what Fisher did with the fines. The Government is doing nothing of the kind. But the fiends incarnate represented by The Post may find out to their cost what the Government is investigating. I have no wish to be misrepresented, but boldly say that the Scott Act has no truer friend in the County of Dufferin than myself, and I shall stand by it while there is a plank in the ship.

Trusting you will find room in The Advertiser for this letter,

I am, yours truly,

M. S. Gray,
Police Magistrate.

THE ADVANCE TILL JANUARY, 1888 FOR 25 CENTS.

He was Relieved Despite her Sufferings.

Over in Petosky, Mich., a lady rubbed phosphorous on her bunion, presumably to ease the pain, and then retired to her downy couch. Along in the night her husband, who was a drinking man, by the way, thought he say a fiery eye looking at him. He imagined that he saw a frightful winged monster with one blazing eye staring at him; and after standing it as long as he could he decided to kill it. Slowly he reached under the bed till he found his bootjack, and after spitting on his hands he whaled away. The next moment his poor wife gave a yell that nearly lifted him out of bed, but when he found out the true state of affairs he was immensely relieved, even though his wife has been obliged to walk on crutches ever since.

A Novel Incentive to Speed.

Honest John Blank was for seventy years the well-known Governor of a New England State. Governor John had a brother William, perhaps equally honest, though less well-know, who was a sportsman, and somewhat given to the cheering cup. On one of his shooting excursions William and a boon companion found that their horse did not trot quite rapidly enough to correspond with their exhilarated notions of the proper speed, and the companion fired a charge of bird-shot into the animal to encourage him. The horse dashed off, the buggy rocking, hats and parcels flying in all directions, and William, ruler of the storm, shouted with delight: "Shoot 'im ag'in! shoot 'im ag'in! He goes adm'ably."

The jewelry exhibits by Russell, of Flesherton, and Brown, of Markdale, at East Grey fair last week, were very interesting features.

The Educational sermon delivered by Rev. Mr. Shilton last Sunday evening was a masterly effort, and was listened to by a large congregation. Text: "And the earth helped the woman."—Rev. 12c., 16v.

Remember Artemesia Show takes place in Priceville on Tuesday next, Oct. 4th. Every farmer in the Township should be present and exhibit something if possible. Remember, "Never venture never win."

The two best calves exhibited at East Grey Show last week were from the bull owned by Messrs. E. & W. S. O'Brien, Artemesia. These gentlemen intend keeping him for stock-raising purposes another year.

Willie Carson, of Tyrone, aged about 12 years, got his arm broken above the wrist one day last week. He and his brother were logging and he got on a fence for some purpose and fell off with the above result.

A Harvest Home Festival will be held in the Methodist church, Wareham, on Tuesday evening next, Oct. 4th. Tea will be served from 5 till 7 o'clock p.m., after which will come a good program of vocal music by the choir, addresses, &c. Admission 25 cents, children 15 cents. All are cordially invited.

The handsomest man on the Toronto police force is sturdy, broad-shouldered Joe Phillips—formerly of the Township of Osprey. Mr. Phillips attended East Grey fair on Friday, where he was the observed of all observers. But physically handsome as he is, Joe—as he is familiarly called—is one of the most genial and kindly of men, with a warm clasp of the hand and a cheerful smile for everyone.

The old "pea under the shells" racket was successfully worked on a number of unsuspecting and easily gulled youths and adults in Flesherton on the second day of East Grey show. When will people learn that it is utterly impossible to beat any man in his own game? We are told the gulled ones wanted to get the sharper's scalp; but to tell the truth they got what they deserved. If they stick their fingers in the fire, why they'll get scorched of course.

Mr. C. J. Sproule attended the Summer School of Music at Toronto in August. We are pleased to learn that he successfully passed the examination on music, held under the direction of the Educational Department at the close of the School. Mr. Sproule is also a member of Ontario Teachers Normal Music Association, composed of Music and Public School School Teachers interested in the teaching of vocal music. May Mr. Sproule attain to still greater eminences in the musical world.

A dog undertook to jump through a pane of glass in front of Russell's Noted Jewelry Store here on Monday forenoon last. He succeeded in the attempt at the first trial and now there is a fresh demand for glass. It is thought the dog is musically inclined and was aching to hear somebody toot one of the cornets, from which melodious sounds are occasionally evoked by Wes. and J. G. But the only music furnished on the occasion came from the dog himself as he made his rather hasty exit from the premises.

Sharpers were on the alert on Exhibition day. A man with three shells and a pea raked in a lot of money from the public, in spite of the warning they often receive, to "Never bet with a man on his own game." The bet was for a dollar, and the sharper would shuffle the pea in amongst the shells and the trick was to tell which shell the pea was under. Young men and even older ones were taken in but it will perhaps prove a warning to them to let such sharpers alone in future.

The Flesherton ADVANCE asks the following pertinent question, "Will Dr. Landerkin inform his constituents in South Grey, on which side of the fence he will roost, in case the Scott Act is submitted in Grey." THE ADVANCE man ought to have better sense than ask such a question. The Doctor is on the fence and fully intends to remain there. The M. P. for South Grey has been there before, and knows exactly how it works. —Wiarton Echo,

Ye Editor's private residence on Sydenham street is rapidly approaching completion. The roofing (laid in mortar) was completed Saturday evening last, and now a kitchen, with stone foundation, and a woodshed, together with other accessories, are being added. The printing office is also closed in and will soon be finished. Contractors J.E. Moore and Fred. Ryder have pushed forward the work expeditiously. Both men have, one would almost think, more work on hand this season than they can handle. Mr. Ryder has refused several jobs, and Mr. Moore, assisted by a large staff, is making strenuous efforts to keep pace with contracts made and others coming in.

The Presbyterian Ladies' Aid Society here is to be congratulated on the success of its efforts in connection with the concert held under its auspices in the Town Hall last Friday evening. The place was comfortably filled; and, had the weather not looked so threatening all evening, would have been packed to overflowing. Rev. A. Wilson, the esteemed and able pastor, occupied the chair in his usual charming manner. Mrs. Fox, the well-known Toronto vocalist, made her first appearance before a Flesherton audience on this occasion, and created a perfect furore, being repeatedly and enthusiastically encored. Her guitar solo was surpassingly beautiful, while her singing has seldom, if ever, been equalled in this town. Her voice is wonderfully sweet and pure, and her perfect control over it—in the high as in the low notes—approaches the marvellous. Our local singers also distinguished themselves. Solos by Miss VanDusen and Miss Christoe showed good taste in the selection as well as in the rendering thereof. The Flesherton Glee Club "brought down the house"—but then they always do. Miss Hopkins recited and A. R. Fawcett read. Revs. Watson and Shilton delivered short and happy speeches. Shortly before ten o'clock "God save the Queen" was sung and the audience went home in a happy and desirable frame of mind.

"None Will Miss Thee."

Few will miss thee, Friend, when thou
For a month in dust hast lain,
Skilful hand and anxious brow,
Tongue of wisdom, busy brain—
All thou wert shall be forgot,
And thy place shall know thee not.

Shadows from the bending trees,
O'er thy lowly head may pass,
Sighs from every wandering breeze
Stir the long, thick churchyard grass.
Wilt thou heed them? No; thy sleep
Shall be dreamless, calm and deep.

Some sweet bird may sit and sing
On the marble of thy tomb,
Soon to flit on joyous wing
From that place of death and gloom,
On some bough to warble clear:
But these songs thou shalt not hear.

Some kind voice may sing thy praise,
Passing near thy place of rest,
Fondly talk of "other days"—
But no throb within thy breast
Shall respond to words of praise,
Or old thoughts of "other days."

Since so fleeting is thy name,
Talent, beauty, power and wit,
It were well that without shame
Thou in God's great book wert writ,
There in golden words to be
Graven for eternity.

SIR HUGH'S LOVES.

CHAPTER XXII.

TWO STRINGS TO ONE BOW.

Over the grass we stepped unto it,
And God He knows it how little we were,
Never a voice to bid us eschew it,
Hey the green ribbon that showed so fair!

The beck grows wider, the hands must sever
On either margin, our songs all done.
We move apart, while she singeth ever
Taking the course of the stooping sun.

JEAN INGELWOOD.

That room of Mrs. Watkins' was unusually quiet that May evening, only Fern Trafford was sitting alone by the open window looking out listlessly at the few passers-by.

Fern's busy hands were idle to-night, and the work lay unheeded in her lap. There was a shadow too on the fair face, and a little pucker of anxiety on the smooth girlish forehead, as though some harassing problem were troubling her.

Fern was not quite happy in her mind. Erle Huntingdon had been there that very afternoon, but he had not stayed long, and his manner had been different somehow.

Fern was revolving the visit in rather a troubled way. She wondered if Erle's decided nervousness and want of ease had been owing to her mother's rather cool reception of him. Mrs. Trafford had not been cordial in her manner; she had treated the young man with some restrain and dignity, and had not pressed him to prolong his visit. Erle must have felt that he was not wanted, for he had very soon risen to take his leave, and had gone away a little sadly.

Fern was too loyal to blame her mother, but she wished she had been a little kinder to poor Erle. Something was vexing him she was sure; he was not in his usual spirits. Once or twice when there had been a moment's pause, she had looked up from her work and found him watching her; and once she was sure that there were tears in his eyes. If they had only been alone she would have asked him what was the matter, and if anything was vexing him. He wanted to tell her something, she was sure, but her mother had been there all the time, and had followed him to the door herself, and though she had gone to the window for a parting look he had not glanced up—he had walked away very fast with his head bent, as though he were absorbed in thought.

It had not been quite a happy winter for Fern. First Erle and then Crystal had been away, and she had missed them both terribly. It was not as though she had other friends to take their places, and their absence had made quite a blank in her existence.

If her mother could always stay at home and talk to her, if Fluff were older and more of a companion, she might not have missed them so much; but somehow her day-dreams were hardly as consoling as usual. They seemed more shadowy and unreal, and now and then Fern felt a little dull. Ever since her mother and Crystal had given her those hints about Erle, the girl had felt some hostile influence threatening her sweet content. Her thoughts were always straying to that unknown Evelyn Selby of whom Percy had spoken. Now and then she would question Erle about her in her innocent way, but he always evaded these questions.

"Oh, yes, I see her sometimes," he would answer. "What makes you so much interested in Miss Selby? I have other lady friends, dozens and dozens of them;" and then Fern would look confused and uncomfortable, and would change the subject; but all the same this girl was never out of thought. She was rich and well-born and beautiful, and Erle was always meeting her.

Fern tried to hide these thoughts, but Mrs. Trafford often fancied the bright face was a little clouded. Fern laughed and talked as much as ever, and worked as busily for them all; but more than once, when she had returned earlier than usual, she had found Fern with her hands lying idly in her lap, and a very thoughtful look in her face. Fern would jump up at once, with a merry laugh at her own idleness; but her mother did not always forget the look. It was far too dreamy and abstracted, she said to herself, as she watched her child tenderly.

Crystal was thinking much the same as she entered the room rather quietly that May evening—so quietly, indeed, that Fern was not conscious of her presence till she put her hand on her shoulder with a light laugh.

"Asleep, or only dreaming with your eyes open, Fern. What is the matter, little one?"

"Oh, Crystal, how you startled me," exclaimed Fern, turning crimson under Crystal's sharp scrutiny. "What made you come in so noiselessly? I never even heard your footsteps. Yes, I was dreaming, I believe," pushing back her hair with rather a tired gesture. "Fluff was sleepy and went to bed, and mother had to help Miss Martingale with the accounts, and one gets stupid sitting alone."

"I never heard you say that before," rather incredulously; "You are the brightest girl I know, Fern; your mother's name 'Little Sunshine' just suits you; you always seem to me the very essence of sunshine."

"Oh, one must be dull and stupid sometimes," returned Fern, with a suspicion of tears in her voice. "Never mind about me; tell me about your afternoon, Crystal; have you enjoyed yourself?"

"Yes—no—well, the children did. The flowers were beautiful and the gardens so pretty, and there were plenty of gaily-dressed people there. Oh, by the bye, I saw Mr. Huntingdon, he was walking with such a handsome girl."

Fern felt an odd choking sensation in her throat. "You must have been mistaken, Crystal; Mr. Erle has been sitting with us."

"Oh, yes, he told us so, for of course he came up to speak to me when Miss Selby had joined her friends; they came in very late, just as we were leaving."

"And—and—it was Miss Selby?"

"Yes, and her aunt, Lady Maltravers; and they had other people with them. I liked the look of Miss Selby, she has a nice frank face. I think she looks charming, and she walks so well too. I do like a girl to hold herself well."

"And Mr. Erle was walking with her?"

"Yes, they are evidently very intimate;" but Crystal forbore to add that Erle had looked decidedly uncomfortable at the sight of her, though he had come up to her, and had entered into conversation. She had not thought him looking either well or happy, though Miss Selby had seemed in high spirits. But she kept these thoughts to herself.

Fern did not ask any more questions. A miserable consciousness that was new to her experience kept her tongue tied.

Erle had not mentioned that he was going to the Botanical Gardens with Miss Selby; he had only muttered something about an engagement as he took his leave.

Crystal saw that Fern looked discomposed, but she took no notice. She thought the sooner that her eyes were open the better, for in her own mind she was convinced from what she had seen that afternoon that Erle Huntingdon was on the eve of an engagement to Miss Selby, if he were not actually engaged. They were quite alone when she had met them first. Lady Maltravers was sitting down at a little distance, and Miss Selby was blushing and smiling and looking excessively happy, and Crystal had been rather indignant at the sight.

"Pray do not let me keep you from your friends," she had said rather coldly when Erle came up to her. "That was Miss Selby, was it not, the tall young lady in grey with whom you were walking? what a nice face she has;" and Erle had reluctantly owned that it was Miss Selby.

"Go back to her by all means," Crystal had replied, with a touch of sarcasm in her voice; "she is looking round and wondering whom you have picked up. Oh, yes, I like the look of her very much. I think you are to be congratulated, Mr. Huntingdon;" and then Erle had marched off rather sulkily.

"She looks absurdly happy, and I suppose she is in love with him; just see how she smiles at him. What fools we girls are," and Crystal had turned away, feeling very sorry for Fern in her heart, but all the same she knew better than to say a word of sympathy to Fern.

"He has made himself very pleasant to her, but it cannot have gone very deep. I do not believe Fern knows what love is," she said very bitterly to herself, and then she changed the subject.

"Oh, do you know, I had such a surprise," she continued, cheerfully, as Fern averted her face and seemed much engrossed with a Savoyard and his monkey on the opposite side of the way. "When I got to Upton House this morning I found Miss Campion had arrived unexpectedly, and of course she went with us."

"Do you mean Mrs. Norton's sister?" asked Fern, with languid curiosity.

"Yes, Aunt Addie, as the children call her; she is staying at some private hotel and she drove over to see them. I was so pleased to see her, for you know how kind she was to me at Hastings. I do believe that she has taken a decided fancy to me, and it does seem so strange."

"It is not strange at all," exclaimed Fern, rather roused by this; "many people take a fancy to you, Crystal. I did directly mother brought you in that evening."

"Oh, you"—smoothing the fair hair caressingly—"you are a darling, and you love every one, but Miss Campion—well, she is quite different. One would never expect a clever woman of the world who has friends and acquaintances in all quarters of the globe to be guilty of this sort of sentimentality; but all the same," with a little laugh, "she seemed to be delighted to see me, and of course the American scheme was revived."

"Oh, Crystal," with a very long face, "I thought you had given up that idea."

"Not at all; but I wanted to hear more about it, and I could not make up my mind."

"You talk as though you were thinking seriously of it. Mrs. Norton would never consent to part with you."

"Mrs. Norton would do exactly what her sister wished her to do, my dear. Aunt Addie's will rules Upton House. I begin to understand things better now. We used to wonder how Mrs. Norton could afford all those pretty gowns and bonnets, and why the curate's wife was so much better dressed than the vicar's wife, and how they could afford to go out of town and have all those nice things for the children, but of course it is all Aunt Addie's doings."

"Miss Campion is rich then."

"Yes; Mrs. Norton told me all about it when we were in the gardens. She says some old uncle left her all his money. She does so much good with it; and she is especially kind to Mrs. Norton, who is her favorite sister. She has promised to send the boys to school when they are old enough, and she pays my salary, and, in fact, the whole household are much benefited by Aunt Addie. So Mrs. Norton told me rather sorrowfully that if I made up my mind to go to America with her sister they would not say a word to prevent it."

"But you will not go, dear," coaxingly.

"Miss Campion has friends in New York," returned Crystal, evasively; "but she does not mean to stay there long. She wants to see Niagara and Colorado, and I forget the route she has planned; but a companion she must have, and she offers such handsome terms, and after all she will not be away more than five or six months, and as she says the change will do me good; the only thing is she will start early next week, and as I tell her I have nothing ready, she only laughed and said we should have plenty of time to market in New York; and that she loved shopping."

"Crystal, I do believe that you have made up your mind to leave us."

Crystal hesitated a moment, and her dark eyes grew a little misty.

"And if it be my duty, Fern, will you say a word to keep me, darling?" as Fern looked sorrowfully in her face. "I am not leaving you for good and all; I will never do that until——" but here she paused, and then hurried on. "The fact is, Fern, your mother can no longer protect me; your brother's unmanly persecution is driving me away. No, I will say nothing bitter of him to-night; after all he is your brother: but it will be better for him if I leave here—a brief absence may help to cure him."

"But his selfishness must not drive you away, my poor Crystal."

"Dear, it will be far better for me to go," returned Crystal with a sigh. "I am growing restless again, and as Miss Campion says, the change will do me good; I came home to tell you this to-night. I have told Miss Campion that I will go."

"Next week!"

"Yes, probably next Wednesday or Thursday, about a week from to-day. I shall have to be very busy, you see. Don't look so pale over it, Fern; six months will soon pass. Do you know," rather sadly, "I have had such a curious feeling all day, as though something were going to happen, and that I wanted to get away first. Oh, I can't explain it; I felt the same yesterday. Fern, did Mr. Huntingdon tell you anything more about those friends of his whom he met down at Sandycliffe?"

"No, dear," with rather a wondering look, "he only just mentioned them, you know. What nice people they were, and so kind and friendly; he took rather a fancy to them."

"Yes, but I thought he might have spoken of them again."

"Oh no, he only saw them twice; he just went over to tell them how Lady Redmond's ankle was; it was only the accident that made him speak of them at all. How interested you seem in those Ferrers, Crystal."

"Yes," was the quick response; but something in her voice made Fern look at her inquiringly. "Did you—did you know them, Crystal?" she asked in some surprise.

"Yes," was again the brief answer; but after a moment's silence she said, "Fern, you have been very good, very patient all the time, you have never asked me any questions about my past life. I think as I am going away from you, and as one cannot tell what may happen, that I should like you to know my miserable story. Oh, it will be safe with you; I do not fear that for a moment; I have only hesitated all these months because of the pain of telling it, and for fear you should cease to love me if you knew of the faults I am so bitterly expiating."

"Faults," incredulously; "I have never seen them, Crystal, you always seemed so good and brave and patient."

"My dear," she answered, mournfully, "appearances are deceitful sometimes. Do you remember the story of the poor demoniac whose name was Legion, and how he sat clothed and saved in his right mind? to me is is one of the most touching and beautiful instances of the Redeemer's power. He was so galled by his chains, he was so torn and wasted by those evil spirits among the Galilean tombs. Fern," with a deep pathetic look in her eyes, "sometimes it seems to me that, thank God, the evil spirit is exorcised in me too—that there is nothing in my heart now but passionate regret for an unpremeditated sin."

"My poor dear Crystal, is it so bad as that?"

"Yes," with a sigh; "shall I tell you about it—as I told your mother—oh, how good she was to me, how she tried to comfort me, and she had suffered so much herself. Of course, you have always known my name is not really Davenport, but you have never guessed that it was Crystal Ferrers."

"Ferrers! Do you mean that you belong to Mr. Erle's friends, the blind clergyman who lives with his sister at the Grange?"

"Yes, I am Margaret Ferrers' cousin, the young cousin whom they adopted as their own child, and who lived with them from childhood. Well, I will tell you from the beginning, for you never will understand without hearing about my mother. Give me your hand, dear; if you are tired, and do not want to hear more, will you draw it away. I am glad it is getting dusk, so you will not see my face; the moon will rise presently, so we shall have light enough."

"One moment, Crystal; does Mr. Erle know?"

"No, of course not, he is a mere acquaintance; what should put that in your head, Fern?"

"Oh, nothing, it was only fancy," returned the girl; she hardly knew why she put the question; was it something in Erle's manner that afternoon? He had asked her, a little anxiously, if Miss Davenport were going away again, and if she would be at home the following week. "For she had been such a runaway lately," he had said with a slight laugh, "and I was thinking that it must be dull for you when she is away." But Fern had assured him that Crystal had no intention of going away again, for she had no idea of the plot that Crystal and Miss Campion were hatching between them.

CHAPTER XXIII.

CRYSTAL'S STORY.

The path my father's foot
Had trod me out (which suddenly broke off
What time he dropped the wallet of the flesh
And passed alone I carried on, and set
My child-heart 'gainst the thorny underwood,
To reach the grassy shelter of the trees,
Ah, babe! the wood, without a brother-babe!
My own self-pity, like the redbreast bird,
Flies back to cover all that past with leaves.

Elizabeth Barret Browning.

"I must begin at the very beginning, Fern," said Crystal, with a stifled sigh. "I hope I shall not weary you;" and as Fern disclaimed the possibility of fatigue with much energy, she continued: "Oh, I will be as brief as possible, but I want you to understand it all plainly.

"I have told you that Margaret Ferrers is my cousin; her father, Colonel Ferrers, had a brother much younger than himself: his name was Edmund, and he was my father.

"I recollect him very little, except that he was very kind to me, but they tell me that he was a singularly handsome man, and very accomplished, and greatly beloved by all who knew him.

"He was much younger than Uncle Rolf; he was still at college when Uncle Rolf went out to India with his wife. He distinguished himself there, and made a great many friends; his brilliant abilities attracted the notice of rather an influential man; he offered him a secretaryship, and soon afterwards took him with him to Rome.

"There his success was even greater than it had been in London. Every one conspired to spoil and flatter the handsome young Englishman. He was admitted to the most select circles; the youthful queens of society tried to find favor in his eyes; he might have made more than one splendid match, for there was quite a furore about him, but he soon put a stop to his brilliant career by a most imprudent marriage, for he fell in love with a Roman flower-girl and made her his wife.

"Ah, you look shocked, Fern; society was shocked too, they had made so much of him, you see.

"People said he was mad, that Bianca's dark eyes had bewitched him; it may be so, but from the day when he first saw her tying up her roses and lilies on the steps of the fountain, to the last moment when he laid his head like a tired child on her bosom to die, he never loved any other woman but her, and he loved her well. But it was not a happy match; how could it be? it was too unequal; he had all the gentleness and calm that belonged to the Ferrers, and she—she brought him, beside her dark Madonna beauty, the fierce Italian nature, the ungovernable temper that became the heritage of her unhappy daughter."

Fern started as though she would have spoken, but Crystal only pressed her hand and went on—

"When a few months had passed over, and the fame of Bianca's great beauty had got abroad, society relaxed its frowns a little, and received its erring favorite into its arms again.

"They had left Rome and had settled at Florence, and friends began to flock round them; Bianca was only a peasant girl, but love taught her refinement, and she did not disgrace her husband's choice; but it would have been more for her happiness, and my father's too, if they had never withdrawn from the seclusion of their quiet villa.

"For very soon the fierce jealousy of her undisciplined nature began to assert itself.

"She could not endure to see her husband talk to another woman, or hear him praise one even in the most moderate terms. A mere trifle would provoke her, and then long and painful were the scenes that ensued.

"She loved him passionately; she loved him as only an Italian can love; and she made his life so bitter to him that he yielded it up almost thankfully at last. He had been very patient with her, and when he was dying, he put his hands upon her dark hair in his tender way:

"'We have not been happy together, dear,' he said, 'but I do not think it has been my fault. I loved you always, but it was hard to make you believe it; be good to our child, Bianca, for my sake.' And then, as she knelt beside him in speechless anguish and remorse, he called his little Crystal to him and kissed and blessed me, and while he was still holding my hand a sudden spasm crossed his face and he put his head down upon her shoulder, and in another moment he was gone.

"My poor mother, she did not long survive him.

"As soon as the news of my father's death reached England, Uncle Rolf wrote at once offering a home to his only brother's widow and child.

"It was my father's desire, she knew, that she should live under the protection of his relatives, so she obeyed his wishes at once. She did not hesitate for a moment, though she felt she was a dying woman, and it broke her heart to leave her husband's grave. She would bring her child to England and place her safely in Colonel Ferrers' care, and then she could go with an easy conscience to rejoin her beloved.

"How well I remember that journey; every detail was stamped upon my childish recollection.

"Alas! she never lived to reach England. She was taken very ill in Paris, and after a few days of intense suffering, she passed peacefully away.

"A kind-hearted American widow and her daughter, with whom my father had a slight acquaintance in Florence, had travelled with us and were at the same hotel, and nothing could exceed their goodness to my poor mother.

"They nursed her most tenderly, and were with her when she died, and Mrs. Stanforth promised my mother most faithfully that they would watch over me until they had seen me safe under Colonel Ferrers' care.

"Every one was kind to me. I remember once when I was sitting in a corner of the saloon with Minnie Stanforth, I heard people talking softly of the beautiful Florentine lady who lay dead up-stairs, and how some one had told them that she had died of a broken heart from the loss of her English husband.

"I was not with her when she breathed her last. Minnie had coaxed me away on some pretext or other, and when I became restless and miserable, she took me in her kind arms, and with the tears streaming from her eyes, told the truth.

"Fern, sometimes when I shut my eyes I can recall that scene now.

"I can see a child crouching in a corner of the big gaudy salon where a parrot was screaming in a gilded cage, a forlorn miserable child, with her face hidden in her hands and crying as though her little heart would break.

"I remember even now with gratitude how good the Stanforths were to me. Minnie had a little bed placed beside hers, and would often wake up in the middle of the night to soothe and comfort me, when I started from some dream in a paroxysm of childish terror and grief. Young as I was I so fretted and pined after my mother, that if we had stayed longer in Paris I should have been ill; but, as soon as the funeral was over, we started for England.

"Uncle Rolf had been prevented, by an attack of gout, coming to the funeral, but he wrote to Mrs. Stanforth giving her full instructions, and promised that if possible he would meet us at Dover.

"It was early one November morning, as I lay listlessly in my berth, that I was aroused by the noise overhead. Was the brief voyage over, I wondered; had we reached England so soon? and, weak as I was, I crawled on deck, full of languid curiosity, to see my father's country. But the first glimpse disappointed me—a leaden sea, white chalky cliffs, and a grey sky, with black ugly-looking buildings and ships looming out of a damp mist; this was all I could see of Old England. And I was turning away disconsolately when Mrs. Stanforth came up to me with a tall gentleman with a kind, brown, wrinkled face and a grey moustache.

"'Here is your little niece, Colonel Ferrers', I heard her say in her pleasant clipping voice; 'poor little dear, she has fretted herself almost to death for her mother.' Then as I hung back, rather shyly, I felt myself lifted in my uncle's arms.

"'Little Crystal,' he said, gently, and I thought I felt a tear on my face as he kissed me, 'my poor Edmund's child.' And then, stroking my hair, 'But you shall come home with me and be my dear little daughter;' and then, as the kind hand fondled me, I crept nearer and hid my face in his coat. Dear uncle Rolf, I loved him from that moment. The rest of the day seemed like a dream.

"We were speeding through a strange unknown country, past fields and hedgerows, and stretches of smooth uplands, ugly ploughed lands and patches of grey sullen gloom that resembled the sea.

"Now I was gazing out blankly at the dreary landscape, and now nodding drowsily on my uncle's shoulder, till all at once we stopped under some dark trees, and a voice very close to me said, 'Let me lift her out, father.' And then some one carried me into a sudden blaze of light; and all at once I found myself in a large pleasant room with some sweet-smelling wood burning on the hearth, and a girl with dead-brown curls sewing at a little table with a white china lamp on it.

"The strong arms that had carried me in and put me on the sofa, and were now bungling over the fastenings of my heavy cloak, belonged to a tall youth with a pleasant face, that somehow attracted me.

"'Come and help me, Maggie,' he said, laughing, and then the fair mild face of Margaret bent over me.

"'Poor child, how tired she looks, Raby,' I heard her whisper, 'and so cold too, the darling;' and then she knelt down beside me and chafed my hands, and talked to me kindly; and Raby brought me some hot coffee, and stood watching me drink it, looking down at me with his vivid dark eyes, those kind beautiful eyes—oh, Raby, Raby!" and here for a moment Crystal buried her face in her hands, and Fern was grieved to see the tears were streaming through her fingers.

"Do not go on if it troubles you," she said, gently; "I am interested, oh, so interested in that poor little lonely child; but if it pains you to recall those days, you shall not distress yourself for me."

"Yes—yes—I wish to tell it, only give me one moment." And for a little while she wept bitterly; then drying her eyes, she went on in a broken voice.

"Ah, I was not lonely long; thank God, there is nothing more transitory than a child's grief deep and inconsolable as it first appears.

"I did not forget my mother—I do not forget her now, but in a short time I threw off all traces of sadness. The change, the novelty of my life, the unfailing kindness that I experienced, soon worked a beneficial effect on my health and spirits. In a little while I ceased to regret Italy and its blue skies—and the Grange with its dear inmates became my world.

"But it was Raby who was my chief friend—my favorite playfellow.

"I loved Uncle Rolf; child as I was, I very soon learnt to reverence that simple kindly nature—that loyal heart; and Margaret was like a dear elder sister; but it was Raby who from the first became my master and my companion; Raby who instructed and reproved and praised me; whose frown was my worst punishment; whose smile was my reward.

A Wanderer Returns in Tatters.

Yesterday afternoon a seedy looking man walked into the office of Deputy Sheriff Samuel A. Johnson, and announced himself as John F. Mahon, of the firm of John Mahon & Sons, of Lynn, that was bankrupted in 1881, at which time the junior partners fled the country. The estate was put in the hands of assignees, who, in November, 1883, paid a dividend of 3 per cent. Mr. Mahon presents a sorry appearance to those who knew him before his departure. In conversation with a Herald representative, he stated he had been in Canada, Texas, Ireland, Paris and England since he left Lynn, and had at one time passed as a journalist. He asked Sheriff Johnson for the warrant for his arrest, as he understood one had been issued. The sheriff knew nothing of any warrant, and he referred Mr. Mahon to the police station. Here he told his story to Marshal Hart, who telephoned to the police station at Lynn, but they did not want him. The district attorney was applied to, but he did not want him. His old counsel, Mr. James H. Sisk, was applied to, and his answer was "Send him to Lynn." Mr. Mahon declined to go, as he did not care to appear as a tramp in the city where he once rolled in wealth. He sat in the station last night a picture of despair. He had been two weeks on the road from New York, and what to do with himself he did not know. He was offered a bed by the kind hearted marshal.—Boston Herald.

"How is Brown getting on, doctor—any better?"

"Oh, Brown has been up and about for two weeks."

"Then you don't go to see him any more?"

"Don't I? I went to his office three times to see him yesterday, and I'm on my way there now."

The wardrobe of the late King of Bavaria has been sold at Munich, and the proceeds are to be applied towards the payment of his debts. The St. James' Gazette alludes to this transaction as following the precedent set in England when King George IV. died; but this is an entire mistake, as his wardrobe became the perquisite of his pages, and it was sold by them for their own exclusive benefit. This was a monstrous job, as the wardrobe fetched an immense sum, and the public, who originally paid for it, ought to have obtained the proceeds. King George IV. left every coat he had ever bought during a period of fifty years, eight hundred canes and whips, every description of uniforms, the State costumes of all his Orders, and magnificent furs and pelisses, some of which had been sent to him by the Emperors of Russia and Austria.

The Ottawa authorities have ordered the Customs' collector at Shelburne, N.S., to release the American ship Bridgewater. The facts connected with the Bridgewater's case are that she ran ashore and put into Shelburne in distress, when she was declared unseaworthy and ordered to be sold. Her principal owner, a New Yorker, purchased her, and was going on with the repairs when a claim was made for customs duty. The owner refused to pay the claim and the vessel was seized. A protest being entered the case was investigated, and it is understood the authorities decided to liberate the ship unconditionally.

The London Times, speaking of the centennial celebration of the signing of the American Constitution at Philadelphia, says: The festival celebrates no ordinary kind of a birthday. The United States have already won the way to a foremost place among the nations of the world, and to their future development of strength and wealth no limit can be assigned. The Constitution has been a compromise throughout, and in no way more clearly or usefully than in the reconcilement it has effected between National and local claims.

The London Post, commenting on the Samoan difficulty, says the Washington Conference will be exceedingly ill-advised if it accepts the suggestion of Germany that she shall have Uplu and Apia, which contain the best land and harbors in the Samoan group, and England and the United States shall take Savu and Tubenta. The Post strongly advises the appointment of a native Government, with advisers chosen in behalf of the great Powers, but who shall be men who have no interest in or be in connection with trading houses of either of the countries interested.

Gen. Boulanger, in an address to the officers of his command after the manœuvres by his corps at Clermont-Ferrand yesterday, strongly urged the necessity of giving a wider exercise of the offensive tactics which were proper to the French army. He concluded his remarks as follows: "We have to-day more need than ever of the qualities of a warrior. No, no; the hour has not yet struck for the disarmament of the peoples of old Europe. It is madness to believe it, a crime to say it, for it points to 'peace at any price' as the goal to which our enemy should aspire, and our enemies, who often appraise us at our real value better than we do ourselves, know well that we have not got as far as that. More than ever we must continue the work. for France."

A young woman named Nancy Miller, who lives with her father in Nassagaweya, had a terrible experience with an enraged cow the other day, narrowly escaping with her life, and with every shred of clothing torn from her body. It occurred in this way: Miss Miller went out for the cows to bring them home to milk, and found them in a thicket and sent a dog in to bring them out. The dog enraged one of them to such an extent that she became frantic and rushed out of the bush just where Miss Miller was standing, and, instead of pursuing the dog, rushed on her, hooking and bruising her in a terrible manner. Had it not been for the young woman's presence of mind in holding on to a strap which secured a bell about the animal's neck, she would undoubtedly have been killed.

Rough on the Maiden Ladies.

They have a custom at the Andrew Presbyterian Church, Minneapolis, which has brought great consternation to the widows and maiden ladies. It began with the children and extended to the congregation. On each Sunday following a birthday the person who has thus shuffled off another year marches to the front and drops as many pennies in the missionary box as he is years old. It can readily be seen how embarrassing this is to many. They resort to all sorts of tricks to avoid divulging the truth. Sometimes a lady will put in over a dollar, and as everybody knows she is not a hundred years old, it lets her out of the dilemma. The missionary box is the gainer.—St. Paul Pioneer-Press.

He was Relieved Despite Her Sufferings.

Over in Petosky, Mich,, a lady rubbed phosphorous on her bunion, presumably to ease the pain, and then retired to her downy couch. Along in the night her husband, who was a drinking man, by the way, thought he saw a fiery eye staring at him. He imagined that he saw a frightful winged monster with one blazing eye staring at him, and after standing it as long as he could he decided to kill it. Slowly he reached under the bed till he found his boot-jack, and after spitting on his hands he whaled away. The next moment his poor wife gave a yell that nearly lifted him out of bed, but when he found the true state of affairs he was immensely relieved, even though she has been obliged to walk on crutches ever since.

MITCHELLSTOWN.

Something About the Scene of the Late Irish Riots.

The scene of the recent lamentable riot is situate in county Cork, Ireland, and was visited by a Hamiltonian in June last, who then wrote to a friend in this city the following narrative of his visit:

"We reached Mitchellstown from Cork after going over portions of two railways and riding nine miles on a jaunting car. Lady Kingston is the present heir. We went through her private grounds, covering 1,000 acres, under guard of police and soldiers, as she has had trouble with her tenants. Strangers, and even townspeople, are not allowed in without a pass; a favor which a relative kindly procured for us. The income of the estate was at one time £90,000 per annum, but it is now down to £14,000. The tenants, being Land Leaguers, will not pay full rent. The castle is under guard night and day and it takes £11,000 to pay interest on money borrowed, so that now Lady Kingston is raising money by selling the products of her green-houses. I observed one block of fourteen houses erected by a former Lord of the Manor for such of his gentry tenants who had grown old on his lands and had no provision to keep them. This lord built the houses and placed a sum of money at interest to provide an annuity for the occupants. The three bishops of the district are trustees, on whose decision rests the selection of those who shall participate in the beneficiary."

Making Buttons Out of Blood.

The country is learning to utilize waste. Making buttons of blood is in this direction. There is a large factory in Bridgeport, near Chicago, employing about 100 men, boys and girls, in which waste animal blood is converted into buttons. The same firm has another large factory elsewhere. A man named Hirsch was the first to introduce the business in this country some years ago. He lost $16,000 the first six months, but stuck to it, and he is now immensely wealthy. There are a number of similar factories in England. From 8,000 to 10,000 gallons of blood are used in the Bridgeport factory every day. Nothing but fresh beef blood is used. Considerable of the blood evaporates during the process of drying, but what remains is pure albumen. Some of it is light in color and some dark, according to the chemical treatment given it. These thin sheets of blood are then broken up, and are ready to be worked into various shapes and sizes. Large quantities of the blood sheets are used by cloth manufacturers for "setting" the color in calico goods. Not only are buttons made from blood in this way, but tons of earrings, breastpins, belt clasps, combs and trinkets are made annually there from blood. It is a queer, odoriferous business, but a paying one.—Philadelphia Bulletin.

A Point for Farmers.

In a conversation with Mr. N. G. Batchelder, on Tuesday evening, our reporter learned the following. Mr. Batcheler exported from this section last year to the United States over 26,000 lambs. At the average price, $2.65, the sum paid for them was $68,900. On these lambs Mr. Batchelder paid into the customs office at Morristown, N.Y., $13,780—20 per cent. duty. In answer to an inquiry as to whether in the event of the duty being taken off it would result in the price of lambs being reduced to the American consumer or raised to the Canadian producer, Mr. Batchelder said the price would be raised in Canada by just the amount of duty. The Americans did not raise enough lambs for their own market and had to buy from Canada. The American farmer at present gets 20 per cent. more for his lambs than his Canadian neighbor, and if the duty were taken off the only result would be that the Canadian would get as much as the American. Thus it will be seen that our farmers lost last year on Mr. Batchelder's purchase no less than $13,780, that would have been saved by commercial union.—Brockville Recorder.

Emma James writes to the Buffalo Commercial Advertiser a circumstantial story telling how Thomas Jefferson, third President of the United States, was the father of Madison Heming, a colored man, who was living in Pike County, O., in 1874. Heming's mother was Maria Heming, maid to Jefferson's eldest daughter Martha. Maria Heming was a colored slave and bore Thomas Jefferson five children, one of whom was Madison Heming. Jefferson promised Maria that all her children should become free when they reached the age of 21. This promise he kept religiously.

The treatment of many thousands of cases of those chronic weaknesses and distressing ailments peculiar to females, at the Invalids' Hotel and Surgical Institute, Buffalo, N. Y., has afforded a vast experience in nicely adapting and thoroughly testing remedies for the cure of woman's peculiar maladies.

Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is the outgrowth, or result, of this great and valuable experience. Thousands of testimonials, received from patients and from physicians who have tested it in the more aggravated and obstinate cases which had baffled their skill, prove it to be the most wonderful remedy ever devised for the relief and cure of suffering women. It is not recommended as a "cure-all," but as a most perfect Specific for woman's peculiar ailments.

As a powerful, invigorating tonic, it imparts strength to the whole system, and to the womb and its appendages in particular. For overworked, "worn-out," "run-down," debilitated teachers, milliners, dressmakers, seamstresses, "shop-girls," housekeepers, nursing mothers, and feeble women generally, Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is the greatest earthly boon, being unequaled as an appetizing cordial and restorative tonic.

As a soothing and strengthening nervine, "Favorite Prescription" is unequaled and is invaluable in allaying and subduing nervous excitability, irritability, exhaustion, prostration, hysteria, spasms and other distressing, nervous symptoms commonly attendant upon functional and organic disease of the womb. It induces refreshing sleep and relieves mental anxiety and despondency.

Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is a legitimate medicine, carefully compounded by an experienced and skillful physician, and adapted to woman's delicate organization. It is purely vegetable in its composition and perfectly harmless in its effects in any condition of the system. For morning sickness, or nausea, from whatever cause arising, weak stomach, indigestion, dyspepsia and kindred symptoms, its use, in small doses, will prove very beneficial.

"Favorite Prescription" is a positive cure for the most complicated and obstinate cases of leucorrhea, excessive flowing, painful menstruation, unnatural suppressions, prolapsus, or falling of the womb, weak back, "female weakness," anteversion, retroversion, bearing-down sensations, chronic congestion, inflammation and ulceration of the womb, inflammation, pain and tenderness in ovaries, accompanied with "internal heat."

As a regulator and promoter of functional action, at that critical period of change from girlhood to womanhood, "Favorite Prescription" is a perfectly safe remedial agent, and can produce only good results. It is equally efficacious and valuable in its effects when taken for those disorders and derangements incident to that later and most critical period, known as "The Change of Life."

"Favorite Prescription," when taken in connection with the use of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, and small laxative doses of Dr. Pierce's Purgative Pellets (Little Liver Pills), cures Liver, Kidney and Bladder diseases. Their combined use also removes blood taints, and abolishes cancerous and scrofulous humors from the system.

"Favorite Prescription" is the only medicine for women, sold by druggists, under a positive guarantee, from the manufacturers, that it will give satisfaction in every case, or money will be refunded. This guarantee has been printed on the bottle-wrapper, and faithfully carried out for many years.

Large bottles (100 doses) $1.00, or six bottles for $5.00.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

The Durham Review can take a joke and give one, without getting everlastingly riled about it. Same here.

In view of the bonus by-law having carried, we wonder if that Durham Lilliputian will persist in his intention to smash up his brother business men?

The Hanover Post is always flippant but seldom sensible. The stuff it publishes in connection with the recent burglary here—in its last week's issue would sicken a cat let alone a rational being. The "pilot" should put across his paternal knee and give a good spanking.

An esteemed clergyman writes us as follows concerning THE ADVANCE:—"I hope that you and your paper may live and increasingly flourish. A good newspaper is a good thing and a wonderful power in working good. May every year's trip be marked as a successful venture and may you be long at the wheel."

The Dufferin Post maintains its position in reference to Police Magistrate Gray; whilst the latter emphatically declines to be saddled with the responsibility of utterances in reference to the Scott Act credited to him by the former. Two legal gentlemen who were present, endorse the Post's report of the alleged utterances of Mr. Gray. And so the matter rests at present.

Flesherton is the best centre for a fork factory in the County of Grey and we believe it will not be long before this idea will take a practical turn. A foundry would also flourish here—not a one-horse affair, but one that could and would successfully compete with foundries such as that at Ashton and others of a like character. With a little more enterprise one-third of the entire trade of the County might be diverted to Flesherton. Our central position and great natural facilities fully warrant us in saying as much. We do not want the whole earth—half or even one-third of it will satisfy us!

It's none of our funeral, of course, but if its friends are not careful the Durham Chronicle is bound to run against something and get hurt one of these days. At first inclined to adopt the high-and-mighty style, that journal has at length suddenly got down off its stilts, and now enquires "after the health" of THE ADVANCE with a solicitude and humility quite astonishing. Such a sudden and tremendous leap is sufficient to telescope its spinal column, and cause concussion of the brain—which, probably, explains the Chronicle's ranting nonsense anent the recent burglary here. Its present proprietor seems to have inherited many of the cranky tendencies of his predecessor. Let us all hope he will reform ere conscience in him becomes "seared as with a hot iron."

Fire on night last Mr. John Marshall's steam saw mill, 4th Con. of Mulmer, was destroyed by fire. The fire, which is supposed to have had its origin around the boiler, was not discovered until after midnight, when the building was seen in flames. Loss about $1500, no insurance.—Shelburne Economist.

THE SHOW.

Dark, cloudy and threatening weather tended to injure the prospects of East Grey Agricultural Society for a successful exhibition; but notwithstanding these untoward circumstances, the attendance was fairly good and in many respects the exhibits were quite up to the mark of former years. The great drought of the past summer had something to do with the slight falling off in several departments. But as the prize list is published in another column, we not enter into any particulars in connection with the exhibits.

We desire to say a few words in reference to special attractions at these agricultural exhibitions. It almost seems like irony to characterise the Toronto Industrial and other large shows, as "Agricultural Exhibitions," for such they are not in the highest sense of the term. They are largely made up of what are denominated "Special Attractions," and thus the noble science of agriculture is driven away into the background. But these "attractions" have had more to do with the success of the said large exhibitions than all the stock, poultry, vegetables, cereals and roots exhibited combined. Thousands—yes, tens of thousands—of people would never be found within the enclosures of the Toronto Industrial Association grounds, were nothing but the products of the farm, dairy and arts represented. From this book of "special attractions" rural associations will do well to tear out a few leaves, and soon a largely increased attendance will be the result.

One good special feature was provided for by the people of Flesherton, viz., a band competition between the Dundalk and Flesherton bands. But at the last moment the Dundalk Band backed down and retired from the contest, being afraid to court certain defeat evidently—if we are to judge from the opinion expressed by a Dundalk resident. Hundreds went away from the grounds disappointed, having come almost expressly to hear these noted bands play. Next year we hope many excellent special features will be introduced and carried out successfully. It will also be in the interests of the Society to have "Class 28" Manufactures more largely represented and give cash prizes in every instance, as there has been a serious falling off in this important department of late years. Further, better prizes should be given wherever possible—in this at present, in all the departments connected with the exhibition. Cash prizes should also—as formerly—be given to exhibitors of Agricultural Implements. This was at one time a remarkably well represented department at the Society's exhibitions, and will be so again if our suggestion is carried out.

It must be evident to all that an extra effort is necessary in order that the Society may regain its former prestige. Let that effort be earnestly and zealously made.

COUNTY PRINTING AND ADVERTISING MONOPOLY.

The Owen Sound papers and job offices have quite long enough—too long some think—enjoyed an almost undisturbed monopoly in the advertising and printing annually done in connection with the County Council of Grey. Once before, we pointed out the great injustice done in the matter of County tax sale advertisements, when for years have been alternately and exclusively published in the two Owen Sound papers. Now we perceive that even a greater injustice is done to the publishers of Grey, by giving job printing contracts to the County town monopolists, without allowing the former a chance to share in work to which they are as much entitled as the latter. This is manifestly unfair, as our worthy citizen and able County Councillor, Dr. Christoe, has more than once pointed out in emphatic terms. But many other County legislators—less conscientious and impartial in these matters than Dr. Christoe—seem to have been taken too much under the protecting (!) wings of the monopolists to move hand or foot in the matter. It simply remains for our brethren of the rural press to show them the error of their ways, and endeavor, if possible, to break the fetters by which they have so long linked themselves to a crying monopoly.

It seems, however, that the County Printing Committee recommended the chairman of said committee to ask for tenders for the county printing and advertising. This was not done, and now THE ADVANCE and other newspapers demand an explanation. Why did the Chairman of that Committee ignore the recommendation of his confreres? "There's a nigger in the fence." Where is he? Who is he? We pause for a reply.

Mr. John Coleman, jr., of Amaranth, met with an accident at a threshing on the farm of Mr. John Herbison, near Primrose, on Tuesday. While reaching for a sheaf to feed into the machine the person engaged cutting the bands around the sheaves accidentally drew the knife across the whole four fingers of one hand, cutting the flesh to the bone.—Shelburne Economist.

The Meaford Mirror of last week contained an excellent report concerning the opening of the new Disciple church in that town, which interesting event occurred on Sunday the 18th inst.

AYER'S PILLS. Sugar-Coated Cathartic

If the Liver becomes torpid, if the bowels are constipated, or if the stomach fails to perform its functions properly, use Ayer's Pills. They are invaluable.

For some years I was a victim to Liver Complaint, in consequence of which I suffered from General Debility and Indigestion. A few boxes of Ayer's Pills restored me to perfect health.—W. T. Brightney, Henderson, W. Va.

For years I have relied more upon Ayer's Pills than anything else, to my bowels. These Pills are mild in action, and do their work thoroughly. I have used them with good effect, in cases of Rheumatism, Kidney Trouble, and Dyspepsia.—G. F. Miller, Attleborough, Mass.

Ayer's Pills cured me of Stomach and Liver troubles, from which I had suffered for years. I consider them the best pills made, and would not be without them.—Morris Gates, Downsville, N. Y.

I was attacked with Bilious Fever, which was followed by Jaundice, and was so dangerously ill that my friends despaired of my recovery. I commenced taking Ayer's Pills, and soon regained my customary strength and vigor.—John C. Pattison, Lowell, Nebraska.

Last spring I suffered greatly from a troublesome humor on my side. In spite of every effort to cure this eruption, it increased until the flesh became entirely raw. I was troubled, at the same time, with Indigestion, and distressing pains in

The Bowels.

By the advice of a friend I began taking Ayer's Pills. In a short time I was free from pain, my food digested properly, the sores on my body commenced healing, and, in less than one month, I was cured.—Samuel D. White, Atlanta, Ga.

I have long used Ayer's Pills, in my family, and believe them to be the best pills made.—S. C. Darden, Darden, Miss.

My wife and little girl were taken with Dysentery a few days ago, and I at once began giving them small doses of Ayer's Pills, thinking I would call a doctor if the disease became any worse. In a short time the bloody discharges stopped, all pain went away, and health was restored.—Theodore Esling, Richmond, Va.

Badgeros.

From our own Correspondent.

SONS OF TEMPERANCE DISTRICT MEETING.

A most successful and enthusiastic meeting of the District Division Sons of Temperance, was held at Badgeros, on Tuesday 20th inst. The District comprises adjoining parts of E. Grey, W. Simcoe and Dufferin. Over 50 delegates were present from Badgeros, Eechaoite, Gravel Road, Maple Valley, Lavender, and Ruskview Divisions. Among those present were W. H. Bewell, Grand Scribe, Whitby, S. McLean, D.G.W.P., Badgeros, F. H. Dixon, D.W.P., Lavender, J. Moore, D.W.A., Badgeros, R. Sprott, D. Treas., McIntyre, A. Scarrow, D. Scribe, Lavender, and many other earnest workers in the order. A large amount of important business was transacted. The chair was taken by the D.W.P. The Grand Scribe was received with honors. During the session that officer addressed the District Division at length, and exemplified the work of the Order in both District and Subordinate Divisions. The utmost harmony, earnestness and interest characterized the meeting and much good will undoubtedly result therefrom. Amongst the resolutions passed was one pledging the District Division to a loyal and devoted support of the Scott Act, and also to vote for only such candidates for public office as are sound upon the question of prohibition. The public meeting in the evening was a great success. W. H. Bewell was voted to the chair. An excellent program was rendered, consisting of addresses by the chairman, Mr Prentice, D. Chap., Lavender, Mr. Andrews, Ruskview, Mr. McLean, Co. D.G.W.P., and Mr. Creighton. The readings, recitations, &c., by the Misses McKinnon, Sprott, Mr. Scarrow and others were well received, and beautifully rendered. The many temperance songs sung by the choirs of Badgeros and Lavender Divisions well deserved the applause so lavishly bestowed by the meeting. These Divisions have great reason to be proud of their respective choirs, which will yet do excellent service for the Order and the cause of Temperance. The members who were instrumental in so successfully carrying out the arrangements for these meetings, received the hearty thanks of all. The Grand Scribe also received a vote of thanks for his attendance and for the instruction given in the work of the order. The next session will be held (D.V.) at Ruskview, on the second Tuesday of January, 1888.

The First Sign

Of failing health, whether in the form of Night Sweats and Nervousness, or in a sense of General Weariness and Loss of Appetite, should suggest the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla. This preparation is most effective for giving tone and strength to the enfeebled system, promoting the digestion and assimilation of food, restoring the nervous forces to their normal condition, and for purifying, enriching, and vitalizing the blood.

Failing Health.

Ten years ago my health began to fail. I was troubled with a distressing Cough, Night Sweats, Weakness, and Nervousness. I tried various remedies prescribed by different physicians, but became so weak that I could not go up stairs without stopping to rest. My friends recommended me to try Ayer's Sarsaparilla, which I did, and I am now as healthy and strong as ever.—Mrs. E. L. Williams, Alexandria, Minn.

I have used Ayer's Sarsaparilla, in my family, for Scrofula, and know, if it is taken faithfully, that it will thoroughly eradicate this terrible disease. I have also prescribed it as a tonic, as well as an alterative, and must say that I honestly believe it to be the best blood medicine ever compounded.—W. F. Fowler, D. D. S., M. D., Greenville, Tenn.

Dyspepsia Cured.

It would be impossible for me to describe what I suffered from Indigestion and Headache up to the time I began taking Ayer's Sarsaparilla. I was under the care of various physicians and tried a great many kinds of medicines, but never obtained more than temporary relief. After taking Ayer's Sarsaparilla for a short time, my headache disappeared, and my stomach performed its duties more perfectly. To-day my health is completely restored.—Mary Harley, Springfield, Mass.

I have been greatly benefited by the prompt use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla. It tones and invigorates the system, regulates the action of the digestive and assimilative organs, and vitalizes the blood. It is, without doubt, the most reliable blood purifier yet discovered.—H. D. Johnson, 383 Atlantic ave., Brooklyn, N. Y.

THE QUEEN'S SPEECH.

Burmah, Egypt, Ireland, the Colonies, the Fisheries, Commercial Depression and the Jubilee Touched Upon.

A last (Friday) night's London cable gives the remainder of the Queen's Speech as follows: The treaty between Great Britain and China, with reference to the relations between China and Burmah, has been ratified. The confident hope I expressed that a general pacification of Burmah would be effected during the present year has been fully realized. A settled government is being gradually introduced in its remoter districts. The convention which was concluded between Turkey and myself for the purpose of defining the conditions under which it would be possible for me to undertake the withdrawal of my troops from Egypt at a fixed date has not been ratified by the Sultan. The course of action imposed upon me by my obligations to the ruler of the people of Egypt remains unchanged. The presence of my forces has secured to Egypt the blessings of tranquility, and has enabled me to effectually support the Khedive's efforts to promote good government and the prosperity of his people. I have agreed with the President of the United States to refer to a joint commission the difficult questions respecting the North American fisheries which have recently been discussed by the two nations. With singular satisfaction I mention the assemblage of the first conference of representatives of my colonies ever held in London. Their deliberations, directed to many matters of deep practical interest to their respective communities and conducted in a spirit of hearty co-operation, will, I doubt not, add strength to the affection by which the various parts of my Empire are bound together. The Queen thanks the House of Commons for the liberal provision for the public services, and continues, there is some ground for hoping that the grave depression under which all commercial and industrial interests have so long suffered is assuming a less severe character. I deeply grieve to add that there is no mitigation of the suffering under which large portions of the agricultural community continue to labor. The wants and difficulties of Ireland have occupied your close attention during a protracted session. I trust the remedies your wisdom has provided will gradually effect a complete restoration of order in Ireland and give renewed encouragement to peaceful industry. In order to pass them it has been necessary to postpone many important measures affecting other parts of the kingdom, which, doubtless, you will be able to resume without hindrance at the coming session. After reference to allotments, coal mines, merchandise marks and criminal procedure in Scotland Act, the Queen concludes: This year, the 50th anniversary of my reign, has been the occasion of the expression of fervent loyalty, which has deeply touched me. I am indeed truly thankful for the warm, hearty proofs of affection which have reached me from all classes. In thanking God for the blessings He has vouchsafed me and my country, I trust I may be spared to continue to reign over a loving, faithful and united people.

The Queen's speech in January last specified fifteen measures, the passing of which was deemed necessary to the prosperity of the country. Out of the fifteen six have passed and become law, viz., the Irish Crimes Bill, the Irish Land Bill, the Allotment Bill, and three other measures peculiar to Scotland. Nothing particular has been done for England, and everybody seems very glad to have been let alone so severely. Parliament has sat for a period of thirty-three weeks and has lost by death five members, and by elevation or succession to the peerage, eight, while twenty-five new members were introduced during the session.

A FATAL SALUTE.

Tragedy at the Ste. Anne Beaupre Festivities by the Bursting of an Old Cannon.

A Quebec despatch says: The news of a terrible accident, through an explosion of a cannon, has just reached the city from St. Anne, growing out of the ceremonies at the coronation and blessing of the statue of St. Anne. His Eminence Cardinal Taschereau, nearly all the bishops of the Province, 800 clergy and about 10,000 people assisted at the ceremony. The little village was en fete, and to add to the success of the demonstration three cannons, which had been ornaments in the lawns at Beauport Asylum for years, were shipped to St. Anne for the purpose of firing a salute on the arrival and departure of the Prince of the Church. Everything went well until the boat conveying His Eminence was leaving the wharf, when the villagers again went to fire off the guns. One of them exploded and [illegible] pieces of metal were blown in all directions. One report stated that three men were killed outright, while a second report says that only two men named Bilodeau and Sylvain were probably fatally injured, and a boy, name unknown, was picked up in an unconscious state and has remained so ever since. It is said the cause of the explosion was the age and used-up condition of the guns, and the fact that they had not been sponged, although used in firing volley after volley all day. As there is no telegraphic connection with St. Anne, the exact details of the injuries to the victims cannot be learned until to-morrow.

A Muscular Christian.

Wednesday forenoon as Rev. Mr. Shorey, of the Sherbourne Street Methodist Church, Toronto, was walking from his residence on Carlton towards Sherbourne street, a horse and buggy minus a driver dashed past him, going west. In a moment the rev. gentleman was running after the runaway, which he overtook. He seized hold of the top of the buggy, which was down, and, while running and holding on to the buggy passed along to the side and seized the reins and stopped the horse, got into the buggy and turned to go eastward, meeting on Bleeker street the coachman, from whom the horse had escaped on Bleeker street.

William Hamilton, recently arrived from England, was robbed of a gold watch and chain, worth about $125, while in a hotel on Chaboillez square, Montreal, on Thursday evening. Dolphus Colin and Felix Forest were sent up for trial on the charge of having committed the theft.

POLICE VS. MOONLIGHTERS.

Particulars of the Affray in Which Constable Whelehan Lost His Life.

A Dublin cable says: Details of the murder of Constable Whelehan by moonlighters at Lisdoonvarne on Sunday night have reached the city. The police, having learned that a party of moonlighters would visit the house of a farmer named Sexton, made arrangements for their capture. Constable Whelehan, accompanied by a dozen other officers, went to the place designated. Five of the force were placed in Sexton's house and the others in a shed near by, while Whelehan himself acted as sentinel in front of the house.

When the moonlighters appeared on the scene the door of the house was opened and three of them rushed in with loaded rifles in their hands. They were in the act of searching Sexton when the police secreted in an adjoining room rushed out and a fierce encounter ensued. Two moonlighters who, among others, had been left outside now tried to make their escape, but the police placed in the shed prevented this and drove them into the house.

While the fight was proceeding in the house two other outlaws attacked Constable Whelehan on the outside. Policeman Connell ran to Whelehan's assistance, but was immediately knocked down by a blow from a clubbed rifle and rendered insensible. Whelehan was quickly despatched, and the body, with a loaded revolver lying alongside, was afterwards found some distance from the scene of the murder and removed to Sexton's house. Connell was also carried to the house, and at last accounts was recovering.

Whelehan was a highly esteemed officer. He had been twenty-two years in the service. He was detailed to attend the Prince of Wales during the latter's visit to Ireland. The Prince at the time presented him with a souvenir in the shape of a gold pencil case.

Two of the moonlighters taken into custody are sons of well-to-do farmers, and the others are laborers. All of them—ten in number—were taken to Galway and placed in jail to-night. A crowd had assembled on their arrival, but no sympathy was manifested for them.

It is stated that the leader in the attack on Whelehan has turned Queen's evidence.

SNOWSTORM IN THE ALPS.

The Empress of Austria Almost Lost During a Mountain Ascent.

A London cable says: The Empress of Austria had a somewhat unpleasant experience recently. The Empress is almost as ardent a mountaineer as she was a horsewoman, and during her stay at Ischl went in for a great deal of mountain climbing. One day she made the ascent of the Gethfeld, and, according to her usual custom, took with her but a small posse of attendants. When half way up a snowstorm came on, and the Empress and her party were at that moment going along a narrow path a little better than a mere ledge, which wound round the face of the mountain. To advance was impossible and to return was equally dangerous. So the Empress had to cling to the face of the precipice in the blinding snowstorm, for the space of more than an hour. At the expiration of that time the storm abated, and an attempt was made to descend. A relief party, which had been sent up from Ischl, when once the position of affairs became known, finally rescued the Imperial party, and the Empress met with an ovation on her return to her villa after her dangerous experience of Alpine mountaineering

A New Explosive.

A London cable says: It is reported that the Russian Minister of War has just concluded a series of experiments with a new explosive compound which bids fair to outdo the qualities of melinite, robusite and all other explosives whatever in its application to all present uses of gunpowder. This new composition is destined, say many persons, to revolutionize the existing system of ammunition. It is the discovery of a Russian engineer, and has been christened Sleetova. Its strength is equal to that of proxyline, and it has the immense advantage of being ten times cheaper than the ordinary villainous saltpetre. Another great superiority which it possesses over all known motives of the dynamite class, is that when fired its force does not strike downward, but entirely in a forward direction, so that it can be used for all purposes of cannon and musket charges to which ordinary gunpowder is now applied without any damage whatever to the weapon from which it is discharged. It is stated, in fact, that ball cartridges loaded with it have been fired out of cardboard gun barrels, as a test, without the least injury to the latter. So satisfactory, indeed, have been experiments that it is reported that the Minister of War is about to have a special factory built for its manufacture. The composition of the new compound is a profound secret.

His First Wife Has Her Revenge.

An Erie, Pa., dispatch says: William Wearne, of Penzance, Cornwall, came to America fifteen years ago, leaving a young wife and three children in the old country. He located in Erie three years ago, went into the marble business and made money. He was married last Christmas eve to an accomplished young lady several years his junior. He was influential in the society of the Sons of St. George, and his public wedding was brilliantly celebrated. Last June the English wife and daughter arrived in this city and Wearne was arrested. His trial occurred to-day on a charge of bigamy. The defendant swore the English woman was never his wife. She was in court and fainted at the declaration. The jury was out only fifteen minutes and returned a verdict of guilty. One thousand people attended the trial, and the result was cabled to Mrs. Wearne's friends in England. The defendant will go to the penitentiary.

Edward Carberry, while working in the Don River improvement works, Toronto, last night, was seriously, if not fatally, injured by a mass of earth at least two tons in weight falling upon him. His condition is critical.

The total loss of the San Francisco wheat cornerers is now put down at about $7,500,000.

A heavy frost occurred throughout the Mohawk Valley, New York, on Friday night, levelling all kinds of vegetation.

LOST IN THE ARCTIC SEA.

Terrible Tale of Suffering by the Solitary Survivor of a Wrecked Crew.

A Victoria, B. C., despatch says: Capt. Warren, of the schooner Owner, arrived from Sitka yesterday. He stated that by the cutter Rush there arrived a sailor in Sitka who is the only survivor of the whaling schooner Napoleon, which was wrecked in the Arctic two years ago. He tells a terrible tale of suffering. The vessel got crushed in the ice, the crew having to take to their boats, and the man who arrived in Sitka was one of the eighteen who were on the ice for thirty days. During this time his seventeen companions died from starvation. He was picked up by some Esquimaux, and lived among them until the trip of the Bear into the Arctic, when he was found among his protectors. The cutter brought him down and connected with the Rush in the Behring Sea, the latter bringing him to Sitka.

Messrs. Trow and Paterson, Liberal M.P.'s, left Victoria for the east on Friday. They will stop off at a number of places along the line on their return journey.

The roof of the Immaculate Conception Church blew off with the high winds prevailing last night.

The funeral of the late Archdeacon Cowley took place this morning to St. John's Cathedral and was largely attended. The Bishop of Rupert's Land delivered the sermon, after which the remains were taken to Dynevor for interment.

It appears the reduction announced in wheat rates by the C. P. R. yesterday does not apply to Manitoba, but is a similar reduction in the grain tariff east of Port Arthur to that made on the western division last week, viz., three cents per bushel or about five cents a hundred.

A correspondent, writing from Banff on the 12th inst., says: "Lady Macdonald, accompanied by Miss Macpherson, arrived here on Thursday morning. Most of Thursday she spent with her daughter, whom she was very much gratified to find very much improved in health from the sojourn at the springs. On Friday morning she went on a handcar to Anthracite, and on her return rode to Devil's Lake, where she was charmed with the scenery. On Saturday, accompanied by her daughter and Miss Cox, Miss Macdonald's companion, and Miss Macpherson, Lady Macdonald started for the Pacific coast with her car attached to a freight train, as she wished to travel through the mountains in daylight."

Bishop Lafleche, of Three Rivers, an old Northwest missionary, and a large party of Quebec priests, arrived to-day to attend the consecration of St. Boniface Cathedral on Sunday. They are the guests of St. Boniface citizens. The visit of the clergy will have much weight, it is hoped, in inducing French Canadians to settle in this country instead of going to the United States.

Nothing of importance was adduced at to-day's sitting of the Court on the Browning injunction. Mr. Munson, for the contractors, will enter upon his argument to-morrow morning.

The Gordon Highlanders have arrived at Belfast to relieve the 71st Highland Light Infantry, who have been stationed there since 1885.

One hundred and twenty-one members of the House of Lords own land in Ireland, which is valued, according to the Poor Law valuation, at £1,842,633 per annum.

John Reilly has been sentenced at Granard Petty Sessions, under the Crimes Act, to three months' hard labor for throwing lime on a bailiff and a policeman at Cooldoney.

The self-styled Rev. Dr. Keating, who was sentenced in Dublin to eighteen months' imprisonment for obtaining money under false pretences, was liberated on the 1st inst. owing to ill-health. He goes to Australia.

An extraordinary fatality occurred on the 1st inst. at Kilkee, on the west coast of County Clare. Three young ladies were on the rocks reading, when a huge tidal wave suddenly broke over them and washed them away. One young lady saved herself by clinging to the rocks, and another was rescued, but the third was swept out to sea and drowned.

In Ireland during the present year 1,562,164 acres were planted with cereal crops, being a decrease, as compared with last year, of 28,000 acres. On the other hand, there has been an increase of 7,434 acres under green crops and 2,312 under flax, making the net acreage under tillage 18,794. In meadow and clover under cultivation there has been an increase of 49,329. Thus, in the extent of land under crops of all kinds, there has been since last year an increase of 30,535 acres.

Advices from Zanzibar have been received to the effect that the messengers sent by the consuls to apprise Emin Bey that the expedition under Henry M. Stanley had been sent to his relief have returned. They state that they reached Lake Albert Nyanza, where they met Emin Bey returning from an expedition to the Usungora country. Emin Bey was greatly surprised at the near approach of the expedition, and warned his troops occupying posts on the western shores of the lake of the approach of Stanley. Emin Bey then returned to Adelai to await the arrival of the expedition. The messengers report that a fierce war has been waged between the King of Uganda and the people of Unyoro, in which the former was defeated. The country between Lake Albert Nyanza and Lake Maritanzige has been devastated by the belligerents, and passage is difficult.

He had been in feeble health for some time. An estate of $1,000,000 is left by him to his daughters.

THE HOUSEHOLD.

How to Do Ever So Many Housewifely Duties.

Grape-water Ice.—Grape-water ice is in season, and is delicious. Take the juice of four lemons, half a pint of water, one pint of sugar, two glasses of grape juice; mix these well, strain and freeze.

French Mustard.—Slice an onion in a bowl and cover with good vinegar; after two days pour off the vinegar, add to it a teaspoonful of cayenne pepper, a teaspoonful of salt, a tablespoonful of sugar, and mustard enough to thicken; set on a stove until it boils. When cold it is fit for use.

Pudding Sauce.—Arrow-root sauce for bread or rice puddings is made of two teaspoonfuls of arrow-root, the juice of one lemon, a little grated nutmeg, half a pint of water, and sugar to the taste. Wet the arrow-root with the water, stir it until it is smooth, add the other ingredients and let it all come to a boil.

Peach Cake.—Bake three sheets of sponge cake as for jelly cake; cut nice ripe peaches in thin slices; prepare cream by whipping, sweetening and adding flavor of vanilla, if desired; put layers of peaches between the sheets of cake; pour cream over each layer and over the top. To be eaten soon after it is prepared.

Pickled Cucumbers.—Make choice of those which are small and not too old; put them into jars and pour over them a brine made of two-thirds of water and one of vinegar, with salt in the proportion of a pound to three pints of liquid. Put the brine on the fire till the salt is melted, let it stand to settle, and before using pour it off clear. When it is wished to use the cucumbers take off the rinds and dress them like fresh cucumbers.

Peach Fritters.—Make a batter of two well-beaten eggs, half a pint of milk and a little salt; beat very smooth and light, and then pour in the remainder of the milk and eggs, to which is added a tablespoonful of butter or olive oil. Peel and cut the peaches in halves; dip them in the batter and fry them in boiling fat until they are a delicate brown. Serve on a hot dish and sprinkle with powdered sugar.

Gold Cake.—One and one-half cups of sugar, two-thirds of a cup of butter, one cup of sweet milk, three cups of sifted flour, yolks of six eggs, one even teaspoonful of soda and three scant teaspoonfuls of cream tartar. Stir the sugar and butter to a cream, add the yolks after beating them thoroughly, then the cup of sweet milk and the flour, through which the soda and cream tartar should previously have been sifted.

To Can Peaches.—Rub the peaches hard with a piece of flannel or coarse crash to remove the rough surface, but do not peel them. Make a syrup of one cupful of sugar to one quart of water. When it is boiling put in the peaches and cook slowly until they are tender; then put them into the cans and pour over them the hot syrup and screw on the covers. The flavor of the peach is retained in a greater degree than when the skin is removed wholly.

Pickled Peaches.—Make a syrup of two pounds of sugar to one quart of good vinegar. Put into a little muslin bag one tablespoonful of each kind of spice, tie tightly and put it into the vinegar and sugar. Prepare the peaches as for canning and cook them in the syrup until they are tender, but not too soft; then place them in the jar and pour over them the hot syrup. Put the spice-bag into the jar with the peaches.

Peach Shortcake.—The cake is made of one pint of flour, one teaspoonful of baking powder, one saltspoonful of salt, and two tablespoonfuls of sugar passed through a sieve, and then mixed with four tablespoonfuls of butter. When thoroughly mixed moisten with one teacupful of milk. Bake in two deep pie plates in a quick oven. Have the peaches peeled and cut in slices. As soon as the cakes are done cut them in halves, butter them, and arrange the slices of peaches between the pieces, sprinkling with sugar. Serve warm with cream.

How to Restore the Rubber Rings of Cans.—The rubber rings by the use of which fruit cans are made air-tight, after being used, become hard and unyielding, so much so that fruit seldom keeps as well when they are used the second time. Though new ones cost but little, it is not always convenient to get them. Every one should know that the elasticity of the old ones can be restored, and that they can be made as good as new by baking them a half hour in a mixture of ammonia and water—two-thirds ammonia and one-third water. Try it.

How to Prevent the Breakage of Glass Jars in Canning.—Now, in fruit-canning season, the women of the household, to whom we are so deeply indebted for the good things we eat, should be told that the trouble so many of them take in warming glass cans before putting hot fruit into them to prevent breaking is all needless; that, in fact, it results in breaking more than it saves. By placing the cold can on a wet rag taken from a dish of cold water it may be filled with fruit boiling hot without the least danger of breakage. The only requisite is that the cloth be fully saturated—and with cold water.

Prepared Pears.—At this time of the year a good many families have such quantities of ripened pears that they can neither eat nor profitably dispose of them. A lady who has tried it finds this an excellent use to make of them: Cut them in thick slices, stew them, and then, in an open oven, dry them thoroughly, if it take two days. They come out all honeyed over with their own sweetness, and fig-like in their substance and consistency, at once suggesting both raisins and figs. And they are excellent eating, far finer than any one would believe without trying. They will keep, it is said, a year or two.

The transfer of the St. Martin & Upham Railway to the Central Railway Company, of New Brunswick, has been sanctioned by the Governor-in-Council.

Forty-eight colored men were arraigned at Jefferson Market Court, New York, on Saturday for gambling. They were all arrested at the Criterion and Caterers' Club rooms. Justice Gorman discharged them, saying that they had as much right to gamble in their own club rooms as the members of the Union League or Manhattan Clubs had in their rooms.

A USEFUL BURGLAR.

It was at the end of April. The Gorhams had gone out to their country seat at Penn-Rhyn much earlier in the season than usual, and, as it was intolerably dull with nothing in the world to do, they had asked a dozen people out to spend a week in all sorts of unconventional frolics. Sally had three or four charming buds for her guests, among them Madge Palliser; her brother Jack had brought several willing victims from the club, and the old Van Coovers came to amuse papa and mamma Gorham and keep them out of mischief with an innocent rubber of whist in the chimney corner o'nights.

Madge was the blithest of the blithe. All the men adored her openly, save and except Thomas Fotterall, Esq., who never worshipped publicly at her shrine, though he often watched her furtively from afar off with something more than ordinary interest in his half-shut eyes.

One night Mr. Fotterall had been sitting beside Madge in the group around the fire, but only Sally's quick eyes had detected the glances they had not infrequently exchanged. In the bustle attendant upon separation for the night nobody noticed how long the gallant Tommy was in handing his charming neighbor her bed-room candle stick, nor how the rich crimson flushed not only her cheek, but her throat and brows, as her fingers lay not unwillingly in his strong grasp.

Sally flew into the room they occupied together and was already nestled among the pillows, when Madge sauntered slowly in, her eyes dancing and a new expression on her face that caused Sally to look again with surprise, and wonder if she were really growing pretty, after all.

"Come to bed—pray do!" said Miss Gorham, in a sleepy tone.

"I'm coming," responded Madge, in an absent way.

But she proceeded, nevertheless, to put on a wrapper and let down her beautiful hair, preparatory to brushing it out and putting it up for the night.

At last she looked up. Sally was sleeping the sleep of the just, with one dimpled hand under her cheek, the other lying on the coverlet. The old Dutch clock on the landing of the stairs below chimed out a melodious midnight, and Madge began to think seriously of bed.

As she glanced up, however, her eyes beheld a sight which caused every drop of blood to stand still in her veins.

In the mirror opposite her she saw the door of a closet on the other side of the bed open slowly and the face of a man peep slyly out—a bad, brutal, scar-seamed face, with bloodshot eyes that scanned the scene with evil accuracy.

They saw the slumbering and unconscious Sally, the motionless figure of Madge, evidently about to follow her friend's example and retire for the night, and the little heap of rings and pins that glittered on a table near by. With a grin of hideous satisfaction the face was noiselessly withdrawn and the door shut softly to again, while poor Madge laid a hand upon her heart and tried to still its wild beating.

What could she do? Wake Sally, who would be certain to cry out in a frenzy of fright and give the wretch a chance to annihilate them before they could escape? Fly downstairs to the smoking-room, where she could hear some of the men, still talking over their cigars, and abandon Sally to her fate? She raised her head once more in despair when, lo! an idea!

Lightly, tremblingly, she rose to her feet, lightly crossed the room, and suddenly—heavens, how the floor creaked!—suddenly she turned the key in the lock and had her prisoner safe.

How he swore, and stormed, and beat against the door, while Sally woke screaming, and the entire household, in a state of dire alarm, appeared upon the scene. The men rushed up from the smoking-room and proceeded to extract the offender from his impromptu dungeon and to deliver him over to the officers of the peace, who were summoned by a watchman's rattle, wielded vigorously out of the window by Mrs. Van Coover, in a paroxysm of fear.

There was an immense amount of gabble and explanation going on, unstinted praise of Madge's courage and presence of mind, and then a general rendezvous in the hall below, for sleep was felt to be impossible after all that had occurred. But on the way downstairs, on the dusky landing where the old Dutch clock had stood for years and told no tales, Mr. Tom Fotterall and Miss Madge Palliser were detained a moment or two behind the rest, quite by chance, of course, and unnoticed by the others.

The red-brown locks were in a sad state of tumble; but the pretty pink wrapper was very becoming, nevertheless, and for once in her life its wearer was really lovely, with happy tears in her eyes and the dearest blush in the world mantling her cheek as somebody's tender arms went about her and somebody said, softly:

"At Trinity, the last of May!"

And that was all. A very brief moment of bliss; but the next Sunday a paragraph appeared in several gossipy journals which electrified society at large. It said:

"The engagement is announced of Mr. Thomas Erquhart Fotterall, who is the only scion of the oldest and most aristocratic family in Virginia, and Miss Margaret Euphrosyne Palliser, the reigning belle of the season."

It is surely no wonder that a man who is on a bender seldom is able to walk straight.

Henry Riedel, a weaver, murdered his wife and 9-year-old son at Wilmington, Del., on Saturday morning and then made an unsuccessful attempt to take his own life. Riedel awoke about 1.30 o'clock and said he was seized with a desire to die, and as he did not want to leave his wife and child unprotected he took up a pistol and stole stealthily into an adjoining room where they were in bed. Both were sound asleep and he shot them through the head, death resulting instantaneously. He then aimed a bullet at his own head, but it glanced and made a deep but not dangerous wound. Riedel is in custody.

At a conference of Scottish Home Rulers held yesterday Mr. Findlater, President of the Scottish Farmers' Alliance, advocated Home Rule for Scotland. He openly declared that the Northern and Eastern counties were ripe for it. A committee was appointed to consider the question and bring the matter before Parliament.

CURRENT TOPICS.

THE results of the survey and last census of India are that the area of the Peninsula of Hindostan is 1,382,624 square miles, and the population 253,891,821. Although immense tracts of country are annually cultivated, according to the most recent survey, 10,000,000 acres of land, suitable for cultivation, have not as yet been ploughed. At the same time, 120,000,000 of acres are returned as waste lands.

A PICTURE lately purchased at the shop of a general dealer in Camberwell, London, was submitted to Sir Frederick Burton, of the National Gallery, who, notwithstanding its dirty and dilapidated condition, was struck by its beauty and evident value. The picture, which is a landscape with figures, measuring 69 by 45 inches, turns out to be by Claude Lorraine and in that master's best style.

IN "Pilgrim's Progress," as translated into Japanese and illustrated by native artists, Christian has a close-shaven Mongolian head, Vanity Fair is a feast of lanterns with popular Japanese amusements, the dungeon of Giant Despair is one of these large wooden cages in which Eastern criminals are confined, and the angels waiting to receive the pilgrims on the further side of the bridgeless river are dressed in Yokohama fashion.

A MOTHER of seven children throws some light on Dr. Hammond's discussion of the decline of the maternal instinct as illustrated by the increasing smallness of families. She says she has been househunting in New York and Brooklyn for two months, and when she tells landlords that she has seven children they raise their hands in holy horror and say they would rather the house was unoccupied a year than filled by such a gang.

MISS AGNETA RAMSAY, who was senior classic at Cambridge University, has received the following letter from Sir H Ponsonby, accompanying a portrait engraving of the Queen: "Sir Henry Ponsonby presents his compliments to Miss Ramsay, and is commanded by the Queen to send her a print of Her Majesty in appreciation of the high honor gained by her in the recent examination." The engraving bears in Her Majesty's own handwriting the following inscription, "Given to Miss Ramsay by Victoria R. and I., 1887."

THEY tell a story of a recently enriched woman going to a jeweller to have the big diamonds she has worn in her ears cut in two! She said smaller stones being now fashionable she would like to have one of the solitaires made into earrings, while the other could be set for a ring. When it was suggested the stone might be exchanged for two smaller, but that it would be impossible to carve it up, the lady was much offended, as she said: "The jewels were a wedding present, and she did not propose parting with them for nobody."

SOME months ago the floors of many Austrian garrisons were painted with tar and the results have proved so uniformly advantageous that the method is becoming greatly extended in its application. The collection of dust in cracks is thus prevented, and a consequent diminution in irritative diseases of the eye has been noted. Cleanliness of the rooms has been greatly facilitated and parasites are almost completely excluded. The coating of tar is inexpensive, requires renewal but once a year, and presents but one disadvantage, namely, its sombre color.

DR. FELIX L. OSWALD declares in the North American Review that "in sixteen different European languages the word cold has become a synonym of an affection which the absolutely conclusive evidence of physiological facts proves to be a result of vitiated warm indoor air, and to be curable by cold outdoor air." He uses one of the sixteen languages with great force to plead for cold air and plenty of it, and his observations ought straightway to be translated into the other fifteen.

THE Paris Figaro says that if you wish your children to have pretty teeth you must begin with the second dentition to press back with the finger every morning the teeth which have a tendency to press forward and to pull forward those which tend backward. As a wash, boil in a tumblerful of water a pinch of pulverized cacao. It strengthens the gums and whitens the teeth without injuring the enamel which covers the bone. Wash the mouth after each meal with lukewarm boiled water.

Important to Teachers.

Next year new candidates will not be allowed to write for 2nd class non-professional certificates. In July, 1888, only the following will be eligible to write for 2nd class:

1. Those who hold 3rd class certificates and wish to obtain 2nd class.
2. Those who wrote in July, 1887, for 2nd class, whether they then held 3rd class or not, and failed.
3. Those who at any previous 3rd examination obtained the aggregate required but who failed in one or more subjects.

A Woman's Economy.

Economy is wealth, but sometimes the two do not closely connect. A woman at the station recently gave two small boys 10 cents each to go up on the hill after a small trunk. The boys forgot to come back. She then gave another boy 5 cents to go and find the other two, but the third chap's memory also failed him, and neither the trunk nor the boys returned to report. Subsequently she hired a hackman to go after the trunk, and he fulfilled the contract. Some people manage to save money by throwing it away, but this woman didn't.

The Usual Way.

Mrs. Van Coover (to caller)—I have such a splendid cook, and she is such an early riser. The ice man leaves the ice at 5 o'clock and she is always there to bring it in. She is a perfect treasure. I don't know what I should do without her.

Splendid Cook (opening the door)—Plaze, mum, it's a wake's notice oim given yez. Oim to marry Dennis, the ice man, in a month come Thoorsday.—New York Sun.

Murdoch McCauley, for some years past a clerk in Duluth, went to Levis, Que., a day or two ago intending to sail for England to-day by the steamship Circassian. Yesterday morning he was found dead in bed at the Montreal Hotel, where he boarded. Death resulted from disease of the heart.

FALL STYLES FOR LADIES.

What Fashion Prescribes for Stationery and Jewels.

Very stylish handkerchiefs are now marked with a small monogram, finely embroidered in a shield, or star, or circular piece, in colored cambric, stitched down to the corner of the handkerchief. This device must be of a hue contrasting with that of the handkerchief. If the shield is composed of blue or red cambric the monograms must be worked in white. On a handkerchief of pink cambric the shield is pale blue, and the monogram is embroidered in pink. On a pale blue handkerchief the device is in red, and the monogram may be either in blue or white. When the handkerchief is striped or spotted the shield or star must be of the color of the printed design, and the monogram in that of the groundwork. As will be seen, these combinations may be indefinitely varied. The monograms now used on letter paper, as well as on lingerie, are much smaller than heretofore.

THE LATEST THING IN NOTE PAPER.

The newest device for stamping ladies' note paper is to have it simply marked with the owner's Christian name in heavy script letters, set transversely at the left hand corner of the sheet, in a new style of gilding, which gives the letters the appearance of having been sanded with gold sand. Colored note paper in such flashing hues as scarlet, dark blue, etc., has gone entirely out of fashion. The latest effort in this style was a deep sage green, but it failed to take the public fancy. The latest chic in writing appliances is to have the blotting book stamped to match the paper. Blotting books covered with cream colored or gray coarse linen and painted by hand with devices of flowers, or birds or landscapes, or grotesque scenes and personages, executed in water colors, are very popular.

NEW COLOR.

The prettiest new color of the season is a pale yet vivid green, like the tint of a light colored emerald. It has a name as pretty as itself, being called "fresh moss color."

A very pretty and elegant watering place dress in this new tint has just been sent down to Trouville. The plain full silk skirt is edged at the hem with a row of large pale green beads. The skirt is covered with two overskirts in silk gauze of the same shade of green, slightly draped at the sides, and each edged with a row of beads. The corsage is in gauze, made without a basque and with a very long point, a row of beads outlining the waist. This corsage is lined with silk and is cut square in front. A collar necklace of three rows of beads is clasped around the throat of the wearer.

NOVELTIES IN JEWELLERY.

In jewellery the most noteworthy change to be recorded is the return of the emerald to popular favor. This most beautiful of all colored precious stones has been heretofore neglected in favor of the sapphire and the ruby, but has now regained its bygone popularity. Any person now owning a really fine emerald possesses a treasure, for one that is of perfect color and is relatively flawless is exceedingly rare and always commands a high price.

Opals, too, are recovering from the neglect into which the very foolish superstition concerning them had plunged them. Their renewal of favor is probably owing to the great beauty of the Hungarian opals, which are far finer and more brilliant than those from the mines of Mexico.

Cat's-eyes and moonstones are much less sought for than they were last season, though the latter are always popular when worked up into fantastic designs for scarf pins or lace pins. Enamels in imitation of the Byzantine or mediæval enamels are much worn in the shape of brooches and bracelets. Many of these last cited ornaments are veritable works of art.—Galignani's Messenger.

"I Am Never Merry When I Hear Sweet Music."

Like a katydid singing a mandolin's ringing just two doors above with its "zum-zum-zum;" and out in the street half a dozen boys beat on the head of a cask for a big bass drum. In the room just below at the big piano, a maiden is playing the tra-la-la-loo; and the children up stairs in trios and pairs are practicing songs that are noisy and new. And over it all, through kitchen and hall, too bass for a shriek and too shrill for a squall, like a calliope yowling our Bridget is howling the one line she's mastered of "Lanigan's Ball." "Oh, Phœbus Apollo! they warble and holloa, they shriek up to Izzard and growl down to A; they start in the morning without any warning and their second wind comes at the close of the day. Why, the very deaf mute makes a noise with a flute, and a blind man see saws on a loud violin; and the people born dumb still can tinkle and strum on things that are rattling and noisy as sin. So their music and songs go it hammer and tongs, old women and maidens and old men and boys; and I'm mad with delight from morning to night—I was born in a mill and am fond of a noise.—Burdette in the Brooklyn Eagle.

Author (timidly)—"I see that the price paid for Tennyson's Jubilee ode was $10 a line. I don't expect, of course, that this little effort of mine would be——" Editor (sarcastically)—"Oh! you don't? You are too modest, sir." Author—"But if you will kindly insert it in to-morrow morning's paper I'll willingly pay you the regular advertising rate of 50 cents per line. Here's the money—$10." Editor (with deep feeling)—"My dear sir, on looking over the poem I find it full of merit. I'll take it." The author, having made a bet of $50 with the rival publisher around the corner that his poem would be accepted, walks out of the office $40 ahead.

The following, called a railroad problem, is going the rounds: A freight train one mile in length stopped with the caboose just opposite the depot. The conductor got orders to move his train to the next station, which was just five miles distant. He gave the engineer the order to move, which the latter did while the conductor walked over ahead on top of the cars and got there just as the engine arrived at the next station, where he got off. The question is, how far did he walk, or, as he was walking during the entire five miles, did he ride at all?

MARRIED AT THE FAIR.

Extraordinary Ceremony and Odd Wedding Presents.

At the East Aurora, N. Y., Fair yesterday, Clarence Lamb, a jeweller, was married to Louise Bodman. The reward for consenting to so public a wedding was the receipt of the wedding presents named below: 1,000 lbs. land phosphate, by the Rev. J. B. Olcott, the officiating clergyman; 2 dozen silver spoons, Hon. Benj. F. Musical and Dramatic.

Mrs. James Brown Potter, who is now in Paris, sat six hours on Saturday for photographs at Van Bosch's. She had seventy-four new attitudes taken.

Edward Lloyd, the English tenor, has just signed an agreement to come to America next April for the Cincinnati Festival. He will be absent from England barely six weeks, receiving for his trip the sum of $25,000.

The Brooklyn Eagle has robbed the stage door dudes of a good deal of romance by publishing nearly five columns of names of actresses who are billed as misses, but who are in fact married; some of them, according to the Eagle's list, have been married three or four times.

London Vanity Fair states that George R. Sims is going to write a drama for Mrs. James Brown Potter on the subject of his pathetic popular poem, "Osler Joe." Mrs Potter will of course play the part of the misguided wife, a role which Mr. Sims may be relied upon to suit to her undoubted capabilities.

And now Reub Fax has gone over to the noble army of comedians. He has given up his Woodstock business and goes to New York very shortly to go on the stage. Reub is certainly possessed of much low comedy talent, and has a capital voice to assist him.—Brantford Expositor.

The following modest epistle from an ambitious young woman was received by the comedians Robson and Crane a day or two ago: "I have resolved on a plunge which will determine the color of my future life. The stage is my passion. I have never acted, but have rehearsed before good judges, who assure me I shall soar above all competition. I should like to play Juliet and Ophelia, and have rewritten and altered those plays to suit my own conception. My figure is faultless, my hair and eyes of the raven's hue, and my voice melodious. I have seen most of the actresses now on the stage, and think my appearance would be accepted by a critical public against any of them. If the part of Henrietta in your new play is as strong as Lady Macbeth I should like to hear from you, naming terms for the above qualities."

A Wretched Failure.

A Wayne County farmer who had a little time to spare during the drouth went at it and created seven artificial mounds to resemble graves in a field close to the road. Sign boards were put up and labelled: "Tramp No. 1," "Tramp No. 2," and so on through, and when the work was finished the granger went up to the house with a grin on his face and said to his wife:

"That 'ere dodge will beat all the laws of Michigan to keep tramps away."

Breakfast was not yet over next morning when there was a knock on the kitchen door, and the farmer opened it to find five gaunt tramps standing in a half circle.

"You here!" he yelled, as soon as he could credit his senses. "Didn't you see those graves down by the road?"

"We did, sir," answered the oldest tramp for all. "That's just why we stopped. We wanted to know if they came to their death by over-eating."—Detroit Free Press.

HAMMOCKS FOR THE SICK.

A Hospital Physician Says There is no Bed so Good in Cases of Long Illness.

"Put him in a hammock and relegate the bed to the innermost recesses of the garret!"

Strange advice to give, and as bold as it was strange, says the New York Mail and Express. The art of the practice of medicine, however, is nothing if not progressive, and the young sawbones who delivered himself of the above order instituted a reform in the sick room which, it is believed, will soon become general in hospitals as well as in private practice. "Put him in a hammock." Only those who have spent three or four months in bed or upon a water couch can form any idea of the relief that comes from even anticipating such a change.

The "him" referred to by the doctor was a helpless paralytic. Months of confinement to the bed had made him almost a wreck. "I recommend the hammock," said the doctor in explanation of his extraordinary advice, "not only because of its undeniable sanitary excellence, but because of all places of rest, of all couches or beds, I think it the one that conforms best to the various curves and outlines of the human form. It has advantages that no other bed can give. Between it and the ordinary bed slept upon night after night there is no comparison. For bedridden people I believe it invaluable. Consider. The hammock requires only a stout blanket and a woollen sleeping dress. The sanitary difference between it and the bed becomes startlingly apparent at once, even to you who perhaps have never considered the subject before. It is so woven that it yields readily to every movement and projection of the body in every direction, except lengthwise, in which the weight of the body establishes its own support. Then, again, a person unable to get in and out of bed unassisted can roll in and out of a hammock without help. The position in a hammock can be varied in many ways to give rest that cannot be had in a bed. Swung about the same distance from the floor as a chair they make excellent seats, and one can make his hammock a reclining chair, a seat or a bed at will. Sitting down, the back can be drawn up to any desired height. Having no heat generating mattresses to absorb the foul air or bad odors of a room, the hammock is always cool, sweet and ready for occupancy, and to my mind is a bed fit for a king. Therefore I recommend it in this case."

A Man With a Level Head.

A man registered at a seaside hotel. He asked for the proprietor and warmly argued with him in regard to terms. He was to stay for some time, and succeeded in getting a reduction of $5 a week from the regular rate. When he went into the dining room and was placed at a table he handed the waiter a $5 bill. This seemed a curious transaction from a man who was so eager to secure low terms. A boarder who had overheard the conversation with the proprietor asked why he tipped the waiter so liberally.

"Nothing strange about that; the waiter is always your best friend at a summer hotel. I make it always a rule to beat down the proprietor. What is saved I give to the waiter. I lose nothing and make the waiter my friend."—Boston Traveller.

A Pointer for the Parson.

An amusing typographical blunder was perpetrated in Carson, Nev., recently. Rev. Van Deventer sent to the Tribune his theme for the following Sunday's discourse, "Receipt for the Cure of Hoodlumism." This appeared in print as "Receipt for the Cure of Rheumatism," and it had the effect of crowding the church with people, many of whom had not attended divine worship for a quarter of a century, and a considerable number of whom were stiffened more or less with rheumatism.—Virginia City.

The Salvationists in England.

A number of Salvationists, sentenced to twenty-one days' imprisonment for street preaching at Stamford, have been conveyed to Leicester Prison. The Army assembles and kneels at the prison gates every morning. General Booth, undisturbed by such events, has just issued an appeal for 500 persons to go as Salvation Army missionaries to Zululand, Jerusalem, British Guiana, Jamaica, Canada, Australia and other parts of the world.

Life in the Arctic Circle.

At 15° below zero a steam, as if from a boiling kettle, rises from the water. At once, frozen by the wind, it falls into a fine powder. This phenomenon is called sea smoke. At 40° the snow and human bodies also smoke. At this temperature the trunks of trees burst with a loud report, the rocks break up, and the earth opens and vomits smoking water. To talk is fatiguing.—St. Nicholas.

It is reported that the French Government is preparing a reply to the manifesto of the Count of Paris, explaining the policy it intends to pursue in the coming session. The Temps, commenting on the manifesto, says: "The document will have no disquieting influence on the country. It will only excite and embarrass the Right, owing to their reapprochement with the Government. It indicates between the Count's views and the Cæsarian doctrine of the Empire that the monarchy can only be restored through a violent internal crisis and the triumph of anarchy. Republicans, whose political experience continues to increase, will not afford the monarchy that chance." The Univers says that the manifesto amounts to a renunciation of the traditional monarchy and that the Count is becoming an emulator and imitator of Napoleon.

BESSIE DIES OF GRIEF.

Several years ago a lady in this place gave to one of Mr. J. T. Owen's children a poodle dog, which proved to be a very affectionate creature, and from its first entering the house it became very much attached to Mrs. Owen. It was always playful and delighted in nothing so much as being noticed, receiving the caresses of visitors as gladly as a child, and seemed gifted with reason. During the protracted illness of Mrs. Owen the little pet would, at meal time, go to its mistress to be fed, where it received its meals regularly from her hand. During the last few days of Mrs. Owen's illness, when she was unable to give it the accustomed attention, it was noticed even by those who had been visiting the house that "Bessie" had lost her spirit of playfulness and looked dejected. When her mistress died, on the 18th of April last, Bessie took a position under her bed, and when her body was placed in the coffin she then changed her position and remained under the coffin until the remains were taken from the house. For days afterward she clung to that room, lying in a chair beside the bed, and, although she had never been known to get on a bed before, she would, after the death of her mistress, jump on the bed and scratch down the cover, evidently hunting for her best and lost friend, refusing most of the time to eat for days at a time, eating so little that it seemed she must necessarily die of starvation. Occasionally she made an effort to rally, but would in a short time relapse into the same state of gloom and despondency. For the last few weeks she had almost entirely abstained from food, until she became a living skeleton. On last Sunday morning when the family arose and opened the door little Bessie crawled from her comfortable bed on the back piazza, and softly crept into the room of her young mistress and stretched herself upon the floor under the foot of the bed and died without a struggle. Her action from the day she lost her mistress showed plainly that she was grieving deeply, and called forth much tender sympathy, and added grief to those who already had their load to bear, but who had reason to support them.—Cartersville (Ga.) Courant.

Deer, and Not Men, in the Highlands.

The rage for creating vast expanses of artificial solitudes, which are jealously protected, is growing so rapidly that very soon one half of the Highlands will be isolated in order to afford six weeks' enjoyment to the scions of dukes, to successful brewers, and to opulent strangers. The prices they pay for their pleasures are astounding in magnitude, amounting often to more than double the rent a pastoral farmer could afford. For instance, Mr. Cooper, the son of a returned Australian, pays £4,500 to Lord Wimbourne for the use of his forest, while Mr. Winans, the American, whose domain stretches across the island almost from sea to sea, gives three or four times that sum to as many different proprietors. It is a selfish, arbitrary and impolitic custom, which will have a short-lived day, but may be productive of serious mischief while it lasts. No one questions that the higher altitudes of the country may well be left to deer; but it is a reversal of civilization to fence off a country almost as big as Yorkshire from the foot of man, and to buy venison at £60 per carcase, even with the gratification of pursuit and slaughter thrown in.—Scottish American Journal.

Not Quite Soon Enough, Though.

A friend in the South asked a negro girl her name. "Matilda," was the answer. "But that isn't your only name," said the lady. Thus encouraged the girl glibly recited, "Matilda Malvina Minerva Virginia Victoria Jane." (Here my memory fails me, for my friend reported the entire number of names as eight.) At the end of her recitation the girl said proudly: "My grandmother named me." "But haven't you any more names than that?" asked her mischievous interrogator. Conscious of having made a fair showing the girl was puzzled to answer so unusual a question. At last she said slowly: "My grandmother died."

It has transpired that the non-release of Canadian vessels seized last season in Behring's Sea is due to the ignorance of the authorities of Sitka, who refused to comply with a telegram from Secretary Bayard directing the restoration of the vessels and skins to their owners, on the alleged ground that the telegram might not be authentic.

DON'T BE DOWN-HEARTED.

Down-hearted? Pshaw! there's seldom such
A lane without a turning;
Each desert has a spot of green,
In spite of bright Sol's burning.
Your friends have failed you? Well, what then?
Remember changing Peter;
Sorrow has tried the best of men,
And life is all the sweeter.

What adds a zest to Summer's joy
Is it not Winter weary?
Peace would be tame without alloy,
Past grief makes solace cheery.
All can't of win, though I must run
When [illegible]
Yet all may hear the words Well, then
So never be down-hearted.

The latest fad in France is to "go ballooning." Ascending high mountains is getting to be too slow. Priceville Pickings.

From our own Correspondent.

Methodist Picnic in Proton.

For some time the various appointments of the Priceville circuit of the Methodist Church have been vieing with each other for the honor of subscribing the most money to provide for the remaining debt on the fine brick parsonage erected in this place last summer. One young lady was chosen at each appointment to attend to the canvassing, and the victor was to be presented with a log cabin quilt, composed of silk, satin, velvet and plush, and gotten up by ladies in all parts of the circuit, who contributed "blocks" for said quilt. The affair culminated in a grand social picnic in Mr. James Ferris' bush, Proton, on the 20th inst., when the results were made known. Miss Ferris, of Proton, was the successful canvasser, having raised the handsome sum of $56. Several other young ladies also raised large sums. When these sums were all added to the proceeds of the picnic something over $180 was realized. The programme consisted of speeches by Rev. Wm. Ottewell, of Priceville, and Rev. Dr Strongman, of Dundalk, together with a reading by Dr Hixon, of Priceville, and a choice selection of excellent music by Ebenezer church Choir.

New Bridge.

The new town line bridge over the Saugeen is now completed and the contractors, Messrs Aussum and Tuck, have done their work well having built a structure that promises to stand not only the spring freshets but also the wear and tear of daily traffic for many years. Contract price about $180.

Accident.

While working in a well (about two weeks ago) at McLaughlan's, North Line, Glenelg, Mr. Thos. Rawson was struck on the head by a heavy plank of curbing about three feet in length, which was being let down into the well with a rope. It fell a distance of ten feet before striking him. He was quite unconscious for awhile, but by careful attendance is gradually regaining health. He now says that although able to converse with his friends a few hours after the accident, he was entirely unable to recall the incidents that transpired for several days afterwards.

Several citizens visited the Toronto Exhibition.

The Building Committee of the St. Columbo Presbyterian church have been very successful in obtaining subscriptions for the new brick church which is now an established undertaking. Several loads of stones are now on the ground, the plans and specifications are being prepared by Mr Greig, architect of Toronto, and in a few days we may expect to see work begun in earnest.

The new bakery, with brick front, is nearing completion, and will, it is expected, be occupied in a few weeks by Mr. Alfred Watson, who will supply the Pricevillians with choice bread and cakes.

From our own Correspondent.

[The following should have appeared in June, but failed to reach us until the other day; however, as there are several items of interest will publish now.]

Winni-toba.

Editor Advance,—your excelsior paper continues to find me, and I would be remiss in duty were I to withold news items &c. interesting to your readers concerning this city and province to which the 'alf and 'alf hyphen connecting above capitals refer to.

I suppose a "born Canadian" and grandson of an old staunch U. S. Loyalist would almost be suspected of disloyalty were he not to give prominence in the great subject of the day viz., the Queen's Jubilee.

Therefore I will remark that I am heartily in accord with the universal rejoicing and commemoration of our beloved sovereigns fifty years swaying the sceptre over a Dominion upon which the sun never sets. Although too ill to participate in any of the public festivities, or demonstrations connected therewith, yet I mentally unite with the millions of the earth in returning thanks to the

King of Kings
For kindly sending us, good QUEEN VICTORIA,
"Happy and glorious,
Long to reign over us,
God Save the Queen"
Long, longer yet may Heaven spare.
Our much love'd Queen, be this our prayer.
And grant Her still His special care.
God bless our Queen.

Great preparations are being made here for celebrating the Jubilee, concerning which you will probably be informed in your "exchanges."

I was pleased to learn of Progressive Flesherton's Temperance Jubilee Celebration, and hope your town will continue to be active in every good work.

The Presbyterian Synod

Recently convened in Winnipeg consisted of about three hundred delegates! Rev. Father Chinquy being one of the number. I presume your readers have heard of his somewhat singular conversion from Roman Catholicism to Protestantism.

Crop Prospects

Are cropping out very encouragingly to the "Hardy taller of the soil" but, jack frost, that cold hearted, unwelcome-in-summer chiel, has been "amang us takin' notes" as may be perceived by the effects produced in gardens and potatoe patches. Yes, frost in Manitoba in summer.

"Tell me ye wintry summer winds,
Which o'er the Prairie roar,
Is there no favored Farmers land,
Where Frost is feared no more?"

Rain Fall.

·77 inches during the week ending June 18th." So says St Johns College weather report and this is only a "sprinkling" of what has fallen since winter. It has rained "every other day" so to speak – enough to float a fleet had it all laid on the ground at once. However, it is soon absorbed owing to last summers drought and winters few inches of snow.

Wind, Tremendous Winds

With semi cyclone speed sweep across the boundless (?) prairie, fortunately do [illegible] but little damage except to unsubstantial buildings, occasionally upsetting a lumber pile &c.

There are no tall trees to be uprooted, but so much wind is inconvenient—annoying, however, I must not murmur as this is not a tempestuous, cyclone country.

Yours,
June, 1887. Winnipeg.

The roller mill bonus by-law, to raise $3,000, was carried in Durham the other day, whereat the local papers are jubilant.

A Collingwood brute knocked his wife down on the sidewalk recently, because the poor woman said something which displeased his lordship. His name is Burk.

Grave fears are entertained that Mr. Thomas Campbell, son of Quintin Campbell, of Bentinck, was drowned at Toronto during the collision of three ferry steamers on the bay, which were carrying visitors to and from the exhibition.

Dr. Ghent's horse and rig disappeared from a street corner in Toronto last week, but has since turned up, the horse one place the harness on the street and the buggy in a carriage shop in another part of the city.

Mr. Geisel lost a bag of chopped stuff near Elmwood, and Mr. Peltz, the Walkerton bacon man picked it up and advertised for the owner. Mr. Geisel suggested that Mr. Peltz "probably advertised" the stuff after receiving a certain postcard sent him by the former. Mr. Peltz denied the insinuation by feeling his accusers windpipe in a rather forcible manner, for which he paid $6.10 afterwards when he appeared before the cadi. It was a case of throttle and not one of pelts! Ahem—next!

Owen Sound has added a bootblack to its other great enterprises. It will soon be a city.

The by-law to raise $8,000 for the construction of Water Works in Wiarton was carried by a majority of 69 on Monday last.—Owen Sound Times.

Rev. Mr. Fleming was inducted to the Presbyterian church, Thornbury, on Thursday of week before last. Rev. Mr. Fraser, Moderator, of Leith, President.

Messrs. W. & E. O'Brien of Eugenia recently sold a pair of steers to a Thornbury cattle buyer which turned the scales at 4,065 lbs.

Mr. Seneca G. Ketchum has returned safely to Orangeville again. It is reported he will wield the quill on the Post once more. Long life to you, "Sec."

Mr. J. F. Kennedy, of the Orangeville Advertiser, was married on Wednesday of week before last to Miss Hattie May Davis, daughter of Mr. W. A. Davis, of Saltfleet. The Advance tenders its congratulations.

Mr. J. J. Bannon, druggist, of Norwich, Ont., was visiting his parents and friends in Artemesia recently. Of course he was in Flesherton and called on many of his old friends, who were delighted to meet with him again.

Rev. Thos. Watson preached a discourse in the Baptist church here on Sunday morning last, the leading thought being the necessity for having Christ in the heart. Text, Luke 2c. 7v. Several beautiful and inspiring ideas were unfolded in a clear and convincing manner.

The Boyne water bridge in this town is in a very dangerous condition and should be attended to at once by our Township Fathers. A small expenditure would make a temporarily safe job of it, but it is only a question of time before a new bridge will have to be built and better approaches constructed.

Russell's Noted Jewelry Store, Flesherton, is the place to get your Watches, Clocks, Jewelry, &c. The finest stock in the county. Took the First Prize at Flesherton show on Sept. 22nd and 23rd. Miss Fraine, the popular elocutionist, charmed and delighted the people who attended the social in the Methodist church here on Friday night last with her powers as a public reciter. She always does carry Flesherton audiences by storm anyway. Mr. R. Trimble occupied the chair with becoming dignity. On the whole an enjoyable evening was spent.

Charley Varty and two other boys were driving a horse and cart over the Boyne bridge here on Friday last, when the animal suddenly turned and plunged down the steepest part of the embankment—12 or 15 feet feet deep. Charley was thrown some distance on the hard ground with great violence, and sustained some bruises and a severe shaking up. The other boys escaped unhurt by jumping from the cart. One shaft of the cart was smashed, but the horse escaped uninjured. It was a miracle of miracles that there were no fatalities.

Mr. W. H. Bewell, Grand Scribe of the Sons of Temperance in Ontario, was in Flesherton last Thursday, and called upon a number of members of the Division here. He instituted a new Division at Lady Bank last week, which promises to become quite a flourishing institution. He also attended the District Division at Badgeros, a full account of which appeared in last week's ADVANCE. Mr. Bewell entertains a very favorable impression of the people of this locality. He speaks in glowing terms of the past history and future prospects of the Sons of Temperance and is evidently a very zealous and patient worker in the interests of that Society as well as of the cause of Temperance generally.

A somewhat amusing incident occurred in this locality recently. A dispute arose between two shrewd but respectable young business men concerning a small debt of 50 cents. We will designate them as Mr. A. and Mr. B. for convenience. Mr. A. alleged that Mr. B. owed him that amount, and the latter denied the soft impeachment. Shortly afterwards Mr. B. moved to a neighboring town, when a mee little dodge suggested itself to Mr. A. "I'll get even with him," said he. Forthwith he filled a box with papers and various kinds of rubbish and expressed it C.O.D. to Mr. B. Somehow the latter got wind of the affair and when the box arrived, refused to take it. It was then re-shipped to Mr. A., who had 50 cents express charges to pay. And this is how Mr. A. "got even" with Mr. B.!

The finest stock of Watches, Clocks, Jewelry, Silverware in the county is to be found at Russell's Noted Jewelry Store, Flesherton. It took first prize at Flesherton fall fair. It will pay you to call and secure some of the bargains they are giving for the next 30 days.

The Harvest Home Festival, held in the Methodist church, Flesherton, on Wednesday evening of last week, was a financial success. The splendid spread in the basement of the church was very creditable to the ladies, while the agricultural decorations were the tastiest and best ever seen here. The success of the [illegible] was largely due to the assistance of our neighboring farmers, who worked [illegible] and persevered from first to last. The musical and literary parts of the programme rendered considerable interest and much favorable comment was indulged in by the audience in connection therewith. The Choir received a graceful and earnest compliment from Rev. Mr. Shilton for the manner in which they acquitted themselves. The selections by the Flesherton Glee Club were well adapted to the occasion and the rendering thereof created much enthusiasm. Mr. Thos. Boland, of Meaford Road, occupied the chair, and the following gentlemen delivered addresses, viz., Mr. Thos. Kells, Dr. Christoe, Mr. Thorp Wright, Mr. Wm. Buchanan, and Rev. Thos. Watson. The speech of the evening was made by Rev. Mr. Watson, whose remarkable originality of thought and common sense language has won for him a foremost place in the ranks of our best platform speakers. The Brass Band assisted. Shortly after 10 o'clock the people were dismissed with the benediction.

If you want a First Prize Watch, and one that will keep time properly, you will have to call at Russell's Noted Jewelry Store, Flesherton. Watches warranted from 3 to 5 years.

Readers of THE ADVANCE will notice on the fifth page of our paper this week the mammoth "Fall Announcement" of that enterprising firm of General Merchants, Messrs. M. Richardson & Co., of Flesherton. This firm enjoys a county reputation and is noted for its honest and straightforward dealings with its many customers throughout the lengths and breadths of this district. One fact we would call special attention to, and it is this: Everything advertised by them through the newspapers or by means of any other medium, will be found—however searching the investigation—exactly as represented. They carry a magnificent stock in every department of their business.

If you want a First Prize Watch, and one that will keep time properly, you will have to call at Russell's Noted Jewelry Store, Flesherton. Watches warranted from 3 to 5 years.

If you want to secure some first prize Watches, Clocks and Jewelry at wholesale prices, you will do well to call at Russell's Noted Jewelry Store, Flesherton, within the next 30 days.

Died.

RUTLEDGE.—In Flesherton, at the residence of M. Richardson, Esq., on Thursday, Sept. 29th, Mrs. Jane Rutledge, sr., nee McFarland, aged 75 years.

The funeral, which took place on Saturday, was chiefly attended by relatives. At request of deceased (prior to her death) it was to be as quiet and unostentatious as possible, and her request was sacredly observed. The memorial sermon was preached here on Sunday evening by Rev. Mr. Shilton, from the words found in Ruth 1c. and first clause of verse 17th, viz., "Where thou liest will I die, and there will I be buried." According to custom, relatives of deceased occupied front seats. It is scarcely necessary to add, that a powerful and soul-stirring sermon—full of bright and cheerful thoughts—was preached. Dr. Christoe, who was with deceased during her last illness, spoke for some time concerning her pure life, godly example, pious conversation, and glorious death. Deceased leaves a family of grown up children, a number of grand children, and great grandchildren to cherish her memory. Of her children we might mention Mr. W. J. McFarland, of Markdale, and Mrs. M. Richardson, of Flesherton—both well-known to ADVANCE readers. Although not personally acquainted with the subject of this brief notice, we have on more than one occasion been charmed and delighted with the great interest she took in amusing a number of little children who where playing in Flesher's Park here. This may seem a little thing; but "little things" are often faithful indexes of character.

The finest stock of Watches, Clocks, Jewelry, Silverware in the county, is to be found at Russell's Noted Jewelry Store, Flesherton. It took first prize at Flesherton fall fair. It will pay to call and secure some of the bargains they are giving for the next 30 days.

Ward, recently incumbent of this Parish and now of Millbank, to Miss Fanny Ford, eldest daughter of Mr. J. W. Ford. The marriage service was conducted in Christ Church at 7 a. m., the present Incumbent, Rev. Mr. Graham, officiating.—Markdale Standard.

A Song of Rest.

O weary hands! that, all the day,
Were set to labor hard and long,
Now softly falls the shadows gray,
The bells are rung for even song,
An hour ago the golden sun
Sank slowly down into the west;
Poor, weary hands, your toil is done;
'Tis time for rest! 'tis time for rest!

O weary feet! that many a mile
Have trudged along a stony way,
At last ye reached the trysting stile;
No longer fear to go astray.
The gentle bending, rustling trees
Rock the young birds within the nest,
And softly sings the quiet breeze:
"'Tis time for rest! 'tis time for rest!"

O weary eyes! from which the tears
Fell many a time like thunder rain—
O weary heart! that through the years
Beat with such bitter restless pain,
To-night forget the stormy strife,
And know what heaven shall send is best;
Lay down the tangled web of life;
'Tis time for rest! 'tis time for rest!

SIR HUGH'S LOVES.

"It was he who implanted in me a thirst for knowledge; all the leisure moments he could snatch from his own studies were devoted to mine. During his college terms he corresponded with me, and planned out my work during his absence, sparing himself neither time nor pains; and from the night he carried me in, poor weary child, to the light and radiance of his peaceful home—he seemed to have adopted me peculiarly, until it came to be understood at the Grange that Crystal was Raby's darling and belonged especially to him.

"I think that if Margaret had not been endowed with that singular unselfishness that belonged to her nature she must have missed something out of her life; once she had been everything to her brother, but now it was Crystal! Crystal who must bring him his books, and hunt out the words in the dictionary. Crystal who must tidy his papers, and lay the little spray of flowers beside his plate at breakfast. Crystal who must go with him on his rounds among the sick and aged—for true to the priestly office to which he proposed to dedicate himself, the young undergraduate already devoted a portion of his time to deeds of charity. Little by little in my childish selfishness I stole from her her sweetest privileges; the many little offices with which a loving woman delights to minister to the objects of her affection, be they father, brother or husband.

"I took the stool at his feet, the low chair at his side, but she never complained; for the brother and sister understood each other most truly. In their quiet looks, I have read a mutual assurance that spoke of perfect trust and undiminished affection; Margaret could never be jealous of Raby, or Raby of Margaret.

"Raby had very peculiar notions on the subject of female education.

"Mine, for example, was carried on in rather a desultory fashion. I was not fretted by restraint, or made stupid by long tasks; just sufficient knowledge was imparted to excite my reasoning powers and arouse the desire for more. 'Let her learn,' he would say, 'but let her learn as the bird learns to sing.' And when Margaret, in her gentle way, sighed over my lamentable ignorance of all feminine acquirements and household method:

"'Let her be!' he would reply, with masculine peremptoriness, 'we must not force nature. When the time comes for her womanly instincts to develop, not an English matron or even our own clever Margaret will excel Crystal then.' And still, more strange to say, he rather stimulated than repressed my vanity; and so I grew up quite conscious of my own personal attractions; but without the knowledge having undue weight with me.

"From the first he would have me dressed in the quaint rich style in which I came to them first.

"'It suits her peculiar style of beauty,' I heard him once say, when Margaret remonstrated with him on the extravagance of the idea. I was curled up on the window seat, reading, and they did not think I was listening.

"'Raby is right,' observed Uncle Rolf; 'she will never make a quiet-looking English girl like our Maggie here—were you to dress her as a Puritan or a Quaker; ah, she will break hearts enough I'll warrant with those dark witch eyes of hers; we must be careful of the child! If Bianca's beauty were like her daughter's one cannot wonder much at poor Edmund's choice.'

"Something in my uncle's speech aroused my childish petulance. I closed my book and came forward.

"'I don't want to break any hearts!' I cried, angrily; 'I only want Raby's—I am going to belong to Raby all my life, I will never leave him, never!' and I stamped my foot in a little fury.

"They all laughed, Uncle Rolf long and merrily, but Raby colored up as he smiled.

"'That's right, darling,' he said, in a low voice. 'Now go back to your book.' And I went at once obediently.

"When I bade him good-night that evening, and stood lingering by his chair on some pretext or other, he suddenly took hold of me, and drew me towards him.

"'Little Crystal,' he said, 'you think you love Raby indeed; I am sure you do, and Heaven knows how sweet your childish affection is to me; but do you know — will you ever know how Raby loves you?' and putting his hands on my head he bade God bless my innocent face, and let me go.

"Oh, those delicious days of my childhood. But they are gone—they are gone! Long rambles on the sea-shore with Margaret, and in the corn-fields with Raby; now nutting in the copse or gathering briar roses in the lanes; setting out our strawberry feast under the great elm-tree on the lawn, or picking up fir-cones in the Redmond avenue. Spring flowers, and autumn sunset—bright halcyon days of my youth made glorious with love.

"For as yet no shadow of the future had fallen upon me, no taint of that inherited passion had revealed itself; perhaps nothing had occurred to rouse the dormant temper lulled by the influence of this happy home. But the time came soon enough. Shall I ever forget that day?

"It was during the Eastern vacation—I must have been nearly 13 then. Raby had been unwell; some low feverish attack had seized him, and he was just ill enough to lie on the sofa all day and be petted and waited upon. I was perfectly happy from morning to night; I devoted myself to his amusement; reading to him, talking to him or even sitting silently beside him while he slept.

"'Our Crystal is getting quite a woman,' he said once when I turned his hot pillow and put the cooling drink beside him; and at that brief word of praise my face flushed with pleasure, and I felt amply rewarded.

"She was a tall, striking-looking girl, much handsomer than her sister Emily, and she must have been two or three years older than Raby. She always seemed to like his society, so; while the others talked to Uncle Rolf and Margaret, she sat on my low chair beside Raby's couch, and talked to him without seeming to notice any one else.

"Miss Vyvie was very handsome and a flirt, and Raby was only a young man.

"It would hardly have been natural if he had not seemed gratified by her interest in him, though I did not know until afterwards that he valued it at its true cost.

"Still she was pleasant and her little airs amused him, and he entered into a long conversation with some enjoyment, and for once I was forgotten. I tried to join in once or twice, but Miss Vyvie treated me as a child, and scarcely deigned to notice me; but Raby did not seem to resent the indifference or want of courtesy.

"'He only cares for me when others are not by,' I thought, and my heart began to swell with jealous emotion. But just before she left something occurred that fanned the envious spark into a flame.

"Her white hand was resting on the little table that stood beside the couch. There was a diamond ring on her finger that flashed as she moved; presently she stretched it out to Raby with a bewitching smile.

"'Oh, what lovely lilies of the valley,' she exclaimed, pointing to the flowers; 'they are the first I have seen this year. I adore lilies, they are perfectly exquisite. Do let me have them, Mr. Ferrers. I know they grew in the garden, and I shall keep them as a memento of Sandycliffe and the dear Grange. Come, you must not let me break the tenth commandment and covet any longer,' and the fair girlish hand rested near the flowers as she spoke.

"Raby looked embarrassed and hesitated.

"I had gathered those lilies for him before the dew was off them. They grew in a little nook of the Redmond grounds; they were the favorite flowers, and I had walked all those miles to hunt for them.

"'Come,' she said, 'surely you will not refuse me, Mr. Ferrers,' and her smile was very winning; and Raby, though reluctant, laid the little spray of lilies in her hand. He could hardly have done otherwise, but I was too young to know that.

"'There, she has gone at last, the pretty chatterbox,' he exclaimed, with a yawn of real or pretended weariness as the door closed upon our visitors. 'Crystal, my child, come here; I have not heard your voice for the last hour. Tell me what you think of Miss Vyvie; is she not a lively young lady?'

"I made him no answer. I was past it.

"Oh, if I had only gone silently out of the room to recover myself. If he had not spoken to me just then. He started when he saw my face.

"'Crystal, my dear child, what is the matter?' and then—then it burst forth. Oh, my God, I must have been beside myself. Surely some demon must have entered into my childish heart before I could have poured forth that torrent of passionate invective and reproach.

"They had never witnessed such a scene. Margaret, sweet soul, cried and trembled as she heard me, and Uncle Rolf grew quite pale.

"'That child,' he cried, 'Edmund's child!' and his voice was full of horror; but Raby rose slowly from his couch, and without a word he led me from the room.

"I do not know whether I yielded to that firm touch, or whether his strength compelled me; but still silent he took me up to my room and left me there.

"Oh, the awfulness of that mute reproach, the sternness of that pale face; it recalled me to myself sooner than any word would have done. Almost before the door closed my passion had spent itself, and then the agony of shame and despair that followed! I had forfeited his good opinion for ever. He would never love me again! If I could die—oh, impious prayer that I prayed—if I could only die! But I would never see his face again. I would go where they could never find me, where I would never grieve them more.

"Fern, it was a strange feature that marked those passionate fits of mine; but I never yielded to them afterwards without the same desire seizing me to go away and see them no more; and but for the watchful care that surrounded me at those times I should often have escaped.

"It came upon me now, this horror of restraint, and overmastered me. To my fancy, I seemed to feel the walls falling in upon me in judgment for my sin. I was suffocated, and yet restless. Oh to be away, I thought, to be away from those reproachful faces; and I rushed down stairs, through the house, and down the yew-tree walk; but the garden door into the lane was locked, and at that slight obstacle I shivered and lay down on the grass and crushed my face against the ground, and felt like some youthful Cain, branded with unextinguishable shame.

"I had lost Raby's love. I had forfeited his respect. There lay the unbearable sting. Never should I forget that pale stern face, and the unspoken reproach in those dark eyes.

"'Oh, I cannot bear it,' I cried; I cannot, cannot, bear it.'

"'My child,' said Raby's grave voice close to me, 'if you are sorry, and your grief tells me you are, you must ask pardon of our Father in heaven.

"'Then—may a merciful God forgive me for my blasphemy,'—I cried, 'not His, but yours, Raby. I cannot live without your love;' and then I was almost choked with my sobs.

"'Crystal,' he said, with a heavy sigh, 'can this be my child, whom I have taught and guided, my child for whom I have prayed every night;' and touched by the gentleness of his tone I crept a little nearer and clasped his feet.

"'I can never be forgiven,' I sobbed. 'What has heaven to do with such a sinner as I?'

"'Ah, little one,' he answered, 'have not I forgiven thee, and I was stretched on no cross for thy sake;' and then, kneeling down by my side, he raised my wet face from the grass, and laid it gently on his arm and kissed it, and then I knew I was forgiven.

"Never, never shall I forget how he talked to me—and yet he was ill—as a brother and a priest too! How he helped me to bear the terror of the sin and the shame of my repentance; how, without removing one jota of its guilt or one dread of its probable consequences, he led me to the one consolation. 'Thy sins, even thine, shall be forgiven thee,' and then he took me back into the house, cast down indeed and humbled, but no longer despairing, and led me to Uncle Rolf.

"'Father,' he said, still holding my hand, perhaps because he felt how I trembled, 'father, Crystal has come to ask your pardon and Margaret's also for the pain she has caused you both, and to say that, with God's help, she will never offend so again.'

"Never! oh Raby, never! when the inborn enemy was strong as death and cruel as the grave, Oh, my good angel, Raby, what have the years written against me—against me—your unhappy child?"

CHAPTER XXIV.

A GRAVE DECISION.

From the day
I brought to England my poor searching face
(An orphan even of my father's grave);
He had loved me, watched me, watched his soul in mine,
Which in me grew, and heightened into love.
Elizabeth Barrett Browning.

"The years rolled by, but, alas! they borught no added happiness with them. The taint in my nature that had revealed itself so unexpectedly only developed more strongly as time went on; at rare intervals—very rare I am thankful to say—fierce gusts of passion over-mastered my reason, so that for a brief time I seemed like one possessed with an evil spirit.

"They tried everything—everything that human wisdom and kindness could devise to save me from myself, but in vain. All causes for offence were removed, and every means taken to ward off the threatened excitement; but when the paroxysms came, they wasted no words, no severity upon me, they simply left me to myself.

"But the punishment that followed was a terrible one. For days and days after one of these outbreaks, sometimes for a week together, Raby would refuse to speak to me or to hold any communication at all.

"Our walks and rides, our pleasant studies, were all broken off, every little office and attention refused, my remarks met by a chilling manner that drove me to silence.

"Left completely to my own society, I wandered aimlessly about the house or sat moping over my books or work in a corner. I never sought to rebel against the rigor of my sentence; it was a just one I knew, and I bore it patiently as I could. And then all at once, sometimes when I least expected it, when I was most hopeless and forlorn, a hand would be placed on my head in the old caressing manner, and a low 'forgiven darling,' would bring me back to sunshine and happiness; but, oh, how he suffered. I never knew until afterwards that his punishment was even greater than mine.

"I am speaking now of my younger days, but presently there came a time when they treated it less as a fault than a malady; when Raby dreaded the repentance more than the paroxysm, for so poignant was my anguish of remorse that it threatened to prey on my health.

"Then, when they saw how I wept and strove against it, and how the torment of my own undisciplined nature was more than I could bear, then they grew to look upon me as one upon whom some deadly scourge was laid—some moral sickness that they could not understand, indeed, but which, out of their great love, they could afford to pity.

"Years rolled on. Raby had passed through his University life with honors; had gained a fellowship, and had taken orders, and accepted a curacy some distance from Sandycliffe.

"It was only a temporary position, until the church at Sandycliffe had been restored and was ready for use; the living had been already promised to him, and small as it was, he wished to hold it, at least for the present. Raby was a man singularly devoid of ambition, and though he must have been conscious that his were no common gifts, he always told us that he did not wish a wider sphere until he had tested his powers, and had worked a little in the home vineyard.

"At this time he was much occupied with his studies, and some doctrinal treatise on which he was engaged; and as only Sunday duty was required of him, he was able to be with us from Monday to Saturday, a great boon to us as Uncle Rolf's health was failing, and his son's constant presence was a great comfort to him. He died when I was about fifteen, and then Raby became master of the Grange.

"The next two years that followed were, in spite of my dear uncle's loss, very happy ones.

"The fits of passion became more rare and decreased in violence, and for a time ceased altogether. It seemed to be coming true what Raby had once prophesied, that I should outgrow them when I became a woman.

"That was our chief joy; but later on, after a year or so, Hugh Redmond came more frequently to the Grange, and by and by Margaret and he were engaged. Raby gave his consent rather reluctantly, he always told me he did not consider him worthy of a woman like Margaret, he thought him weak and impulsive and without ballast; but Margaret had lost her heart to her handsome young lover, and could see no fault in him, and for a time all went smoothly; but I am anticipating a little.

"The event that stands prominently in my recollection was a ball that was to be given in honor of young Egerton Trelawney, the eldest son of a wealthy merchant living at Pierrepoint. Margaret was going, and of course Hugh Redmond would be there, but they were not engaged then. Margaret had induced Raby to let me accompany her, for I was nearly seventeen then, and very womanly for my age. He consented rather reluctantly, I thought, and the subject dropped. Another time I should have tried to extort a more gracious permission, for my heart was set on the ball; but for some time I had noticed a slight change in Raby's manner to me, an imperceptible reserve that made me a little less at my ease with him; it was not that he failed in kindness, for he had never been so good to me, but there was certainly a slight barrier between us. He ceased to treat me as a child, there was a something deferential in his tenderness; his eyes had a keen watchful look in them as they rested on me that perplexed me.

"I was beginning not to understand Raby at all; either he was not quite happy, or I had disappointed him in some way; and yet, though I longed to question him, an unusual shyness held me back.

"It was the evening before the ball, and Raby was in the library so absorbed in his Hebrew manuscript that for once he had not missed me from my accustomed place.

"The new ball dress Margaret had ordered for me in London had just arrived, and she had coaxed me to put down my book and try it on in case any alterations should be required. I had never seen any gown I liked better; the rich creamy tint just set off my olive complexion and coils of black hair to perfection. I was quite startled when I saw myself in the long pier glass; my neck and arms were gleaming through the dainty cobwebby lace, a ruby pendant sparkled like a crimson star at my throat. Margaret was enchanted.

"'Oh, Crystal,' she exclaimed, 'how beautiful you look, just like an Esther or Vashti with their grand oriental faces. Come down with me and let us startle Raby from his dusty old folios; he will think he sees a vision.'

"I followed her smiling; I was pleased that Raby should see me in this queenly garb. I stole gently behind his chair. 'Oh, king, live for ever,' I said, laughing, and then he turned around; and as I dropped him a mocking curtesy, he tried to suppress the exclamation that rose to his lips.

"'Shall I do?' I continued, mischievously; 'shall I do, Raby?' and I made a sweeping obeisance to him such as Esther might have made to Ahasuerus, but no like sceptre of favor was extended to me.

"'Yes, you will do very nicely,' he said, curtly, and then he went back to his folios. But I had seen the expression in his eyes, the long wistful look he had cast at me, and I triumphed.

"But my triumph was of brief duration. The next morning Raby treated me with almost chilling reserve. In vain I laughed and talked, and strove to win him to merriment; his manner repelled all such attempts, and I was obliged to chat with Margaret.

"'Where are you going?' I asked presently, when he had closed his books and was preparing to leave the room.

"'I am going up to West Point to see poor Lettie White,' he returned; 'her mother has been down this morning and tells me she is worse. You had better not accompany me, Crystal,' for I had started up from my chair.

"'And why not?' I exclaimed in a hurt voice; 'it is such a delicious morning, and there is no such place as the West Point for a breeze; it will freshen me up for the evening.'

"'Well, do as you like,' he returned, coldly, and closed the door. The indifference of his tone wounded me. What could I have done to offend him; but I was never proud where Raby was concerned, so I put on my hat and accompanied him.

"For the first mile or two we were very silent. Raby walked on with his shoulders slightly bent, and his eyes fixed on the ground, a habit of his when he was thinking deeply.

"'Raby,' I said at last, rather timidly, 'I wish you would walk a little slower, I want to talk to you;' and then he looked at me with some surprise.

"'I was only thinking of my next Sunday's sermon,' he replied as if in apology for his want of attention. 'I told you you had better not come with me, Crystal.'

"'Oh, I know you did not want me,' I answered, lightly; your manner made that fact very apparent; but you see I wanted to come, and so I had my own way. Of course I know what text you will choose, Raby. What a pity it is too far for me to come and hear that sermon. To think that neither Margaret or I have ever heard you preach, and to lose that sermon of all others.

"'What do you mean?' he answered, rather irritably, for my gay mood was clashing with his sombre one.

"'Oh, the text will be, "Vanity of vanities, saith the preacher. All is vanity"; that will be your subject, Raby, will it not?'

"He turned round at that, and a smile dispelled his gravity; and then he took my hand and put it on his arm, and held it gently there.

"'I think you have guessed my thoughts, Crystal,' he said, quietly, 'but not all of them. Do you know I have been thinking as we came along that you and I, dear child, have reached the cross roads of life at last, where each must choose his or her path, and go on their way alone.'

"'Oh, Raby,' I exclaimed in some distress as I pressed closer to him: 'what can you mean by saying anything so dreadful I hope your path and mine will always be the same.'

"'My dear,' he returned gently—very gently; but there was pain and some strange solemn meaning in his face—'I disappointed you last night. You thought that I would not praise your finery or stoop to flatter your innocent vanity, that I held aloof from your girlish pleasure. Ah,' with a sudden change of tone, 'you little know what brilliant vision haunted me last night and drove sleep from my eyes; how it lured and tempted me from my sense of right; but God had mercy on His poor priest, and strengthened his hands in the day of battle.'

"The white abstracted look of his face, the low vehemence of his tone, thrilled me almost painfully; never had Raby looked or spoken like that.

"'No, my darling,' he went on sorrowfully, 'I will never wrong the child I have guided and protected all these years, or take advantage of your youth and inexperience, by using my influence and condemning you to a life for which you are not fitted. Go forth into the world then, my Esther—did not Margaret compare you to Esther—make experience of its pleasures, its trials, its seductions, its false wooings, and its dazzling honors; if they tell you your beauty might win a coronet they would be right.'

"'Raby!'

"'Hush! let me finish; go into the world that claims you, but if it fail to please you—if it ever cast you away humbled and broken hearted, then come back to me, my darling, come back to Raby; he will be praying for you here.'

"Shall I ever forget his tone; my tears fell fast as I listened to him.

"'What do you mean?' I sobbed; 'how have I offended you? Why do you propose to send me away from you?'

Death of the Maharanee Dhuleep Singh.

London World: I regret to say that the Maharanee Dhuleep Singh, who has been in failing health, died somewhat suddenly on Friday. The Maharanee always conciliated, showed much good feeling, and was a favorite with the Queen. She was a Levantine woman with a strain of Abyssinian blood in her veins. She refused to associate herself with the Maharajah's continental vagaries. Her sons acted with similar good sense, and Prince Victor, now a cadet at Sandhurst, bids fair to become a popular British officer and country gentleman. Probably the Maharanee's death will not produce much effect upon the wholom Suffolk magnate and member of the Carlton Club. Dhuleep Singh has shown himself more eager to sever every connection with his old life the more desperate his fortunes have become. They have reached a low ebb since his protector, Katkoff, died, and the official Russian Government is understood to be by no means enamored of his offers, nor will the last effort of the Moscow Gazette this week to lift him into prominence have much effect beyond accentuating his political insignificance.

Too Old for Miss Lucy.

The following story is told of a Virginia gentleman, rather advanced in life, who was about to be united in marriage to a lady very much his junior. Going to make her a visit just before their wedding, her old colored mammy came courtesying into the parlor, eager to make the acquaintance of the future lord and master of her young lady. "Well, Aunt Chloe," said the gentleman in question, after the preliminary greeting had been gotten through with, "what do you think of Miss Lucy's choice, now you've seen him?"

"I likes you mighty well, Mars' John, fur as I've seen you," replied Aunt Chloe, after a moment's deliberation; "but you's too old for Miss Lucy."

"Too old, Aunt Chloe!" exclaimed the gentleman, somewhat discomfited by Aunt Chloe's unexpected candor. "You don't know what you're talking about" (straightening himself up). "Why, I'm just in my prime."

"Yes, sir, I sees you is," replied the still unconvinced Aunt Chloe; "but when Miss Lucy gits in her prime, whar you gwine be den?"

An Alleged Absconsion.

The latest absconsion of prominence in the Western district is reported by the London Free Press from Strathroy, in the person of Mr. L. R. Richardson, the well-known cheese dealer, whose absence from his usual business haunts since Thursday week has occasioned considerable talk in commercial and other circles. Mr. Richardson was a prominent operator on the London, Ingersoll and Woodstock cheese markets, and in his adopted town was recognized as an energetic, pushing man. He was an unsuccessful opponent, in the Conservative interest, of Mr. John Watterworth for the representation of West Middlesex in the Ontario Legislature several years since, and took an active interest in party politics.

The Debt Had Been Standing a Year.

"Dear Sir:

"Your little account has been standing now over a year. Please send a cheque and oblige."

Hardened debtor replies:

"Dear Sir:

"If that little account is tired of standing, let it sit down. Yours."

The Long and Short of It.

"Do you know," said a dignified-looking man, "that I never tasted whiskey?"

"No," was the reply. "I know lots of fellers that gulp it down quick that way, but somehow I could always get more enjoyment out of it by lettin' it go slow, unless it's clear pizen."—Washington Critic.

Thicken your piano singing; broaden without breaking your declamation. Practice various ways of singing same passage. Avoid monotony; let your emotional nature color your voice; practice the passions vocally. Learn to use your voice. Sit at anybody's feet. Delight yourself in finding out your failings. It is interesting to note just at this time that a new translation of "Shakspeare's plays" has been made in Dutch. Burgersdyk, the famous poet of Holland, has made the translation, which is said to be a work of art. His "Macbeth" was recently given before a brilliant audience at an Amsterdam theatre and received great applause. The popularity of Shakspeare in Holland and Germany is remarkable.

Miss Alice Henry, of Aspen, Col., discovered a large bear near her father's cabin recently. She was alone, but thought she could kill the bear. Taking a rifle, she waited until bruin was busy devouring a pig, and then lodged a bullet in his brain. He weighed 600 pounds.

According to the Lancet a discovery has just been made of great importance to those in the neighborhood of consumptive patients. Some flies which had been seen to enter spittoons containing the sputum of phthisical patients were caught and examined, when it was found that they were full of tubercle bacilli. This indicates that the disease may be widely spread by this means.

ARTEMUS WARD.

One of His Droll Letters Published for the First Time.

The following letter from Artemus Ward to a little Elmira girl, and recently published for the first time, is in the possession of an Elmira (N. Y.) gentleman.

SALEM, Mass., June 13, 1864.—My Dear Amelia: I cannot tell you how much I miss you.

It seems as though I had lost all my relatives, including my grandmother and the cooking stove.

Why didn't I put you in a bottle and bring you down here with me? But I am always forgetting something. The other day I went off and forgot my aunt Sarah, and she's a good deal bigger than you are. Mr. Ramsay is also a very forgetful man. He frequently goes off and forgets his washerwoman. Mr. Ramsay is a very fine looking man. He reminds me of Mr. Green, the Malden murderer. When Mr. Ramsay goes to the penitentiary, which will be very soon, we must send him doughnuts, magazines and other literary documents. Mr. Ramsey can read print very well.

I like you very much. I should like you just as well if you were 12 years older. I am very singular about some things.

You spoke to me about a boy who is my rival. I should feel very sorry to kill that boy, but he may drive me to it. I am in hopes that he will take himself into a premature tomb—that he will choke himself with a large slice of pudding; but if he does neither I shall feel forced to load him with chains and read all my lectures to him. That will finish him. His boots may remain, but the rest will have perished miserably long ere I get through!

You must be a good little girl and always mind your mother. Never let your excellent mother feel sorry that she is acquainted with you. If it hadn't been for her you might have drowned in a soup plate long ago. And if you hadn't ever had any mother you might be a Turkey with the Turkeys. In fact, my dear Amelia, so conduct yourself that even on dark and rainy days the bright sun may shine wherever you are, and that the stars (which are next to the sun in brightness) may never flash so brightly but that you can always look steadily and hopefully toward them. Faithfully your friend,

A. WARD.

The Provincial Prize Takers.

The annual meeting of the Agriculture and Arts Association of Ontario was held in Ottawa yesterday. The report on the prize farm competition in Group No. 1 awarded prizes as follows: Gold medal to John Fothergill, Burlington, County of Halton; first silver medal, Jos. E. McMichael, Waterford, Norfolk; second silver medal, C. Barker, Paris Station, Brant; bronze medals to each of the following: J. E. Brethour, Burford, Brant; R. Trinder, Simcoe; John R. Martin, Cayuga; J. C. Shaw, Woodburn, Wentworth; D. H. Horton, North Pelham, Monk; G. Barre, Waterloo.

The Education Committee reported that eight candidates, five second class and three third class, took the examinations in agriculture, and the following six certificates were granted: Second class, F. J. Sleightholm, Brampton; C. R. Stevenson, Fingal; J. Bowman, Mount Forest; M. C. Egan, Courtwright, and J. F. Bridgman, Smithville. John G. Tukster, Capetown, received a second class certificate.

The committee appointed to award prizes to essays on the construction of farm buildings reported the first prize to Thos. Shaw, of this city, and the second to D. McPherson. John Kay was commended and awarded a third prize.

Shoemakers' Secrets.

An old shoemaker tells the St. Louis Globe Democrat of a trick or two in shoemaking which he learned when he was a boy, which appears to be still hidden mysteries to a lot of the fashionable shoemakers. One of these concerns not only the appearance of the shoe but the comfort of the wearer. How many times do you see men's big toes rising in high relief impressions above the surface of the upper? Naturally you feel that the wearer of such a shoe must suffer from the pressure on his big toe, and he does; if not immediately, at some time in the future. The whole difficulty can be obviated by providing a depression in the sole of the shoe into which the toe will fit. This depression is obtained by fastening a piece on the last and beating the sole around it until it is moulded into it. When the toe is thus cared for there will be no ingrowing toe-nails and no unsightly protrusions of the upper. Another thing that may be interesting to shoe wearers and shoemakers is this: A blistered or sore heel caused by a new shoe may be relieved by taking a small piece of common newspaper, crushing it in the hand and placing it under the ailing heel. The bit of paper has the effect of a "lift," and forcing the foot forward in the shoe leaves the heel entirely free from the counter.

The New Universal Language.

The latest appearance of the question of Thou vs. You is in the Volapuk Congress held last month in Munich. In Volapuk all the pronouns begin with o and form the following series:

Singular.	Plural.
1. Ob—I.	1. Obe—we.
2. Ol—thou.	2. Ole—you.
3. Om—he.	3. Oms, Ofs } they.
Of—she.
Os—it.

Indefinite.
On—one, everybody.

Besides these, Father Schleyer gave in his grammar a form of politeness, "ons," but hoped that Volapukists would address each other by the more brotherly "ol." The Germans were the only ones who seemed to think it necessary to have a form of courtesy, and the Volapuk periodicals have had a lively but good natured discussion of the matter. But, although the Munich Congress had a larger number of Germans than of any other nationality present, yet it was resolved, after a warm debate, that the word "ons" no longer exists in Volapuk, and all Volapukists must employ "ol" in the singular and "ols" in the plural. Thus the knell of feudalism has sounded!—Home Journal.

—"Is there anything more dreadful than dyspepsia, doctor?" asked Mr. Branbread. "There is," interrupted Mrs. Branbread. "What is it, then?" inquired the doctor. "The man who has it," said Mrs. B.

A ROMANCE IN REAL LIFE.

The Part Love Played in an Albany Merchant's Life.

Thirty-five years ago Mr. Barrington Lodge, of this city, was a resident of St. John's, Nfld. Another resident of the same city was Miss Christine Graham, a belle in society. Foremost among her suitors were Mr. Lodge and Mr. Strachan. The pretty Chrissie seemed to favor Lodge, but he was poor. Realizing that he could not furnish the young lady with a home befitting her station he did not press his suit, and the result was that Miss Chrissie was married to Mr. Strachan. Mr. Lodge emigrated to this city and started in the knit-goods business as a clerk. He soon became a member of the firm of Lodge, Sheldon & Co. Although he still held in remembrance his early love he deemed her lost to him, and some years ago married Anna Scott, and established himself in a handsome residence on Hill Place. Their domestic happiness was unmarred until the death of his wife, two years ago. Meanwhile Mr. and Mrs. Strachan had removed to Ballarat, Australia, where Mr. Strachan engaged in business. He accumulated a large fortune and died a few years ago. About a year ago Mrs. Strachan learned from her brother in Newfoundland where Mr. Lodge was located, and that he was alone in the world. The old love had not yet died out in her heart. She wrote to him suggesting that if the recollection of the past still warmed his heart she would like to hear from him. He answered the letter and a correspondence ensued, in the course of which he elicited an expression of her desire to come on and see him and marry him. He wrote back that if she was ready to accept the old man she could come on and he would meet her at Buffalo. She did not hesitate, but arranging her affairs, started on July 1st on the journey of 10,000 miles. She came by the way of Auckland, New Zealand, Sydney and the Sandwich Islands to San Francisco by steamer, and thence by rail to Buffalo, where she arrived on Tuesday and found Mr. Lodge in waiting. He found her changed, it is true. Thirty-five years effect many changes, but it was into a matronly, well-preserved woman, who still retained a generous proportion of the beauty possessed by her in girlhood. In him she found a still active and vigorous man, with clear brown eyes, an erect figure, and the flush of health on his cheek. They were at once married, went to Niagara Falls for a day or two, and then came to Albany to reside in Mr. Logie's elegant residence on Hill Place.—Albany Journal.

It is not generally known that the Prince of Wales regarded with deep affection his old nurse, Mrs. Mary Scarrett, whose death, at a very advanced age, I recorded two or three weeks back. He made a habit of going to see her at least twice a week, and would sit by her bedside for quite a long time. On the last occasion, as he was about to leave, she called him back and begged him to stay a little while longer, calling him by the name of Bertie, as she used to do when he was a little boy. The Prince at once resumed his seat and sat there for some hours, until the old lady had fallen asleep. He then kissed her forehead, and with tears in his eyes, left the room, never to see his valued friend again in life. A bunch of white flowers placed upon Mrs. Scarrett's coffin was gathered by the Prince from the conservatory at Marlborough House and tied with a ribbon by himself.—London Life.

Carrying Decoration Too Far.

Mrs. Graham is an estimable lady whose hobby is house decoration. One day last spring Mrs. Graham was careless enough to drink a glass of red ink, believing it to be claret. She was a good deal scared when she discovered her mistake, but no harm came to her. The doctor who was summoned, upon hearing what had happened, dryly remarked to her: "Mrs. Graham, there's such a thing as pushing this rage for decorated interiors too far."

True Love Running Smoothly.

She—Do you remember that lovely moonlight ride we had at Newport last summer, Charley, behind that cute little donkey?

He (with tender reproach)—Do I remember it, love? As if I could ever forget it!

She—You are nice to say so Charley; and do you know, dear, I never see a donkey without thinking of you.—N. Y. Sun.

Heading Her Off.

Wife (at breakfast)—"I want to do some shopping to-day, dear, if the weather is favorable. What are the 'probabilities'?"

Husband (consulting his paper)—"Rain, hail, thunder and lightning."—Puck.

—Mrs. Woodworth, the faith cure evangelist, says doomsday is only four years distant. Mrs. Woodworth is at present conducting a revival at Decatur, Ill.

After the execution of the murderer Pranzini at Paris, a certain police official obtained a portion of the murderer's skin from an attendant at the medical school and had it converted into a couple of purses, which he presented, one each, to MM. Taylor and Goran, other police officials, as souvenirs. The facts leaking out the latter delivered the purses to the Procurator-General, who dismissed all concerned in the matter.

—"To what do you attribute the curative properties of your spring?" asked a visitor at a health resort. "Well," answered the proprietor thoughtfully, "I guess the advertising I've done has had something to do with it."

—The Town Council of Niagara Falls, Ont., voted recently in favor of waterworks upon the Holly system. It is now discovered that the by-law voted upon has no legal value, owing to the fact that it was not advertised a sufficient length of time. A new by-law is to be submitted.

—"The seats at the circus get narrower every year," remarked a young lady in a horse car the other evening, in the hearing of a Buffalo Courier reporter. "When I was told where to sit down there was not a sign of a seat anywhere, only the laps of two gentlemen." "Did you sit down?" "Why, of course," and there was a lapse in the conversation.

SCENES IN A NILE CITY.

The Crowds of Screaming Arabs Which Besiege the Traveller.

A scene on the Nile is thus described by a writer in Scribner's Magazine: Girls come bearing upon their heads and arms all sorts of articles for sale—eggs, cauliflower, oranges, buffalo milk, lettuce, lentils, living fowls, and what not—such as are stored in abundance upon the dock. Even water is offered for sale. But the crowd which has gathered is far more interesting than their merchandise. The gang-plank is pushed out and you reach the shore. A rush is at once made by the donkey-boys for the traveller, and not until the castigating bamboo of the learned dragoman has been applied to their bare, brown Arab shoulders can the anxious searcher for experience be started up the quay on donkey-back for a "preliminary drive." The town is not yet all awake. Here and there a watchman is found sleeping on his wicker bed in the street or on the portico of a house or bazaar. Farther on groups of early risers are found squatted before a tiny charcoal fire, where they "pool" for breakfast and discuss a dozen dates or a few pumpkin seeds while they watch and wait for the music of the coffee-pot. Even yet it is very quiet. The donkey-boy follows on behind, rather whispering his "oye-pah" than speaking it to his unwilling motor. Occasionally he drops a cabalistic word into the long ears which has the effect of increasing the donkey's speed. "Gehenna" is said to be that awful word. It always seems to be a surprise to the animal, at least, and sometimes causes him to lower his haunches and creep entirely away from his rider. Sorrow and repentance are sure to follow such an occurrence. Now a swirling sound is heard in the air. Your donkey-boy pushes you with your donkey to one side. A lad clothed in white comes running toward you shouting to you to "Get out of the way. Look out for your ears, your eyes, your neck, for my master is coming." Then a white ass appears bearing the sheik of the town. This dignitary, hearing of your arrival, is hastening to the quay to collect his fee for the privilege of driving a stake into his mud. A return to the dahabeeh reveals a swarm of natives, awaiting all on the same mission as that of the sheik. The case is a hopeless one, seemingly, for there is more business than you can attend to and keep faith with the spirit under which the journey was undertaken. Your only salvation is in reciprocity. Hat in hand and with heart-rending voice, therefore, beg backsheesh yourself if you would drive the enemy from you long enough to escape to your deck.

Sir Arthur Blackwood, who returned to Montreal yesterday after a tour over the Canadian Pacific Railway to the Pacific coast, states that in his opinion the C.P.R. route for the mail service to Japan and China would save little in point of time over the Suez Canal route, its advantages being national rather than postal, but admitted that it would be of the utmost value as an alternative route in case of war or European complications.

In the course of the argument of Mr. Hogg, counsel for the Crown in the celebrated Ayer customs case, he yesterday made the startling claim that the Crown might go back twenty years in imposing additional duties and penalties upon the Ayers. The Chief Justice emphatically denounced such a course as iniquitous, and said he would immediately adjourn the case if such a right were asserted for the Crown, but as Mr. Hogg did not press the point the argument proceeded, and was not concluded when the court rose.

CURRENT TOPICS.

THE Boston Traveller tells of the chaplain of a Maine Legislature who, when the body adjourned, repeated these lines, with great emphasis on the final one:

Blow ye the trumpet, blow
The gladly solemn sound;
Let all the nations know,
To earth's remotest bound,
The year of jubilee has come;
Return, ye ransomed sinners, home.

SOME weeks ago Dr. Ralph St. John Perry, a medical missionary in Africa, returned home to Indianapolis, bringing with him a 10-year-old prince, with the intention of educating him. The little fellow has shown such an aversion to school and developed such a violent case of home-sickness that he will be returned home at the first opportunity. He cannot be coaxed to associate with colored youths, regarding them with even more aversion than he does the whites.

WHEN Chang Yen Hoon, the Chinese Minister, reached Philadelphia from Washington a few days ago he was greeted by a crowd of sight-seers at the station. He is a man of medium size and portly figure. He was dressed in a rich silken robe and wore Chinese shoes. On the front of his turban gleamed a great diamond pin. He smoked a cigarette calmly and gazed in a dignified and rather disdainful way on the assembled crowd.

AT the last session of the German Reichstag there was a curious instance of absent-mindedness. Herr Wichmann was calling the roll of members, when, upon reading out his own name, he naturally received no response. He called the name the second time in a louder tone, and finally roared it out like a healthy-lunged bull. At this juncture his colleagues broke out into such hearty laughter that the truth dawned upon him and he joined in the general hilarity.

"IT is one of the essentials of literary success in England that a writer should never go into political life," writes Max Eliot in the Boston Herald. "I was informed that Justin McCarthy had made so many noble sacrifices for the country so near his heart that his partizanship has already cost him dearly in cutting off the sale of his purely literary works, says my well-informed friend, and it has also deprived him of some of his journalistic income. All of which demonstrates the fact that he is not politic, although he is a politician."

FOOTWEAR is cheap. Never were boots and shoes more easily procurable than at the present moment. The improvements in shoe-building material of late years explain the cheapness. A proprietor of a Portland, Me., shoe house said to a reporter a few days ago: "It doesn't take long to make a pair of ladies' shoes. Some time ago a gentleman and his wife walked into our factory, and in just one hour and thirty-three minutes the lady left the house wearing a pair of fine shoes which were made for her from the stock while she was in the factory. These shoes were made on a single set of machinery and passed through the hands of the different operatives at their machines. By running a double set of machinery and crowding the machines our crew of 100 men make 600 pairs of shoes in a day, or one pair of shoes per minute. This is six pairs of shoes to a man."

TWENTY women at the New York Custom House now inspect women's baggage brought from abroad. These searchers are ladies of character—such, for instance, as a widowed sister of ex-Senator Roscoe Conkling, she being one of the twenty. Mrs. Martien, a Cincinnati dressmaker, was put through the needle's eye by these inspectresses on Wednesday. What first seemed amiss was a packet of "soiled clothing." Enwrapped by the clothing aforesaid was a piece of silk that measured 178½ yards. Having discovered the silk, the inspectresses charged upon Mrs. M.'s stronghold—her bustle. In that hive they found a great rob of honey, to wit: Twenty-four pieces of worsted binding, five pieces of black lace, five point lace collars, fifty-four pieces of silk binding, twelve pieces of watered silk ribbon, six jet bead ornaments, a box of perfumery, a silver watch, two pairs of bracelets, a pair of toilet ornaments, a dozen packages of French hooks and eyes, one dress pattern embroidered in tinsel on silk, thirty yards of tinsel-embroidered silk crape, and a black silk dress skirt.

What a Dunce!

I suffered with fever, hot head and foul breath, With stomach disordered—was sick unto death. I bore it a week—surely I was a dunce— Then I took a few "Pellets"—they cured me at once.

May to Bell.

Dear Bell: I'll write you a short letter
To say I'm wonderfully better;
How much that means you ought to know,
Who saw me just one month ago—
Thin, nervous, fretful, white as chalk,
Almost too weak to breathe or talk;
Head throbbing, as if fit for breaking,
A weary, ever-present aching.
But now life seems a different thing:
I feel as glad as bird on wing!
I say, and fear no contradiction,
That Pierce's Favorite Prescription
Is grand! Why, I'd have died without it!
Ma thinks there's no mistake about it.
It's drives all my ills away;
Just come and see! Yours ever, MAY.

The well-known Clydesdale draught stallion owned by Wm. McLellan, of St. Thomas, valued at $3,000, died on Tuesday night of indigestion.

WHAT AILS YOU?

Do you feel dull, languid, low-spirited, lifeless, and indescribably miserable, both physically and mentally; experience a sense of fullness or bloating after eating, or of "goneness," or emptiness of stomach in the morning, tongue coated, bitter or bad taste in mouth, irregular appetite, dizziness, frequent headaches, blurred eyesight, "floating specks" before the eyes, nervous prostration or exhaustion, irritability of temper, hot flushes, alternating with chilly sensations, sharp, biting, transient pains here and there, cold feet, drowsiness after meals, wakefulness, or disturbed and unrefreshing sleep, constant, indescribable feeling of dread, or of impending calamity?

If you have all, or any considerable number of these symptoms, you are suffering from that most common of American maladies—Bilious Dyspepsia, or Torpid Liver, associated with Dyspepsia, or Indigestion. The more complicated your disease has become, the greater the number and diversity of symptoms. No matter what stage it has reached, Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery will subdue it, if taken according to directions for a reasonable length of time. If not cured, complications multiply and Consumption of the Lungs, Skin Diseases, Heart Disease, Rheumatism, Kidney Disease, or other grave maladies are quite liable to set in and, sooner or later, induce a fatal termination.

Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery acts powerfully upon the Liver, and through that great blood-purifying organ, cleanses the system of all blood-taints and impurities, from whatever cause arising. It is equally efficacious in acting upon the Kidneys, and other excretory organs, cleansing, strengthening, and healing their diseases. As an appetizing, restorative tonic, it promotes digestion and nutrition, thereby building up both flesh and strength. In malarial districts, this wonderful medicine has gained great celebrity in curing Fever and Ague, Chills and Fever, Dumb Ague, and kindred diseases.

Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery

Great Eating Ulcers rapidly heal under its benign influence. Especially has it manifested its potency in curing Tetter, Eczema, Erysipelas, Boils, Carbuncles, Sore Eyes, Scrofulous Sores and Swellings, Hip-Joint Disease, "White Swellings," Goitre, or Thick Neck, and Enlarged Glands. Send ten cents in stamps for a large Treatise, with colored plates, on Skin Diseases, or the same amount for a Treatise on Scrofulous Affections.

"FOR THE BLOOD IS THE LIFE."

Thoroughly cleanse it by using Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, and good digestion, a fair skin, buoyant spirits, vital strength and bodily health will be established.

CONSUMPTION,

which is Scrofula of the Lungs, is arrested and cured by this remedy, if taken in the earlier stages of the disease. From its marvelous power over this terribly fatal disease, when first offering this now world-famed remedy to the public, Dr. Pierce thought seriously of calling it his "CONSUMPTION CURE," but abandoned that name as too restrictive for a medicine which, from its wonderful combination of tonic, or strengthening, alterative, or blood-cleansing, anti-bilious, pectoral, and nutritive properties, is unequaled, not only as a remedy for Consumption, but for all Chronic Diseases of the Liver, Blood, and Lungs.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

It having been reported that East Grey Agricultural Society was financially unable to discharge its obligations, the Treasurer authorizes THE ADVANCE to flatly contradict the statement by saying that there are plenty of funds and to spare to pay every cent owing by the Society. People who originate such asinine-like rumors are on a par with the brainless gossips who delight in slandering their neighbors. Spite and envy are the motives in both cases.

If strict justice were done to the Hanover Post—in view of its pilot's statements last week—the following words should be placed at the top of its editorial column:

"O, PILOT 'tis a fearful night!
There's danger on the deep,

RELIGIOUS.

In this age of advanced thought, one is not surprised to hear, occasionally, scriptural interpretations from the pulpit which would almost have frozen with horror and amazement our forefathers of a generation or so ago. We seem to be living in such a period of spiritual as well as of intellectual advancement, that few of the utterances of pulpit orators take us by surprise—however radically opposed they may be to the dogmas or creeds obtaining a century ago. Indeed it often happens that occupants of the pews appear to have more sensible and advanced views concerning matters theological than their spiritual advisers; or, perhaps, the latter entertain similar opinions but are afraid to give utterance to them. For, be it known, hundreds of clergymen—and laymen, too—are a long way in advance of their respective creeds.

Nor is this to be wondered at. Living in an age when infidelity is making its fiercest attacks on Christianity, gentlemen of the cloth find it necessary—in order to successfully resist these assaults against their common faith—to study the good old Bible more diligently and earnestly than at any other period in the world's history. And in their researches they themselves are amazed frequently to find a deep spiritual meaning in passages hitherto literally unexplainable. Many of which passages, too, had formed the basis for infidel satire. Then the study of Josephus and other great contemporary writers were found to confirm this divine teaching, and soon the knottiest scriptural passages and terms became easy of interpretation, and "glib little whiffets" of the shallow school of Ingersoll, et al, were forced by giant intellects, like Father Lambert's, to fall back upon the "Mistakes of Moses" and kindred silly rubbish. And from this latter standpoint, Father Lambert has finally driven Col. Ingersoll into the realms of silence—controversially speaking—where, it is hoped, he will remain. If he doesn't, he will wish he had—especially if Father Lambert be above ground.

But then infidelity is doing a good work. Good does not always come forth out of evil; but infidelity is the traditional exception to the rule. Formerly a wide gulf divided Christian churches, or, rather, the creeds of Christianity were thus divided. Infidelity tended to narrow this gulf by grouping the creeds in a sort of a mutually protective alliance. This chasm even has disappeared and now only a thin dividing line is discernable—a mere paper wall, which some good Samaritan, some noble, Christ-like man of the near future, will forever obliterate and relegate to the things of a past century and age. May THE ADVANCE and every one of its readers live to see that day! Creeds will save no man, woman, or child. God, and only God, is the Great Arbiter of human destiny; and if our lives are moulded after the pattern of His Son, we need "fear no evil."

THIRD PARTY.

The following, which we clip from the Ingersoll Sun—a sound Temperance newspaper, by the way—so well and fully expresses the opinion of THE ADVANCE concerning this Third Party movement, that we give it a place in our editorial columns:—

"We cannot regard the late action of the Temperance Convention in Toronto in adopting a resolution to form a Third Party, or Prohibition Party, as anything else than a grievous mistake, and a serious blow to the temperance and prohibition movement. The country is already cursed with too much partyism, and with the addition of another party matters will be worse instead of better.

The extra expense that must necessarily be incurred for election purposes will divert lines from a more effective prosecution of the temperance movement, and there are so many mollusks in the ranks of the temperance army that they could not be depended on to vote a straight prohibition ticket, but would go back on their professions and promises and vote the Grit or Tory ticket again, as they have done before, even though they had pledged their honor and word to vote the temperance ticket. We cannot believe that the resolution was fairly considered and passed by a representative vote of practical temperance men who fully understood the consequences that must inevitably follow the formation of a Third Party. Moreover, we do not believe such a party can be successfully organized for a few years at least."

From our own Correspondent.

Our village being naturally a very quiet place, not having a great annual exhibition to draw thousands of visitors and nearly all the produce of the world, and the many articles of manufacture and art to describe, as some other larger towns have done. Yet we jog along as well as circumstances will permit. Our traveling township fair comes off this year at Singhampton, and, no doubt, it will be quite interesting.

Mr. G. Guy, of Shelburne, has opened out a taylor establishment in our village and there is no doubt but he has struck the right place for business. We wish him every success.

Gertie, the youngest daughter of Dr. Kerr, has been very low with inflammation of the brain. She is slowly recovering.

We are pleased to welcome our townsman, Mr. T. Blakely with his newly wedded bride and we wish them many happy days.

Mr. Robt. Stock has also made himself happy by taking to himself a wife in the person of Miss M. Beatty.

The barn of Mr. Robert Gordon was entered one night last week and several bags filled with oats stolen. We would advise the party to have a patch sewn over the names on the bags or they may be detected.

We also hear of a young man of our village having $20 stolen from him. But this comes from drinking too much bad whiskey and keeping bad company.

Mr. Wm. Sproule, who lost his entire crop by fire a short time ago, raised a new frame stable for his stock.

Threshing is nearly wound up in this neighborhood and farmers are mostly pretty well satisfied with the yield of grain.

To the Editor of The Advance.

Dear Sir,—It is now quite a while since I had a word with you, and now, what is it going to be? the weather first, well be it so, as it is uppermost in my mind. The frost killed my potatoes and corn, having planted them late on account of the backward, wet, chilly time during seeding. Then a dry summer. What the drought spared the frost of the 16th and 19th Sep. finished. In my last I said that "fears of a big rise of the Fraser were being entertained." But it did not come, so the oldest inhabitant made a mis-calculation this time. You see, we have an "oldest inhabitant" here, also. It is the heat of the sun, not rain, which causes the floods in the Fraser. 30 to 40 feet of snow melting up in the Carriboo district and Rocky Mountains is material grounds for a speculative rise in the river, you will say, by either old or young settler. Well, after the waters begin to subside, then comes the mosquito. They are a perfect terror. You would imagine their mission was the extermination of the human race. They do their best to carry it to completion. Buzz, hum, &c. conveys no idea whatever, of a mosquito, but let a few hundreds attack even a heathen Chinaman, and hear him express himself.

It is said of scenery that distant lands are enchantment to the view. Well, I believe it, and in order to break the spell I started on July 4th, to get a closer look of some mountain peaks. After making a detour of near 20 miles by river and lake, I, and a companion camped for the night. Next day, with our packs on our backs we faced the mountain which is some 6000 or 7000 feet above the level of the sea. After climbing or crawling on hands and knees, we had to divest ourselves of coats, vests, overshirts, tent and everything except some provisions had to be left behind. Tired but resolute I rolled myself in my blanket on the edge of the mountain at 3 p. m., and my companion says I did not waken until 4 o'clock next morning. When we again commenced the ascent, we passed immense rocky chasms and canyons full of snow, numbers of water falls disappearing in the gorges below. Eugenia Falls would be drowned in them. Well, we got up to where the snow was 8 to 10 feet deep, tired, and the ambition, love of scenery, &c., more than satisfied, we retraced our steps. But, worse and worse down grade. I don't ever raise my eye to look in the direction of those mountain peaks any more.

Port Haney, our nearest village now claims a fish-freezing establishment, two stores and three brickyards. The Dom. Government's Land Policy here, is causing dissatisfaction. It will take all and more to pay officials than the revenue will come to for the lands. Had they given free grants to actual settlers, there would have been some hope of settlement. But granting deeds to individuals whose sole aim is to secure a title and then go hence. I think it is an injury which will show its effect by and by. Better they had granted those lands free, and placed a small duty on tea, tobacco or whiskey, to cover the loss. However, they will lose many a staunch supporter.

There has been snow on the mountains.

Now, sir, I have tried to make a long story short, but know I have failed, and even then it may be of no interest. However you can boil it down to an essence.

Minister of Interior and Deputy have been here. What for? Not the interest of settlers. Any of your readers asking for information through THE ADVANCE, I will try and answer. Yours truly, Sep. 21st 1887. J. M. WEBSTER.

GRAVENHURST IN RUINS.

THE SUFFERERS—HELP WANTED.

A last (Friday) night's Gravenhurst despatch says: The fire which swept over this town this morning is a crushing blow, and will occasion much suffering, as the weather is now turning cold. Already there is much distress, as forty-three families are left homeless. Mr. G. F. Marter, M. P. P. for this riding, left to-day for Toronto to lay the case before the Provincial Government and apply for assistance for the sufferers. The fire, which commenced about a quarter after 1 o'clock, broke out in Mowry & Sons' foundry. A strong wind was blowing from the north at the time, which carried the flames rapidly down Main street, and in a very short time nearly the whole business portion was burned down. The high wind and the inflammable nature of the buildings, all except Mr. Marter's and Sharp's cottage being of wood, combined to make the town an easy prey. Sparks and burning wood were carried onward by the wind and caused the fire to burn in many places at the same time. The part which the wind played in the disaster may be understood from the fact that the residence and barn of Mr. James Hewitt, which were burned with their contents, were three-quarters of a mile distant from the village. Fifty places of business were destroyed, only one, that of Mrs. Wiley, grocer, being left standing. In all, eighty-three buildings were burned, including the large new public school and the English church. When the fire started the steam fire engine was set to work, but just as it commenced to play it broke down, and not until the fire was nearly over was it ready for service again. The town being thus without protection a despatch was sent to Orillia asking for assistance, but the Mayor refused to send an engine because, he said, it was needed at home. Bracebridge, however, rendered some assistance, and help also came from Barrie, but too late to be of any service. Very few goods were saved. All was over at 4 o'clock. The loss is estimated at $300,000, with but small insurance. There were only four out of the way places which could be secured for business purposes. These were promptly taken possession of by Mr. Marter, Mr. J. P. Young, Mr. G. H. King and Mr. Moody, the last named going into an old store which he had only recently left to occupy a new building.

The following are the names of the sufferers: Mowry & Sons, foundry; T. Brignall, house and waggon shops; Gregg & Spears, blacksmith shop; D. Lafranier, of Fraser hosel; Gilbert McMillan, building occupied by J. Skitch, tailor, also billiard room; Jas. Kerr, baker shop; W. R. Tudhope, two stores, one jewellery, other vacant, and building occupied by Dr. Connell as drug store, and Banner printing office in rear; John McNeill, general merchant; Philip Bartholomew, building occupied by J. Groves, general merchant, also by Mr. Bartholomew as residence; G. F. Marter, M. P. P., general merchant; Powell & Co, general merchants; building owned by Geo. Clark, also residence of Geo. Clark; Messrs. Galbraith, their restaurant, owned by Mr. Clark; J. W. Tudhope, fruit store, owned by Mr. Clark; A. Maloin, grocery store, owned by Mr. Clark; J. Rock, jeweller; J. Gaynor, jeweller; Pat Shean, shoemaker; I. Passmore, butcher; J. Boyd, Central Hotel and barn; James Brown, grocer; H. H. Marter, furniture and harness shop; Allan Bros., general store and residence; H. R. King, butcher, dwelling and barns; J. E. Clipshan, waggon and blacksmith shop, dwelling and barn; John Sullivan and H. McKay, shoemakers; Arch. McLean, tenant; S. J. Henderson, Thos. Corbett, residence and barn; Frank Wasley, proprietor Albion Hotel and barns; W. A. McKim, general merchant; J. P. Cockburn, post-office and stationery store; J. P. Young, hardware merchant; W. N. Moody, general merchant; A. Lannarth, general merchant; Wm. Meinardus, grocer; George Tolen, druggist; S. J. Abbott, barber; McCarthy, Pepler & McCarthy, law office; —. Campbell, butcher; E. Cooper, proprietor Royal Hotel, barns and outbuildings; H. Matt, barber; G. J. Cox, general merchant, store and house; J. Sharp, dwelling; R. K. Jones, dwelling; W. Palmer, grocer, store and barn; S. Whalen, shoemaker; dwelling owned by S. J. Henderson, and another owned by Mr. Smith; new school house and English church; Albert Hill's blacksmith shop and dwelling; Cumberland Clark's house and another occupied by Mr. Denner; H. Bassett, dwelling; F. Dowler & Co., general merchants; new building being erected by Robert Sharp; dwelling owned by Mr. McKean; baker shop and dwelling, G. H. King; dwelling and millinery store of Mrs. Scott.

Mr. Marter, M. P.P., arrived in Toronto last night. He will wait on Hon. the Attorney-General to-day, and if he has time, he will also lay the case before His Worship the Mayor.

An American Statesman on Newspaper Men.

Hon. Carl Schurz, at Pittsburg, Pa., recently spoke about newspaper men in America as follows: "You hear of the people, from one end of this country to the other, growling at the newspaper reporters, and I want you to publish what I tell you now. The newspaper reporters of the country should be respected. Throughout my whole public career, and since that time, I have never changed my mind in regard to them. They are the guardians of truth and personal liberty. They protect every citizen, and I have to see the first case where a newspaper man wilfully attempted to deprive any man of his rights. I will never be satisfied till I see newspaper men raised entirely on a level with, if not above, the other professions, for they deserve the greatest consideration."

While Mrs. Cleveland was at the Hotel Lafayette, Philadelphia, she left the building by the back way one morning in order to avoid the curious crowd in front of the hotel. She was obliged to go through the store-room and kitchen, climb over boxes of soap, barrels of sugar and packages and bundles of all kinds. She was very agile and graceful, however, and seemed to enjoy the unwonted experience.

TROUBLED IRELAND.

The Freeman's Journal says the localities in Ireland proclaimed yesterday by the Government are those in which the most sweeping evictions have taken place, and argues that these localities have been selected because the landlords are losing the fight.

Mr. Kilbride, who accompanied William O'Brien to Canada on his tour against Lord Lansdowne, was elected without opposition to represent South Kerry in the House of Commons.

The members of the League in proclaimed localities are uniting for common action. They will hold a number of meetings on Sunday in defiance of the law.

At a meeting of Kilkee carmen to-day it was resolved to defy the League's orders not to drive the police. The carmen afterwards drove the police to and from the Moveen evictions.

Mr. Harrington complained that a Dublin paper had declared that the police would be justified in making him acquainted with the peculiarities of a horse-pond. The language, he said, was an incitement to the police to commit violence, and the court should not permit such language to be used with impunity. Mr. Murphy, while not justifying the course of the paper, considered that Mr. Harrington, by calling Sergeant Ryder a murderer and villain, provoked comment. Such language had never been uttered without meeting reproof in any court in the civilized world.

Mr. Harrington retorted that he should continue to use the same language. The coroner deprecated the retort. Witnesses were called who defended Mr. Harrington's attitude.

Sergeant Ryder was then recalled. In the course of his testimony he said: "Mr. Harrington called me a murderer, scoundrel and ruffian, and said he would kick me off my chair."

Mr. Harrington—I call you a liar in addition to scoundrel when you make such a statement, and I will call you murderer again before I have done with you, and I will get for you the punishment of a murderer.

Mr. Balfour is receiving numerous menacing letters, which threaten him with personal injury, and many communications which purport to reveal the existence of plots against his life. Other members of the Government have been the recipients of similar missives in less number. The police are taking every precaution to defend the executive and officials.

FATAL RAILWAY ACCIDENT.

Smash-up on the Intercolonial—An Engineer Killed and Three Men Injured.

A Quebec despatch says: The following particulars have just been received of a collision on the Intercolonial Railway yesterday between St. Moise station and Little Metis: The accommodation train which left Rifer du Loup at 7 o'clock yesterday morning had orders to cross Lebert's freight special at Little Metis. The crossing orders were overlooked by both driver and conductor, and when three miles east of Little Metis the accommodation train came into collision with the freight special. Neither of the drivers saw one another until they were but a few feet apart, owing to the curve in the road at this point and the fact that large snow sheds have been erected. The result was that Engineer L. Duncan was instantly killed. Engineer Gorham, of the accommodation, jumped through the window of his cab and broke a leg. The firemen of both trains are severely injured. Both engines and cars are badly smashed. The loss will amount to several thousands of dollars. The road is entirely blocked and cannot be cleared before Friday night.

It is said that the entire blame is attached to the driver and conductor of the accommodation train. There were but few passengers on board the latter, and beyond a severe shaking up none of them were badly injured. The trains were travelling at a speed of about thirty miles an hour. Engineer Duncan was unmarried.

A New Illuminator.

A Paris cable says: In the published illustrations of the recent mobilization experiments in France, the newly invented Lucigen light, of which a great deal has been said and written lately, takes a very prominent place. General Boulanger was one of the first to appreciate the importance of Hannay's discovery for night-work; and the trial of the light made last week at the Crystal Palace afforded ample evidence both of the general's sagacity and of Hannay's ingenuity. The smallest print could be read easily at a distance of two hundred yards from the flame, which is produced by the action of compressed air on a film of waste oil. All other rival lights were very ignominiously eclipsed by its superior brilliancy. The Forth Bridge works are being carried on at night with the aid of Lucigen. It has been adopted by Sir Joseph Whitworth and many other great contractors, and for purely outdoor purposes it seems to have no rival among the existing competing illuminants. Any one who will exercise his ingenuity in endeavoring to compete with the gas monopolists deserves encouragement.

Among the Churches.

Mr. Moody, the famous evangelist, has accepted an invitation to go to Montreal, and will begin a series of meetings there on the 2nd of October.

Lady Henry Somerset has created a considerable sensation in Worcestershire with her "Gospel Tent" and peripatetic preaching. Her ladyship's oratorical powers are said to be of a high order, and her temperance discourses almost rival in eloquence the Primrose League oratory of Lady Jersey and Miss Nevill.

The Bonapartists do their kicking with manifest toes.

Col. Hughes-Hallett intimates that he will not resign his seat in Parliament in consequence of the publications concerning his relations with Miss Selwyn.

Reports have been received from Malaga stating that there has been a great earthquake there. It caused a panic among the inhabitants, but did little damage.

George Westinghouse, jun., inventor of air-brake, is worth $9,000,000. "This perhaps, the largest fortune ever made at of wind," says the Atlanta Constitution.

THE CHOLERA RAVAGES

On Board the French Steamer Arrived at New York.

A New York despatch says: The French steamer Alesia, Capt. Vallist, of the Fabre Line, which arrived at quarantine on Thursday night from Marseilles and Naples, brings three cabin and 561 steerage passengers. On her arrival at quarantine four cases of Asiatic cholera were found among the passengers in the steerage. Eight persons died during the voyage to this port. On Sept. 12th Luigi Maria, a steerage passenger, aged 23 years, was taken sick and died on the 15th. Paul Antonio Balkyoria, another steerage passenger, aged 38, was taken sick and died on the same date. Jean Lenivolni, a sailor, aged 40, died the following day, in less than twenty-four hours from the time he was taken down with the disease. On the 17th Jean Somma, a sailor, aged 30, was taken sick. He died on the 19th. Serafin de Lis, a steerage passenger, died on the 20th. Anna Nellridge, a steerage passenger, aged 47, died on the 21st. Francisco Mattoe, aged 41, was taken sick before coming on board and died on the 22nd, probably of bronchitis. Maria Antonio Sola Veno, aged 59, was also ailing at the time of coming on board and died on the 22nd, though without the symptoms of cholera. All of the above were buried at sea. The Alesia is now in the lower bay. Her sick passengers will be transferred to the Swinburne Island hospital. All the remaining passengers will be transferred to Hoffman Island for observation. The ship will remain in the lower bay until she has been thoroughly fumigated and cleaned. The passengers of the Alesia will be kept in quarantine at least eight days.

Dr. Smith, the health officer, made a careful examination of all the passengers and found four who had escaped notice of the ship's surgeon also sick with the disease. Three of these four will probably die before morning, while the four reported by the ship's doctor will probably recover. The eight sick persons, two women and six men, were transferred to the Quarantine Hospital at Swinburne Island. The balance of the passengers was landed at Hoffman Island. They will be held there until all danger of infection has passed.

IRISH AFFAIRS.

A London cable says: Mr. Gladstone has written in regard to the assertion of Robert Bannatyne Findlay (Liberal Unionist) that he (Gladstone) had apologised for boycotting, and that he was under Parnellite subjection. Gladstone says: "I am a little surprised at the inaccuracy of Mr. Findlay's statements, but much must be allowed for a disappointed section with a failing cause."

Lord Randolph Churchill, speaking at Whitby to-day, said: "The present Parliament is fairly democratic and is therefore strong. If it were otherwise it would be unable to grapple firmly with the National League. The obstruction encountered during the session was due to Mr. Gladstone acting as leader of the Parnellites."

A Cork cable says: When the case of O'Brien was opened several policemen were called as witnesses for the Government. They testified from memory as to O'Brien's language, which they asserted tended to incite his listeners to violence. During the hearing of this evidence a procession, armed with sticks and headed by a waggon carrying a band, marched into town from the country. The Hussars stopped the waggon, but allowed the other part of the procession to proceed. The procession took up a position close to the court-room, but order was observed.

Constable Foley admitted that the notes he made of what Mr. O'Brien said in his speech were made the next morning and from memory. The head constable told him to write the report. He was not asked to produce the notes for many days after. He could not swear that O'Brien spoke in the order in which the words appeared in the notes.

BLAZING OIL FIELDS.

An Explosion Which Causes a Great Conflagration.

A Toledo, O., despatch says: There is great excitement among oil and gas operators in this city over the reports of an immense oil conflagration in the Wood county oil fields. The fire was caused by an explosion in the Parker Well No. 1, the greatest oil well in the world, a well that has been uncontrollable for days and which flows 10,000 barrels every twenty-four hours. The oil caught fire from the engine and rapidly spread to the other derricks and tanks. In the oil fields are large pools of petroleum and the creeks and rivers are full of oil. This only adds fuel to the flames. The scene is described by an eye-witness as most thrilling and magnificent. At the time of the explosion, without warning, a column of blue flame and smoke shot up into the air at least 1,000 feet and extended over acres of ground. The heat was so intense that it was impossible to approach nearer than half a mile. It could be plainly felt two miles away and the sight of the burning well is visible in Toledo, thirty miles distant. The damage will run up to hundreds of thousands of dollars. One of the drillers, Geo. Johnson, was caught in a whirlwind of smoke, oil and flame, and was so badly burned that no hopes are entertained of his recovery. Other drillers are missing and it is feared they have perished in the flames.

Some Dangerous Jumping.

A Syracuse, N.Y., telegram says: Prof Baldwin, of parachute fame, went up in a balloon from the Onondaga county fair grounds here this afternoon in the presence of 30,000 people, and when at an altitude of a mile jumped from the air ship, and seven minutes later landed safely about three miles from the starting point. His next leap from the clouds will be made at Quincy, Ill. To-day his parachute oscillated frightfully, and this evening he said that another experience of the same kind would drive him out of the business. He received $1,300 for performing the feat here.

—Dame Fashion has decreed that the ladies' hats for fall and winter wear shall be lower—not in price, but in altitude. Some of the latest importations, not yet placed on public view, will go quite to the other extreme from those in vogue last winter and will fit quite snugly to the head.

EUROPEAN ALLIANCES.

Germany Anxious to Ally Herself with Italy—Russia Balking Alone.

A London cable says: The uneasiness and uncertainty of the European aspect felt here are much aggravated by the abandonment of the proposed meeting of the Czar and Emperor William at Stettin. The triple alliance is now openly dead, and the Kalnoky and Bismarck meeting emphasizes its demise. The two Chancellors have substituted Italy for Russia, and British military officers who know the perfection of the Italian army regard Italy as no mean ally. But Russia is now playing a hand entirely her own. The Czar, who manages his own foreign policy, evidently wants to keep free from all entangling alliances. The contempt poured upon the French Republic by the Russian press, notably by the Moscow Gazette, since M. Katkoff's death, and the Czar's well-known dislike of the men who now rule France, indicate no present arrangement with the Paris Government; but every day makes clearer that when what Prince Bismarck calls the "inevitable" war between France and Germany breaks out, the Germans will have to count upon Russia as a passive if not as an active foe. Private letters from Berlin declare the existence of almost feverish anxiety in high places to be ready to strike, sharp and strong, against any future combination of Russia and France, and to secure Italy as an ally for the defence of Austrian territory against Russian aggression. It is the belief of the British Foreign Office that Italy is already committed to that responsibility, but this is not generally accepted. The Cologne Gazette professes to describe German feeling without friendship and without enmity. France is naturally delighted that the Czar refrains from meeting his Imperial relatives.

FOURTEEN DOLLARS FOR A KISS.

It Came High and Mr. Bross Did Not Want It.

A New York report says: James Bross, a sturdy, although aged, citizen of New London, came to this city to see the sights last Sunday. While wandering along Cherry street late that evening he noticed a crowd of blithesome girls laughing and chatting on a corner. While he was passing the merry group he was most astonished by suddenly finding a pair of arms about his neck. At the same time a silvery voice exclaimed:

Mr. Bross had never been greeted in that way in New London.

"Go 'way, go 'way, you bold girl," cried he. "You ought to be ashamed of yourself."

"Oh, beg pardon," said the girl who had stolen a kiss from the aged New Londoner. "I mistook you for my father."

Mr. Bross passed on, laughing over the oke until he stepped into a store to buy a cigar, when he was astounded to find that $14, which he had in his vest pocket, was gone.

He found a policeman, who arrested Annie Clark, a black-eyed maiden, whom Bross identified as the girl who had kissed him. Justice Kilbreth, in the Tombs Police Court, held Annie in $1,000 for trial.

WITH BARBARA FRIETCHIE'S SPIRIT.

Mrs. Hulbert, 90 Years Old, Tears Down a Rebel Flag.

A Detroit despatch says: Detroit as a venerable and worthy patriot, with the Barbara Frietchie spirit, in the person of Mrs. Hulbert, of Third avenue, who is nearly 90 years old. Mrs. Hulbert sent four sons to the war, all of whom acquitted themselves with credit, and one laid down his life on the field of battle. The mother is imbued with strong loyalty to the flag. During the meeting of the Army of the Tennessee in Detroit last week a handsome American flag floated from the roof of the Hulbert residence; but one of the grandchildren, in a spirit of mischief, tacked a captured rebel signal flag to the staff above the Stars and Stripes. Mrs. Hulbert saw it, and was indignant. She kept her own counsel, however, and when an opportunity presented she went to the attic and climbed by a rickety ladder to the roof, and thence reached the rebel signal by means of steps, and tore it from the staff. She has hidden the flag, and, in reply to all inquiries, says: "You will find that flag when I'm dead—not till then." Mrs. Hulbert is a sister of the late Henry Schoolcraft, the Indian historian.

No Money in Wheat.

A London cable says: Lord Randolph Churchill, addressing a meeting of farmers at York, said the present low prices in wheat were ruinous to the farmer. As a politician he had not a grain of comfort to offer them. The British farmer growing wheat, he said, did not seem to know when he was beaten. Lord Churchill said he foresaw nothing that was likely to cause a rise in the price of wheat sufficient to cause a profit to the grower. The foreign imports were illimitable, not from America only, but from other sources. The farmers of England should realize thoroughly that India is a tremendous granary, and will continue to pour into the English market increasing quantities of wheat. This radical change in the conditions of farming should prepare all persons interested in agriculture to adapt themselves to changes.

Mutilated While Coupling Cars.

A Barrie despatch says: Harvey Sizer, a young man in the employment of the Northern & Northwestern Railway as head brakesman in the Barrie and Allandale yards, was knocked down and run over while coupling cars at Barrie yesterday morning. Two cars passed over his leg below the knee, crushing the bone so badly that amputation was necessary. He is doing as well as can be expected.

WILL THE PRINCE COME?

Rumor That the Prince of Wales Will Repeat His Trip of Twenty-seven Years Ago—His Interest in the Dominion.

The London correspondent of the Globe cables: Some journals, commenting on the reported intention of the Queen to visit Canada, urge that a royal visit to the Dominion would be of great benefit to the Throne and the Empire. A visit to Canada, however, would necessitate visits to the other colonies, and this would be impossible for the Queen. It is suggested, however, that the Prince of Wales might, with great advantage to the State, endeavor to find an opportunity to visit Canada and the other colonies. I am personally aware that the Prince has long ago taken a keen interest in the progress of the Dominion. He has, at his own request, been supplied with the best available maps of the Dominion, photos of Canadian scenery and other printed information, and, did State exigencies permit, would gladly undertake an intercolonial tour. Doubt, however, is expressed whether it would be possible for him to do so.

J. H. Sproule, contractor, and a staff of surveyors went to Brandon to-day to begin the construction of the Northwest Central. He stated that he was going to put a large force of men to work immediately to work on the first fifty miles of the Central, beginning at Brandon, and the work will be prosecuted vigorously, with a view to finishing that distance this fall.

The surveyors commenced work at Brandon this morning on the Northwest Central Railway, and say that fifty miles will be in operation by Christmas. People are still dubious, and appear to think the news too good to be true, that work is at last to be proceeded with.

The Port Arthur, Duluth & Western road, upon which work has just been started, was formerly known as "The Thunder Bay Colonization road." The route is from Port Arthur southwesterly through the townships of McIntyre and Oliver, crossing the Canadian Pacific about two miles east of Murillo, thence to the Kaministiquia River, crossing that near the junction of the Whitefish, following the valley of that stream and by way of Beaver, Rabbit, Porcupine and Silver Mountain mines to the north of Whitefish Lake, thence north of the Arrow Lake chain to the international boundary at Gunflint Lake, on the Pigeon River system of water stretches. The present portion of the line, which it is intended to build from Port Arthur to the boundary, is about 86 miles in length.

APPERLEXING FAMILY.

How a Man is His Aunt's Uncle, and Other Queer Relationships.

Mr. L. Osborne, of this city, married his grandfather's second wife, and they have a son. Given this simple statement and a number of peculiar family relationships may be deduced. For example, Mr. Osborne is a grandchild of his wife. His son being also a son of his (Osborne's) grandmother, is uncle to his own father. Osborne becomes a brother to his uncles and aunts, and also a stepfather to them. The boy, being the child of Osborne as a grandson, is thereby a great-grandson of his own mother, while his father may rejoice in the title of great-grandfather to his own child. Thus the boy becomes a grand uncle to himself and his parents' great-grandchild. Osborne is the boy's father and great-grandfather at the same time, and, being the husband of his own grandmother, enjoys the distinction of being his own grandfather as well. Osborne's mother married a man named Blake and his sister married a brother-in-law of her mother, Henry Blake. Osborne's sister becomes a sister to her own mother. Mrs. Blake being Osborne's mother, is grandmother to Osborne's son. The latter, however, being a son of the wife of Mrs. Blake's father-in-law, is therefore a brother to his grandmother and granduncle to his grandmother's sister, the daughter who married Mrs. Blake's brother-in-law. He also is her nephew, as the son of her brother. Osborne is the younger Mrs. Blake's grandfather as well as her brother. Thus her nephew, Osborne's son, becomes uncle to his aunt, being a son of her grandmother. This series of relationships may be likewise traced almost indefinitely. The family are happy and contented, and live as pleasantly as though the peculiar family ties were not present.—Madison (Wis.) Journal.

HOW TO GET RICH.

The Boston Herald has been asking some rich men for rules by which other men may become rich. Mr. P. T. Barnum says the golden rule is to spend less than one earns. He advises abstinence from tobacco and rum, due care for the health, the selection of a congenial occupation, avoidance of debt, and determination to excel all others engaged in the same occupation. He also says:

Be careful to advertise in some shape or other, because it is evident that if a man has ever so good an article for sale, and nobody knows it, it will bring him no return. The whole philosophy of life is, first sow, then reap. This principle applies to all kinds of business, and to nothing more eminently than to advertising. If a man has a really good article, there is no way in which he can reap more advantageously than by "sowing" to the public in this way. If a man has goods for sale, and he doesn't advertise them, the chances are that some day the sheriff will do it for him.

Politeness and civility are the best capital ever invested in business. Large stores, gilt signs, flaming advertisements will all prove unavailing if you or your employees treat your patrons abruptly. The more kind and liberal a man is, the more generous will be the patronage bestowed upon him.

Preserve your integrity; it is more precious than diamonds or rubies. The most difficult thing in life is to make money dishonestly. Our prisons are full of men who attempted to follow this course. No man can be dishonest without soon being found out, and when his lack of principle is discovered, nearly every avenue to success is closed against him forever. Strict honesty not only lies at the foundation of all success in life financially, but in every other respect.

General Butler has made a great deal of his money in manufactures, but he advises young men to invest in improved real estate. He owns property in Boston, Chicago, Washington and Lowell, a big ranche in Colorado, 600,000 acres in New Mexico, and 150,000 acres in Virginia. His ideas about real estate investments are worth giving in full:

If a young man is earning something more than the expenses of his living, and has no object in view, he is likely either to increase those expenses carelessly, or to loan his money to his friends, and in so doing in the majority of cases he will lose both friends and money, so that the best thing that he can do is to have an object, to gather up his money, and to have a call for it which shall be a profitable one. He makes no investment because he says, "I have got so little money that it won't come to anything; I will wait until I get more;" and in waiting, generally, what he has goes.

When a young man has a very little money let him buy some property, preferably a piece, however small, according to his means, of improved real estate that is paying rent. He had better buy it when sold at auction, under a judicial sale, paying in cash what he can, giving his notes for the balance in small sums coming due at frequently recurring intervals, secured by a mortgage on the property, and then use all his extra income in paying up those notes. It is always safe to discount your own note, and if the notes come a little too fast as soon as he gets anything paid his friends will aid him when he is putting his money where it cannot be lost, and where the property is taking care of the interest, and in a very short time he will find that he has got a very considerable investment. He will become interested in it, save his money to meet his notes, and he will directly come into a considerable possession of property, and hardly know how it came to him. That is, he will have had a motive for saving, and will get the result of that saving, and will not be tempted to enter into speculations. Nothing is so safe for investment as improved real estate. Nothing is likely to grow in value faster. In the last 50 years, 90 per cent. of all the merchants and traders in Boston have failed. In the last 50 years, 90 per cent. of all the business corporations have failed or gone out of business, so that their stock has been wiped out. In the last 50 years all the improved real estate, on the average, has paid its interest and taxes, and quadrupled in value. If a young man's father can give him anything to start him in the world he had better invest it in that way and let it accumulate, and earn his living, and he will be richer than if he had gone into business. Jay Gould is said to have started from a mouse-trap seller to become a millionaire. Assuming that to be true, he is only one of 60,000,000 of people; and if any young man thinks that he is going to imitate Jay Gould, there are 60,000,000 of chances to one that he won't succeed.

The rule I would lay down for a young man is, never do a mean thing for money. Be prudent and saving of your money. Be careful to have no interest account running against you unless you have an equal or greater interest account running in your favor. Work diligently and you are sure of a competency in your old age, and as early as possible, if you can find a saving, prudent girl who has been brought up by a mother who knows how to take care of a house and make a wife of her, she will aid, and not hinder you.

I claim no originality in this advice, and will relate you an incident in my own experience to illustrate it: In my earliest practice in my profession I was quite successful in earning money, and I had a small balance in the Lowell Bank, at the head of which was Mr. James G. Carney. The bank was directly across the hall from my office. I stepped into the bank to deposit a little money on one occasion and Mr. Carney said to me: "Why don't you invest your money?" "Invest," said I; "I have nothing to invest." "Oh, yes," he says, "you have quite a little sum of money, and I see that your young friends come with your cheques occasionally, evidently borrowing it. Now, you had better invest it." "How can I invest it?" "Invest it in real estate." "I know nothing about real estate." "Go to the first auction and buy the property. You cannot be much cheated in that because you will have to give very little more than somebody else will be willing to pay for it. Give your notes for it, save your money, collect your fees, pay your notes as they become due. See that the property is improved property, so that the rent will keep down your interest account, and when you get any other money invest it in the same way, and if your notes press upon you a little faster than you can pay them, why, we will, when we find that is what you are doing with your money, discount your note and give you a little more time, so that you can pay it up. This will necessitate the prompt collection of your bills, for I know that you would rather work and earn a hundred dollars than dun a man for it, unless you have a pressing need for it. You have not even asked for a little bill that we owe you in the bank, which shows me that you do not promptly collect your dues." I followed the advice and bought a number of pieces of property in that manner, and I never did exactly know how they were paid for, but they were, and in a few years I owned some twenty different pieces of property in Lowell that came to me in that way. I can only say that I wish I had been wise enough to have continued this course through life.

First—When a young man commences a business life by working in the employ of others, let him strive not simply to earn his salary and to give satisfaction to his employers, but let him aim to do all he has strength to do and to earn his salary many times over. In my first business years it was no uncommon thing for me to work all night until breakfast time, a thing I was not expected nor asked to do. If a young man will follow the rule of trying to make his services many times more valuable than his salary, either his employer or some one else will appreciate him. There are always a few vacant places left for such kind of men, and their employers have very little to say as to their salaries.

Second—Never overrate your own ability, nor underrate that of your competitors. Follow this rule carefully, and then do not locate yourself in business where you are not confident that you are at least the equal of those who will be your competitors, either in natural ability or in willingness to work early or late, in season or out of season, in order that any differences in natural ability may be overcome in this way. My experience is that between natural ability and hard work the latter will always win. When the two are in combination, nothing can prevent success.

The Senator and the Lord.

That noble edifice, the Baptist Church at Jarvis and Gerrard streets, is to a great extent a monument of the generosity of the late Senator. It is related that several years ago, when Lord Houghton visited Toronto, he was a guest of Senator McMaster. The Senator took My Lord out for a drive about the city, and among other places of interest pointed out the church, which Lord Houghton duly admired. Upon learning, however, that it was a Baptist church My Lord exclaimed in great wrath: "The assurance of those dissenters!" and refused to look longer. HEALTH OF GIRLS.

Why They Droop and Stoop, Losing the Beauty of Vigorous Youth.

A lecturer whose words were reported in Life and Hope spoke the other day as follows:

One of the principal reasons why so many healthy girls become invalid women is owing to the mistaken ideas and restraint of the mother. When the girl is young she romps and plays and tumbles about the floor without restraint, and is healthy. In most instances much too soon long dresses are put on, and the girl is put under a double restraint, and is expected to at once become a lady. Hampered by her clothing, which prevents the free action of the muscles of the body, or if she indulges in any childish plays, or is seen by the mother in any but an unright position, she is told that such conduct is not ladylike and only suitable for boys. She soon begins to think she must not bend her body and most keep constantly in an upright position, except when asleep. The result of this teaching is the supports of the internal organs are weakened. The muscles of the back not being used become weak and relaxed, and she stoops forward; immediately stays are provided to take the place of the muscles provided by nature to hold them in their proper position. Thus relieved from all action they soon become relaxed and useless. Thus nature is supplanted by art until the poor girl becomes more a composition of steel, whalebone and rubber than muscle, flesh and blood. By this time her mental education is finished, and the proud mother is enabled to introduce to the world an accomplished lady, and at the same time a weak, dependent, invalid woman.

How He Got a Good Seat.

A good story is told of an adventure which Dr. McKnight, rector of Trinity Church, had in attending the services in Westminster Abbey, celebrating the Jubilee of Queen Victoria's coronation. The good doctor had no ticket of admission, but bethinking himself of an acquaintance he had with the Archbishop, he approached the entrance and, when he reached the grand doorkeeper, said:

"I'm from America, and I would like to see the Archbishop."

The functionary caught a portion of his sentence, glanced at his clerical dress, and with a respectful flourish waved him inside, handed him over to an usher, who marched him down the stately aisle, while the official voice rang out in awful tones:

"The Archbishop of America!"

The doctor overcome by his embarrassing situation for a moment, was placed in one of the best seats in front of the house, among all the "first quality folks," where he greatly enjoyed the succeeding exercises. And there wasn't a better man in the Abbey than the innocent wearer of the big title of the "Archbishop of America."—Elmira Advertiser.

A Lady's Fight with a Burglar.

Dr. Theodore R. Hornblower, of Jersey City heights, and his wife had a desperate encounter early Tuesday morning with a gang of burglars which had broken into their house. The case is a notable one for the pluck and determination of Mrs. Hornblower, who felled one of the burglars twice with a cane chair which was in her room, and for the fact that though a perfect volley of shots was fired at the doctor at short range he was only slightly injured while he succeeded in putting a bullet through the neck of one of the intruders. The gang, including the wounded man, got away however, leaving only a pair of spectacles dropped by the one who was shot and a large amount of blood.

THE CIGARMAKERS' CONVENTION.

An Animated Discussion Over a Proposed Universal Label.

A Binghamton (N. Y.) despatch says: At the cigarmakers' convention this morning a communication from District Assembly Cigarmakers' Union, No. 9,079, of Chicago, raised quite a rumpus. It proposed that a uniform label be adopted to cover the whole country. An animated discussion took place on a motion to lay the matter on the table. The Chicago delegation urged that the communication be received; that the district assembly did not wish to antagonize the International Union, nor open the old sore between the two organizations. To call them "scabs" was entirely unfair. They were not opposed to the use of the blue label.

A delegate from Brooklyn said: "We are fighting to get 'scabs' into our organization. That is the reason the convention is held in Binghamton this year."

The Chairman called the speaker to order for referring to the Binghamton cigarmakers as "scabs."

A delegate from Springfield, Ill., said: "I hope the convention will ignore this communication. The same people who now appeal to this body opposed the blue label at the convention in Springfield last year."

The communication was finally referred to the Committee on Resolutions.

The report of the Committee on Constitution was then read and the amended constitution taken up and considered by sections. A recess was then taken.

At the afternoon session the amendment to the constitution as reported by committee providing for the establishment of an "out of work benefit" and placing the sum to be paid to members who are out of work at $3 per week—the fund to be raised by assessment—was taken up and discussed at length. The delegates from Baltimore, Rochester, Philadelphia, Manchester, Springfield, Ill., Cincinnati, Boston, Buffalo—President Strasser—Lincoln, Neb., Mobile, Grand Rapids, Hamilton, Ont., and San Francisco argued in favor of the amendment and said they would vote for it. Several New York delegates and those from Brooklyn, Milwaukee, Paterson, Hoboken, South Bend and Jacksonville made strong speeches against the amendment. An amendment that the weekly benefit be made $1 instead of $3 was put to a vote and lost—58 to 115. The report of the committee was then rejected by a vote of 60 to 113 and the convention adjourned.

The delegates have considered two proposed changes in the constitution reported by the Constitutional Committee. They rejected them both. One provided for a special cigar box label for Union No. 218 of San Francisco, and the other for the organization of Unions in Montreal, Toronto, Brantford, St. Catharines and other places, to be known as "The Federation of Canadian Unions." The proposition to hold the International Conventions triannually was also rejected.

Work and Wages.

The Detroit Typographical Union has notified the employing printers that after November 1st nine hours will be enforced as a day's labor without reduction of the present scale of prices. The Employing Printers Association will refuse to comply with the union's demand.

The Executive Board of the United Brassworkers' Union has directed all workmen employed in the chandelier factories in New York City and Brooklyn to stop work at noon to-day in order to enforce for themselves the Saturday half holiday, notwithstanding the attempt which is being made by the Chandelier Manufacturers' Association to withdraw it from them. According to this 4,000 men will stop work at the above mentioned hour.

Modern Warfare.

The idea begins to prevail in European armies that it is better to wound a man in battle than to kill him, as more men are taken out of line to care for a wounded man than for a dead one. Hence, opinion at present favors a small bore for the magazine rifles now being introduced. The soldier, too, when consulted about the matter, prefers being shot twice to being killed once.—Baltimore Sun.

They Dealt With Him.

"Please, I want the doctor to come and see mother."

"Doctor's out," said the servant. "Where do you come from?"

"Why," exclaimed the little boy, "don't you know me? Why, we deal with you. We had a baby from here last week!"

Twenty-Year-Old Law Suit.

A Marshall, Mich., despatch says: A decision of the Sibley-Perrin case, filed today, gives Mrs. Fisk, widow of Frnk Sibley, a fortune variously estimated at from $300,000 to $500,000. The case has been in court 20 years.

"——Who Help Themselves."

Aunt Kate—My dear, don't you think if it had been the Lord's wish that you should have curling hair, He would have curled it for you?

Jessie—And so He did, Aunt Kate, when I was a baby. He probably thinks I am old enough now to do it for myself.—Life

Dr. Castelnau, a prominent Radical extremist, has been arrested in Paris on the charge of being an accomplice of a German named Decherer in swindling English insurance companies of £14,500. Decherer insured his life in favor of his mistress and then procured a dead body, which Dr. Castlenau certified to be the body of Decherer. The mistress received the amount of insurance, and fled to America in company with Decherer.

M. Flourens, French Minister of Foreign Affairs, has submitted to the Budget Committee a statement of the Tonquin finances. It shows a deficit of 20,000,000 francs. The Government has decided that the construction of railways in Tonquin shall not be commenced at present, other public works being more urgent.

Mlle. Rhea has been doing a good business in Maine.

Mr. Donald Harold, who was for several years the comedian of Miss Annie Pixley's company, has been engaged by that star for this season. He is a good singing comedian, and will add to the strength of Miss Pixley's company.

They have a constable in Wellington who understands how to run things. At Elora in a Scott Act case the magistrate told the council for the defence that he "came prowling around like a cat after mice," to which the latter made a retort more forcible than elegant. The magistrate then ordered the constable to arrest the lawyer for contempt; but the constable considered himself boss of the situation, refused to obey, and told the magistrate that if he and the lawyer persisted in wrangling he would arrest both of them! Chief Egerton had better not read this, for he might get himself into trouble if he attempted to follow his Elora brother.—Owen Sound Times.

Robert Allen, who was convicted a short time ago on a charge of violating the Scott Act, but who refused to pay his fine, was taken to gaol by constable Hall last Thursday evening. As he returned after an absence of a day or two it is supposed by some that upon arriving at "Castle Sutherland," Orangeville, he changed his mind and paid the required fine of $50 and costs. Allen claims, however, that there was something wrong with the warrant upon which he was arrested, and thus explains his return.—Shelburne Economist.

John Bullivan was arrested on Tuesday by constable Glazier for threatening his wife and insulting his neighbors. He was drunk at the time and had evidently been engaged in a fight as his face and hands were covered with blood. He is known as a bad character and on several occasions his wife has had to leave the house and with her small children seek refuge from his brutal hand. He was fined $5 and costs and furnished security to behave himself for one year. A wife beater is one of the most detestable creatures on earth and should be compelled to pay a severe penalty.—Dundalk Herald.

A correspondent sends us particulars in connection with certain events transpiring in his locality, which, if true, would stamp the perpetrator as one of the most infamous scoundrels under God's foot-stool. However at our express wish, our correspondent promises to make a searching investigation before doing anything further in the premises. We may add, that the man alluded to is charged with seduction, rape, and other crimes.

Don't fail to hear J. B. Watson, Esq., orator and humorist, who will deliver his amusing and instructive lecture,—"MIND YOUR OWN BUSINESS, or THE ELEVENTH COMMANDMENT," in the Town Hall, Flesherton, on Friday evening, the 14th inst., under the auspices of the Ladies' Aid Society of the Presbyterian church. A treat is in store for all who hear him. Lecture to commence at 8 o'clock sharp. Admission, adults 20 cents, children 10 cents.

Flesherton now possesses one of the neatest Barber shops in the county. It is located next door to Clayton's boot & shoe store, and is run by Mr. W. Booth, the "Boss Barber." Mr. Booth hails from Shelburne, is a married man and has come to stay. He is a first class workman and has struck the best opening for a business like his to be found in the County. Having invested considerable cash in his business here, we may pretty safely conclude that he means business "from the word go." It is only such men that can ever hope to succeed. No other kind need come here, or anywhere else for that matter. We might add, that Mr. Booth makes ladies hair-cutting a specialty. All work first-class.

ANOTHER BURGLARY!

Russell's "Noted Jewelry Store" Entered by Cracksmen.

On Friday night last Russell's Jewelry store here was entered by burglars and a large number of fine razors, two cases of jacknives, a case of gold finger rings, a number of watches, some cigars, and several smaller and less valuable articles stolen therefrom. The wholesale value of the articles stolen would be close in the neighborhood of $70.

The burglars broke in the front door of the store, and, the night being very dark, cooly lit a lamp and made away with the booty enumerated above. The lamp was still burning when Master Wes. Armstrong came along early in the morning to open the shop. The burglars left no clue whereby they could be identified.

It is now pretty evident that this County is the headquarters of a well organized and desperate gang of housebreakers. A number of suspicious strangers—with no visible means of support—have been prowling around here of late. It is just possible those prowlers plan the burglaries, while confederates, who are kept well in the background, execute them and thereby manage to throw officers of the law off the right scent. Something must be done to secure proper protection against the incursions of these midnight desperadoes, and we are pleased to state, that several suspicious characters are now being kept under a vigilant surveillance.

ECONOMY IS WEALTH,—Many persons are not aware of the extent to which dyeing and renewing of garments is practiced by the best families in our cities and towns. The old reliable firm of R. Parker & Co., dyers and cleaners, of Toronto, have established an agency here so goods of all kinds may be left at any time and returned at the same prices as if taken to any of their stores in Toronto, Hamilton, Brantford, or London. No extra charge being made for express. Ladies dresses, jackets, cloaks, &c. cleaned, dyed, and finished ready made up except silks and velvets, but dresses that are going to be made over in another style should be dyed in pieces before making. Gents clothing of all kinds carefully cleaned, dyed, and finished ready made up. Leave your goods with Mr. Leech, tailor, agent, and will receive prompt attention.

Personal and Pointed.

It is said that Mr. Spurgeon is in the habit of testing the abilities of the more promising of the students of his college by obliging them to go up into the pulpit with a sealed envelope in their own hands containing the text of their address.

On one of these occasions a student, on opening the paper, found this subject set, "Apply the story of Zacchæus to your own personal qualifications and calling." And he delivered himself in the following way:

"My brethren, the subject on which I have to address you to-day is a comparison between Zacchæus and my own qualifications. Well, the first thing that we read of about Zacchæus was that he was small of stature, and I never felt so small as I do now. In the second place, we read that he climbed up into a tree, which is very much my position now. Thirdly, we read that Zaccheus 'made haste to come down,' in which I joyfully follow his example."

THE FISHERIES TROUBLE.

Pedigree of the American Commissioners —The Alaska Difficulty.

A Washington despatch says: The following is the pedigree of the gentlemen appointed by the President on the Fishery Commission:

Mr. James Burrill Angell was born at Scituate, R.I., in 1829, and is son of Joseph K. Angell, a distinguished writer on maritime law. He graduated at Brown University and subsequently became Professor of Modern Languages there. From that position he went to edit the Providence Journal, which he did for six years. Then he became President of the University of Vermont, and in 1871 President of the University of Michigan. He has since resigned that office. He is a member of the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institute. In 1880-81 he was United States Minister to China.

Mr. W. L. Putnam is a Maine lawyer who has been attorney for the United States in all the fisheries disputes, and is thoroughly versed in the American side of the dispute.

Secretary Bayard comes of a family of statesmen and lawyers. He is in his 60th year, and was admitted to the bar in 1851, after having spent some years in commercial pursuits. In 1869 he was elected to the U. S. Senate from his native State, Delaware, and since then, until his selection as President Cleveland's Secretary of State, has been one of the leading Democrats in the body. He is reputed to be a man of broad views and is a thorough American.

THE BEHRING'S SEA TROUBLES.

The controversy between the United States and the British Governments growing out of the capture of certain British vessels engaged in seal catching in Behring's Sea is still being agitated. Secretary Bayard was to-day shown a statement recently telegraphed from Ottawa to the effect that certain instructions to the United States District Judge and District Attorney in Alaska from Attorney-General Garland, promulgated on January 26th, 1887, have not been carried out to this day. The Attorney-General's instructions on the subject were as follows:

I am instructed by the President to instruct you to discontinue all proceedings in the matter of the seizure of the British vessels Caroline, Onward and Thornton, and to discharge all vessels now held under such seizure and release all persons that may be under arrest in connection therewith. (Signed) A. H. GARLAND, Attorney-General.

It is further stated that Judge Dawson issued an order to the marshal to release the vessels, but afterwards withdrew it, and the vessels are still beached at Ounalaska, while the seal skins found upon them were sent to San Francisco. The Secretary, after reading carefully the article referred to, said he could not believe an officer of the Government, located at Alaska or any other point, would wilfully disregard an order issued upon the authority of the President, based upon the laws of our country, and therefore there must be a mistake in the statement telegraphed from Ottawa. He then went on to say that as soon as the international point growing out of the capture of the British sealers was brought to his attention, he promptly consulted Attorney-General Garland and from him learned the legal points in the case. There are several law questions involved, which can only be decided by the courts after due deliberation. In the meantime the vessels and crews are not detained by the United States authorities, and the owners can have them if they will go or send after them. The vessels in question are deckless boats, or fishing smacks, of but little value, which probably accounts for the lack of inclination on the part of their owners to go after them. They are beached in a rough, rude region, about 200 miles from any settlement, and their owners probably do not consider them worth going after. One of the main points which led to the discontinuance of the proceedings with regard to these vessels was their trifling value, and up to the present time the United States has not been asked to pay a single cent of damages. The question growing out of the catching of seals is the most important one the United States has to deal with in this connection, and while it is the purpose of the Administration to defend the right of American citizens in all parts of the world, it is also desirable to know and respect the law on the subject. Seal catching is a valuable industry, in which more than 13,000 persons are actively engaged, and the Alaska Seal Company is doubtless anxious to preserve its rights according to its understanding of the contracts it has with the United States and Russia. This company pays so much per skin for every seal killed, and its contract, which terminates in 1890, is for twenty years. Under the terms of the contract they are permitted to kill seal on two islands only, and it is probably their desire that the seal-skin market shall not be overstocked. This company naturally exerts some influence in Alaska, and it may be that they were instrumental in raising this question with a view of having it disposed of. Since the three smaller vessels were seized larger ships have been drawn into the controversy, and the whole subject will be considered together. There has been no unnecessary delay so far as the State Department knows, and the case is now awaiting its turn in the courts.

Cheese for Manchester.

A London cable says: The Co-operative Wholesale Society of Manchester, an influential association, discussed at its annual meeting a proposal to build or rent a cheese factory in Ontario, to supply the Manchester market. The society's last year's importations amount in value to £1,126. The proposition was fully discussed and strongly supported. The discussion was ultimately adjourned for a year.

AFTER EMIN BEY.

Stanley Well and Pushing Rapidly Forward—Only Met by Natural Difficulties of Travel.

A St. Paul de Loanda cable says: According to the last news received at Boma from the Upper Congo Stanley was pushing forward, and the only difficulties he met with were the natural obstacles of the country. About July 25th the expedition had ascended the Aruwhimi to the elevated country belonging to the Mabodi district. The river becoming too narrow, they left the rafts, and the men for several days had to carry a double burden of provisions. The steel whaleboat was carried past the narrows and again launched. Stanley calculated that upon arriving at the summit of the tablelands giving shape to the basin of the Aruwhimi, the expedition would halt two days for a rest and would establish a camp there, to be garrisoned by twenty men with a European officer. The districts traversed were tranquil, and little difficulty was experienced in obtaining provisions from the natives. The progress of the expedition averaged twenty kilometres daily. Tippoo Tib, in his last message, wrote that he was still at his post at Stanley Falls, awaiting reinforcements. He had gained the good-will of several neighboring chiefs. Owing to the disturbed state of the country Tippoo Tib could not, as he had agreed to, organize a revictualling force to despatch direct to Albert Nyanza, but he intended to do so as soon as possible. Disquiet continues between Stanley Falls and the confluence of the Aruwhimi and the Congo, and many villages have been pillaged. It is believed that the garrison which Stanley left at Yambunya has been forced to interfere to maintain order in the neighborhood.

A REMARKABLE CASE.

Transformation of a Young Girl Into an Old Woman.

A Cleveland, O., despatch says: Mary Harmon, daughter of a farmer, was engaged to be married to Jacob Eberlein, who followed the Harmons from Pennsylvania a short time ago. About six weeks ago the young couple came to the city. One of the young man's friends worked in one of the electric light establishments, and they went to see the machinery. While passing through the shop Miss Harmon received a shock of electricity and fell to the floor. In a few minutes she recovered sufficiently to be removed from the place, and was taken to her home. Medical aid was summoned. For four days the girl lay paralyzed. Then she regained the use of her limbs, but immediately began to lose flesh. The hair on the left side of her head turned gray and began falling out. After four weeks she was able to be about and able to attend to most of her household duties, but in that time she had been transformed from a young, handsome girl into a feeble old woman. Her form, which had been plump and rounded, is thin and bent, and the skin on her face and body is dry and wrinkled. Her voice is harsh and cracked, and no one to look at her would imagine that she was less than 60 years of age. The physicians claim that the electric current communicated directly with the principal nerves of the spine and left side of the head, and that the shock almost destroyed her vitality.

CHLOROFORMED AND ROBBED.

An Old Woman Waylaid in Ottawa and Relieved of $1,000.

An Ottawa despatch says: Mrs. Mullens, an old woman 75 years of age, was chloroformed on Theodore street about 7 o'clock last evening and robbed of $1,000 she had drawn from the savings bank to take to Scotland, whither she expected to go in a few days. She was proceeding along Theodore street alone when a buggy with three men in it drove up to her and alighted near her. One of them offered to see her home, but she declined. The men then spoke together in French, and one of them put a handerchief to her face and held it there till she lost consciousness and did not recover it for several hours, when some of her friends found her lying in a field near her own house. She is in a dangerous condition and is not expected to live. She says the men had their faces blacked. They were evidently well acquainted with her and her movements. No clue of the ruffians has yet been found.

Better Get Married at Home.

A Detroit despatch says: The Marriage License Law went into effect yesterday and caused a lot of trouble to ministers and contracting parties. A number of weddings had been set in the Catholic churches at 8 o'clock yesterday morning, and the County Clerk's office did not open till 9 o'clock. The licenses for these marriages had to be made out before breakfast. Towards noon a Canadian couple came to the clerk's office and called for a license, having made the journey here from an interior Canadian point on purpose to escape the marriage law of the Dominion. They were terribly disappointed at learning that they could not obtain a license, the law providing that licenses must be issued in the county where one of the parties resides. The would-be groom called attention to the fact that nothing was said about foreigners and suggested that the provision quoted referred only to residents of Michigan. The clerk was in doubt and refused the license, but telegraphed a statement of the case to the Attorney-General for his opinion, which has not been received. The Canadians must go back home disconsolate. The law is believed to be a good thing, as it will prevent many runaway and hasty marriages and will also furnish reliable data for vital statistics.

CROSSED THE STYX.

A Death in the Royal Family—How Gladstone Lost His Breakfast.

A London cablegram says: Mr. Labouchere, M. P., in this week's Truth records the following: There was another death in the Royal Family last week. Poor Noble, the Queen's favorite collie, passed away full of years. Noble got so many luxuries forced upon him in consequence of his being high in royal favor that his decease is without doubt due to the exalted position he occupied. He was the Queen's inseparable companion when walking and was often favored with a seat in her carriage. The Queen regrets the loss of her favorite all the more keenly because he was in one sense a relic of the late lamented John Brown, who was responsible for Noble's early training and who taught him that alphabet of all pious dogs, namely, how to behave himself indoors. In politics Noble was a strong Conservative, for it is recorded of him that he once stole Mr. Gladstone's breakfast. Mr. Gladstone, who was at that time Prime Minister, was on an official visit to the Queen at Osborne. He was to leave for London immediately after his breakfast, which had been prepared for him in the sitting room set apart for his use. This room communicated with his bedroom. On Mr. Gladstone's opening the intervening folding-doors, he was startled to see the Queen's pet quietly trotting off with a mutton chop in his mouth. With praiseworthy economy the royal servants had only sent up one chop, and as there was no time to cook another the Prime Minister had to breakfast on toast and butter.

WITH A MAD ENGINEER.

A Fireman's Exciting Ride on the Wabash Road.

A Des Moines, Ia., despatch says: Fireman Roberts, of the Wabash road, arrived yesterday on his train, telling a thrilling story of his experience with a mad engineer. When the train drew out of this place Tuesday night Engineer Botsworth appeared all right, but before they had gone far Roberts noticed that his companion acted queerly. At Harvey he should have stopped for water, and the fireman backed the train down to the proper place while the engineer acted in a dazed manner. Once on the road again, Botsworth began to travel faster, until the train was running 50 miles an hour. Then Roberts realized that Botsworth was deranged, and just in time grasped the lever and saved the train from going through an open switch. Faster flew the engine, Botsworth standing by with a vacant look, and as they thundered through Bacon the maniac gave a yell and started to spring from the cab window. The watchful fireman caught him by the legs. While he balanced him on the window ledge he managed, with his feet, to stop the train. The conductor helped get Botsworth back to the baggage car, where he was carefully guarded until the train reached Ottumwa, when he was handed over to the authorities there. It is believed to be paralysis of the brain that ails him.

A GIRL BURGLAR.

She Successfully Conceals Her Sex Until She Confesses in Court.

A Princeton, Md., despatch says: Five burglars were sentenced to the penitentiary yesterday. One of them astonished the court by announcing that the name Charles Kelly, which was read in the indictment, ought to be Clara King, and that she was in male attire. She said she was 22 years old, had been thrown on the world helpless and alone; that she took to male attire a year to get along better, and had thus far escaped detection. She was sent to the reformatory.

European Footlight Gossip.

A Paris correspondent telegraphs: I met Mme. Gerster to-day on the Boulevard. She is living at Auteuil, a suburb of Paris, seems in excellent health and talks most rationally. She is busy preparing for her concert tour in the United States, which will open in New York about the 20th of October. Among the artists engaged to support Mme. Gerster are Miss Nettie Carpenter, violinist; Mme. Hastreiter and Miles, Anna Navaro and Carbone. The tenor and contralto are yet to be engaged. Should the season prove profitable New York may hear Mme. Gerster in opera in spring.

A Farmer's Peculiar Hardship.

A Columbus, O., despatch says: James Leslie, a farmer of Ada, has called the attention of the State Board of Health to a disease which he has, and which has been pronounced to be glanders by the local physicians, with the result that his neighbors and relatives have as completely ostracized him as if he were a leper. He cannot even sell his farm.

PREFERS BRITISH RULE.

The Nizam of Hyderabad's Gift for the Defence of the Indian Frontier.

A London cable says: His Highness the Nizam of Hyderabad has addressed a letter to the Indian Office which is subjected to great congratulations in English official circles. The Nizam says in the outset of his letter that he has for some time noticed that the Indian revenue has shown but little increase, while the expenditures have been steadily gaining. He finds that these expenditures have been steadily increased by the necessity of expending large sums for improved defence of the Indian frontier against the advance of Russia and Central Asia. He says in this letter that he believes that entire India benefits from these measures, and he therefore as the oldest ally of the English in India deems it necessary to show in some open way that the interests of all the inhabitants of India, British and native, are identical in this matter of frontier defence against Russian aggression. He therefore offers the English Government a free gift of £200,000 annually for a period of two years for the purpose of strengthening English resources along the line of defences of the northwest frontier.

The Times editorially speaks of this contribution and says that it is absolutely without precedent in Indian history of any such step being taken in time of peace, and that it is significant of the great distrust of the East Asian potentates against Russia. The Nizam is the foremost Mohammedan potentate in the English quarter of Asia, and in the substantial attribute of power he is superior to the Shah of Persia.

FOUND A FORTUNE.

Two Ohio Woodchoppers Discover $10,000 in a Tree.

An Akron, O., telegram says: Washington Reichard and William Snyder yesterday while chopping trees at New Portage opened a log in which they discovered two shot bags full of gold and silver coin, besides a roll of bills containing not less than $5,000. The bills were badly moulded. The men at first kept quiet about their treasure trove, which amounts to fully $10,000, but were so happy over their sudden fortune that they went to town and bought grand suits of clothes throughout, and then returned to New Portage, a coal mining and manufacturing village, and set up drinks until the population of the place was drunk almost to a man.

The source of the money becoming known, older citizens recalled the fact that about fifteen years ago Jacob Trackbach, a miser, died at that place. He was supposed to be wealthy, having done a big business in land speculation. After his death his house and land were turned over to find his cash, but all without avail. It is now claimed that this tree had been the miser's treasury. The tree was cut down to-day, and about six feet from the ground a good-sized hole was found which gave evidence of a plug having rotted in it. The silver dollars rolled out when the log was opened, and the treasure which had for years been searched for was laid before the eyes of poor and now almost crazy men.

What Came of Pulling a Tooth.

A case of a somewhat remarkable character is at the present time in the London Temperance Hospital, under the care of Dr. R. J. Lee. A girl, aged 15, had the last molar tooth in the lower jaw on the right side removed about six weeks ago. No anæsthetic was administered. She was in perfect health at the time. Half an hour after the operation she began to yawn, and has continued to do so since. One yawn succeeds another without interruption and with an interval of two or three seconds. Galvanism had been tried without effect and other remedies previous to admission into the hospital. Three days afterward the yawning changed to sneezing and recently she has suffered from constant and rapidly succeeding fits of sneezing, each of which paroxysms appears to begin with a yawn. She seems to have no power of controlling herself, or only to a very slight extent, and if she attempts to do so the next sneeze is more violent.

A Great Affluence of Bluenoses.

There are 100,000 "bluenoses" from the Maritime Provinces of Canada in this country, against 778,564 in the Provinces themselves. As a matter of fact there are more Canadians from these Provinces now living in this country than the added population of the provincial towns of Halifax, St. John, Portland, Charlottetown and Fredericton. Speaking of this the St. John Telegraph says: "These are startling facts. How is this drain of our population to be checked? We have tried confederation for that purpose and it has failed. We have tried protection and it has but aggravated the evil. We have tried building the Pacific Railway and other schemes, but without checking this drain of our maritime life blood. Is it not time we tried reciprocity?" —New York Tribune.

CAUGHT AT MALINGERING.

A Very Artful Convict Finds His Match in the Prison Doctor.

A Jackson, Mich., despatch says: Levi M. Brott, a State Prison convict, sentenced a year ago to three years for larceny, began seven months ago to develop symptoms of paralysis. He would suddenly fall to the ground while at work and could not eat for long periods, all of which ended by his taking to his bed. The muscles of his face became rigid, the eyes fixed and he ceased to speak or eat only as food was fed him with a spoon. He was apparently deaf and could not see. Physicians from all parts of the State examined him and all pronounced his malady paralysis. Prison Physician Williams, however, has been satisfied all along that Brott was feigning all his symptoms, but at the same time he deemed it nearly impossible for him to do so. The doctor yesterday determined to play a new card. He called the attendants into the hospital and told them, in the presence of Brott, that the case was a peculiar one and that the convict could not live beyond a few days, anyway, and that the next day he should proceed to chloroform Brott, saw the skull and see what the disease was. The doctor then left and very shortly Brott began to move, and calling the hospital attendant to him, he told that official that he had been shamming from the start in order to get a pardon, and did this for sympathy. Brott was rooted out of bed and was put to work to-day in the paint shop. Dr. Williams says he has heard of one similar case in this country.

TRAVELLING MADE EASY.

The Magnificent Cars in Which President and Mrs. Cleveland Travel.

A Washington despatch says: The special train which is conveying the President and Mrs. Cleveland through the west and south is a marvel of tasteful elegance and seems to lack nothing which money could purchase or human ingenuity devise and construct to make travelling comfortable. Its three Pullman cars are so connected as to form one continuous car, traversable from end to end without opening a door or suffering exposure to the weather. The private quarters of the President and Mrs. Cleveland are in Mr. Pullman's private car, which contains a parlor, bedroom, dressing-room and a commodious "observatory," the walls of the latter being almost entirely of plate glass. This was the rear car till after the train passed Baltimore, affording its occupants from the observatory and the wide safety-railed platform behind it an unobstructed view of the country. The middle car is in general features patterned after the familiar Pullman sleeper model, but embodies in its details all the later improvements made by Mr. Pullman. The first car contains the smoking-room, library, barber-shop and bath-room. Room is found in corners invisible to the passengers for an engine and dynamo which are to furnish electricity for lighting the train and ringing its bells and for the cooking range and entire outfit of a first-class kitchen.

Keeping Apples.

An English periodical says that coal ashes have proved a valuable substance in which to pack apples for long keeping. The ashes are thoroughly sifted, so as to give a soft material, and the fruit is then placed in alternating layers with the ashes. There appears to be one great advantage in the use of this material when kept fresh from the fire—the absence of all dampness. It absorbs any moisture of the apples tending to decay. By using plenty, changes in temperature are avoided, and the outer cold may be excluded, and freezing prevented. Eggs placed on end may be safely packed in layers in the ashes.

Varying Ideas of Politeness.

Well, there are different ideas of politeness. In a ferry-boat a fellow sat and spat against the wall as though firing tobacco juice at a mark. A cabinful of ladies were disgusted. Then an officer came in and asked him what he meant by such conduct.

"Can't you see the notice?" the officer exclaimed.

A framed injunction read as follows: "Out of respect for the ladies, gentlemen will not spit on the floor."

"And that's why I'm spitting on the wall instead of the floor," said the passenger.—From a New York Letter.

They sang that hymn.—Musical Herald.

CURRENT TOPICS.

Of the Empress Eugenie, a Paris correspondent writes: "She was lately at Amsterdam, whither she went to consult a noted Dutch physician respecting the rheumatism, from which she is a constant sufferer. An American lady who saw her there tells me she has grown very stout and infirm, and has lost every vestige of her ones dazzling beauty. She is subject to attacks of insomnia, during which she will sit the whole night through before the portrait of the Prince Imperial, and these attacks usually terminate in fits of weeping and acute hysteria."

Chevreul, the French savant, has just celebrated his 101st birthday. When asked the secret of his longevity, he replied: "There is no secret; there can be no rule of life; what is good for one man may no be good for another. We must study what is best for us individually. For example, my parents lived to be more than 90 years old, and they drank wine; from my childhood wine has been disagreeable to me. Like Locke and Newton, I have never cared for any beverage but water, and yet I am President of the Wine Society of Anjou."

Francis Joseph, Emperor of Austria and King of Hungary, has more royal titles than any other European sovereign. He is King of seven countries or provinces, Grand Prince of one, Prince or Margrave of several others, and Archduke, Grand Duke and Duke of half a dozen more. He is considered the richest monarch of Europe, with the possible exception of Queen Victoria. Beside his personal revenues, which are enormous, the Emperor manages on various pretexts to extract about $2,000,000 a year from the public treasury. Altogether Francis Joseph is what is commonly known as "well fixed."

The British Medical Journal gives the following interesting particulars of the height, weight and dimensions of Thomas Longley, of Dover, who is said to be the heaviest British subject in the world. Mr. Longley, who is a respectable and intelligent publican, is 40 years of age, being born (of parents not above the normal size) in 1848. As a baby he was not considered large. His present weight is 40 stone; height, 6 feet 4 inch; measurement of the waist, 80 inches; size of leg, 25 inches. He finds considerable difficulty in walking, and does not trust himself in a carriage, for fear of breaking the springs. He is said to be very temperate both in eating and drinking, and has never suffered from any ill-health of a serious nature.

The Sewing Girls of Germany.

The sewing girls of Germany, according to a report which has been sent to the Department of State, have a hard time. Their wages are barely sufficient for subsistence and lodging, leaving all necessary incidental expenses, including clothing, to be provided either by a girl's family or through independent efforts of her own. In the larger cities this condition leads to frightful suffering or degrading immorality and ruin. Their employers are endeavoring to compel them to purchase their thread and other supplies at employers' prices, and the well-to-do girls who want a little extra money for luxuries or fineries compete with the lower classes and do the work at even lower rates than those generally paid. In short, only those girls have a passable existence who have sufficient support in their family ties. The self-dependent girl who lives by herself generally falls an easy prey to designing men and ends in private or public immorality and prostitution.—Washington Post.

The Moneyed Girl Who Couldn't Write.

Not long ago a very nicely dressed woman, accompanied by a gentlemanly looking man, walked into one of the banks and asked for a certificate of deposit. The book was passed out to her for her signature. She hesitated a moment, glanced nervously at her escort, then boldly grasped the pen and put her face very close to the paper. When the teller took the book back he saw plainly enough that the girl had simply made some very minute up and down scratches. He looked at her, saw her confusion and decided to be lenient with her. As if unable to read the signature clearly he inquired the name. It was given promptly. Then it was slyly written in the teller's own bold letters, the certificate filled out and delivered. The escort never suspected the difficulty and the girl departed happy.—Chicago Herald.

Unlucky Bill.

"Your children all turned out well, I reckon?" said a man addressing an old friend he had not seen for many years.

"Wall, yes, all but Bill, pore feller."

"Drunk licker, I reckon."

"Oh, no, never drunk no licker, but han't amounted to nothin'. Bill wuz deceived and it ruint him."

"Love affair?"

"Yes, an' a mighty bad one."

"She married some other feller, eh?"

"Oh, no, she married him. She wuz a widder, an' let out that she was well off, but she wan't. W'y, she wan't able to get Bill a decent suit o' clothes the week airter they wuz married. Yes, the pore fellow has lost confidence."—Arkansaw Traveller.

A Line of Study.

Editor (to young assistant)—"Mr. Greathead, I want to map out a line of journalistic study for you!"

Young Assistant (dubiously)—"I am pretty well up to newspaper stuff, as it is, sir."

Editor—"I am aware of that, Mr. Greathead; but you know too much. I would suggest that you devote one hour each day to forgetting something."—Puck.

Sad Result.—"Capital articles those of yours on Commercial Union, Mr. Young," said our young man to the hon. gentleman from Galt. "But why do you look so ashamed? You ought to be proud of your work." "Proud! Perhaps you haven't noticed that I'm being praised by the Toronto World," was all he said.—Grip.

The Pittsburg, Pa., Grand Opera House gives an opera glass with every seat. The glasses are chained to the chairs, the chairs are riveted to the floor, the floor is nailed to the beams, the beams are let into the foundation, and the foundation is sunk into the earth, but one of these fine nights some fellow will dig the whole establishment out and carry it off, rather than let go of his glass.

AN UNHAPPY BRIDE.

It was reserved for a bride lately to suffer a complication of accidents which fortunately could not occur more than once or twice in a life time. The young lady left the house and got ten blocks away when she discovered that she had not put on her bridal veil. This was no fool of a veil either. It was not the regulation square of blonde lace, but a lovely Brussels net, richly wrought by the nuns in the convent of the Sacre Cœur, in Montreal. Back went the bride for this gorgeous portion of her raiment. It was thrown over her in the carriage and the wedding procession again started. This time a breath of air produced an inclination to sneeze. The poor bride repressed it, but it escaped at last, and oh! horror on horror's head, her white satin waist split from belt to shoulder. Here occurred a halt, this time at a little shop where thread and needle were obtained, and the gaping space with difficulty was covered. At last, much too late, that unfortunate woman reached the church. In stepping nervously from the carriage the lace bottom of an under petticoat caught on the step and she felt the fastening give way. Every step up the aisle she could feel that cruel skirt slip, slip, till she feared she would have to step out of it at the very altar. She took a grip on the side and on she went. During the entire service she clung to it like grim death. She let go for a moment to get her glove off for the ring, and when she resumed her hold she felt that it had gained on her. Like Florence Wallack, she might have been married with the catechism for all she knew. She had these thoughts: "Will that petticoat be dropped in the aisle, or will I shed it on the sidewalk before the mob as I climb into the carriage? Is it the lawn skirt, with three ruffles of valenciennes, or is it that little blue embroidered cashmere ma made me wear so I wouldn't take cold?"

The perspiration started on her pallid brow as she hurriedly made the responses, and, half-fainting, made her way down the aisle.

"Don't lose your presence of mind, dear," whispered the young husband.

"It's my petticoat I'm losing," returned the lady, pettishly.

When once in the carriage the sentimental bridegroom pressed her hand and said: "At last the prize is mine."

She said the same thing as she kicked the dreadful petticoat under the carriage seat. It was the woollen one.—Philadelphia Press.

Fresh News Notes.

A bill providing for several importan sanitary reforms will be prepared by the Quebec Provincial Board of Health and submitted to the Legislature next session.

The Dominion Government has been invited to send a representative to the Interprovincial Congress to be held next month in the city of Quebec, but will most probably decline.

At yesterday's meeting of the Montreal boodle investigation committee, counsel for the complainant attempted to put a number of fishing questions on the gas contract charge to witnesses, but they were ruled out by the committee. Nothing important was elicited, and unless something definite is proved at the next meeting the charge in its present form will fall through.

It is stated that Sir John Macdonald will within a few weeks resign the General Superintendency of Indian Affairs, the administration of the Indian Department reverting, as in former years, to the Department of the Interior.

The appointment of Mr. Burbidge, Deputy Minister of Justice, as judge of the new Court of Claims will be gazetted today. It is rumored that the office of Deputy Minister will be abolished, in view of the appointment shortly of a Solicitor-General.

Sir John Macdonald has not yet signified his acceptance of the position of Canada's representative on the Fisheries Commission, nor will the appointment be made by the Canadian Government until it is definitely informed as to the scope of the commission.

Kettles on the Boil.

Here is an advertisement that is appearing in the Utah papers: "Wanted, information of John Edmund Kettle, aged 26, formerly of London, Eng., latterly of Salt Lake City, by the undersigned, Marietta Kettle, Rosa V. Kettle, Lillian O. Kettle, Katharine K. Kettle, Mattie S. Kettle, Susan T. Kettle, Fannie B. Kettle, Constance C. Kettle, Margaret A. Kettle and Julia A. Kettle, all of Salt Lake City." Apparently these Kettles are all boiling; at any rate, it will be pretty hot for John Edmond if he is caught.—N. Y. Tribune.

Thoughtful Little Boys.

Some boys were playing in an alley off Congress street the other day when a woman came out of her back gate and said:

"Boys, I want you to go away from here with your noise. My husband is very ill."

"No, sir."

"Oh, then, you don't want him to die, of course. Come, boys, let's go."

Copying the above, the Buffalo News wonderingly inquires in a headline, "Who is Jones?" Well, we may not be able to give all the particulars, but we have heard that "Jones, he pay the freight." If he is making money he ought to.—Rochester Herald.

HIT 'EM AGAIN.

The Toledo "Stroller" Takes a Shy at Two Handy Expressions.

Of all the shortening and clipping that goes on in daily conversation, what so meaningless as this exclamation—"Thanks"? If one has done you a favor, why not say "I thank you?" not "I thank ye," but "I thank you," plainly, clearly and distinctly. The exclamation "Thanks," jerked out of some unfathomable depths, savors of too much haste to be polite, and best be omitted.

"Thanks" is only equalled, in my judgment, in straight down wrongness in the idiocy that responds to the polite "I thank you," or "Very much obliged," for a favor rendered or a kindness performed, with "Not at all." I have, I think, written of this before, but it will bear repetition, and I can see no reason why, if you pick up a lady's kerchief, tender her your seat in a car, or save a friend from a dangerous fall on that result of a fool's carelessness, a banana peel, and are rewarded with that exactly proper remark, "I thank you," I say, I can see no good and valid reason why it would not be equally proper and true to say "You're a liar," as to respond with "Not at all." Honest now, can you?—"Stroller" in Toledo Journal.

The Drummer's Revenge.

A drummer had a spite at a hotel in Palestine, Texas, and resolved on a terrible revenge. So when he went to Galveston he "bagged" a lot of the cockroaches for which the island city is celebrated. Bringing a lot of the largest, commonly called by native Galvestonians "diggerloogers," the drummer took them to the hotel and turned them loose in the halls and corridors. In about two weeks the hotel was swarming with them and they got in the soups, preserves, jams, molasses, in the milk—everywhere—and worked hard all day and sat up at night to help that drummer get even. They have filled the hotel and gone to work on the private houses, and now Palestine is accursed with them.—Chicago News.

A Mother's Love.

Teacher—Yes, my children, always remember there is no human love equal to a mother's love.

Little Girl—Womens love their childrens better than their husbands, don't they?

"Very often."

The Widow's Mite.

She was a widow, and perhaps a little sensitive on that account. When she answered a summons the other day she found a good-looking ministerial chap standing at the door.

"Good day," he began; "I represent a loan association"——

"So do I," she responded shortly, "and I mean to stay alone; good day, sir."

He hasn't thought it out yet to his entire satisfaction.

Learning to Swim.

It is perhaps not generally known that if a child is taught to swim at a very early age it learns much more easily than when it is older. Instinct teaches it exactly what to do. The children of the South Sea islanders almost live in the water from their early infancy and are quite as much at home there as they are on land.—London Telegraph.

Nikita, Maurice Strakosch's latest discovered star, about whom he told that wonderful Indian story, and for whom he prophesied a future more brilliant and glorious than that of Patti, has appeared in London at the promenade concerts given at Her Majesty's under Col. Mapleson's management. So far the success of this young lady has been of a rather doubtful nature, if we accept the verdict of some of the leading London papers.

A striking instance of the extent to which saving machinery is carried nowadays, says the Industrial Journal, is shown in the tin-can industry. Everybody knows that tin cans are manufactured by machinery. One of the machines used in the process solders the longitudinal seams of the cans at the rate of fifty a minute, the cans rushing along in a continuous stream. Now, of course, a drop or two of solder is left on the can. The drop on the outside can be easily cleared away, but it is not easy to secure the drop left on the inside. It wouldn't do, of course, to retard the speed of the work—better waste the drop; it is only a trifle, anyhow, and to 999 men in 1,000 would not seem worth a minute's attention. The thousandth man worked for a firm using one of these machines, and he set about devising an ingenious arrangement for wiping the inside of the can, thereby saving that drop of solder and leaving none to come in contact with the contents of the can. He was encouraged by his employers to patent his invention, did so, and has already received several thousand dollars in royalties for its use. As the machine solders twenty thousand cans a day, the solder saved by his invention amounted to about $15 a day. It pays to think as you work.

PROFESSIONAL WINDOW-GAZERS.

Two young men who spend the day and a large part of the evening on Chestnut street are paid to do so. They are both well known figures, and generally travel together. They are professional window-gazers. The young men, in common with everybody else, know that to attract a crowd to a window all one has to do is to stand and gaze into that window. In a short time ten or a dozen people will be gazing with him. They were down to hard pan—on their uppers so to speak. One of them went to the proprietor of a men's furnishing house on Chestnut street and told him that for so much a week he would guarantee to attract more attention to his window than all the displays that could be laid out. The proprietor was struck with the idea and gave it a trial. As a consequence, there was a crowd at his window nearly all the time. The young man would walk up to the window with his friend and stand gazing there until a crowd of a dozen or fifteen were standing with them. To keep the crowd moving he would walk away, and that started the break in the crowd. The performance was repeated every ten or fifteen minutes. The young man went to other stores along the street, unfolded his plan and pointed out the success of it. In a short time he had the whole street from Ninth to Broad on his beat, and he had to take his friend into partnership, and he makes plenty of money. If other window-gazers do not get on to the idea and get into the business, these two originators will shortly establish branches of the 'Gazers' in other cities.—Philadelphia News.

The Telephone Craze.

Periodically the public have a craz thrust on their notice; at one time it is a gold-mine, at another a lead company that seeks to draw the hard earnings from the people's pockets. In ancient times it was the South Sea bubble that turned the heads of kings and senators, who were ultimately engulfed in one grand maelstrom that ruined them by thousands. Montreal just now is quietly being flooded with telephonic schemes as flighty in imagination and as dubious in results as the black angel companies floated in the States, to the financial ruin of those who once prided themselves on being in affluent positions. It is against investing in these imaginary companies that we desire to caution our readers. But yesterday a new scheme was afloat to wipe out the Bell Telephone Company by reducing its tariff to $35 per annum for subscribers; to-day another bubble company which wishes to reduce the price to $12 is floating in the air. It is needless to say there is little room for the next fifty years for any competition such as is perhaps intended or intended for sale. From personal inquiry we find that no person, director or otherwise, in the Bell Co., has ever received any bonus on his stock, and that that company has never sold a share below par for stock gambling purposes. It is not to be supposed therefore that any of the new concerns can place the shareholders in a better condition. Again the Bell Telephone Co., with its 4,000 or 5,000 miles of lines, connecting cities and towns, offers to its subscribers facilities which no other Telephone Co. can furnish. The Bell Telephone Co.'s dividends, with the practical monopoly of the past eight years, average about 5 per cent. Therefore it is certain that with its economical and conservative management it has been no special bonanza for its shareholders. Its stock sells to-day at about par. With two or three competitors in the field, and the consequent rate cutting, what prospect is there for dividends from any of them, since it is not to be supposed that the Bell Telephone Co. will retire from the field? This then is a fair financial view of the matter as to the prospect of a new, poor and untried company paying any dividends. Knowing the large number of our subscribers who are shareholders in the Bell Telephone Co., we should be base to our trust did we not try to protect their interests as well as prevent others from losing large amounts of money by investing in new bubbles which cannot by any possibility pay a fair dividend, if any at all. We find on still further inquiry that the Bell Telephone Co. to-day has about 14,000 sets of instruments in use and owns between 4,000 and 5,000 miles of line, connecting cities and towns in Canada and the United States. It has also the exclusive right to connect with the system of the American Bell Telephone Co., in the United States. Any person at all familiar with the business and the cost of construction can readily see that no company could duplicate this construction without a very large capital. Opposition may be a good thing, and where it has a chance of success a creditable thing, but where in common sense is there anything to be made with three or four companies in such a small population as we have in the Dominion of Canada? We have, therefore, two desires in this matter, the first to protect our friends who have already invested in one company, and the second to protect those who may be solicited to invest in certain losses. Finally, what is there to prevent the Bell Telephone Company, with its wealthy and paid-up organization—in case of a doubtful success of their rivals—reducing the price of their subscription to such a point as would wipe out all and sundry who opposed them by a tariff on which none but themselves could subsist?—The Shareholder and Insurance Gazette.

MONSTER MASS MEETINGS

Declare in Favor of Gladstone and Home Rule and Condemn the Police and Government.

A last (Sunday) night's London cable says: A great Liberal demonstration was held at Templecombe, Dorsetshire, yesterday. Twenty thousand persons were present, Somerset, Hants and Wilts sending contingents. Mr. John Morley, who was the chief speaker, replied to Mr. Chamberlain's recent speech at Birmingham. He denied that the Gladstonian position was not perfectly clear. The Liberals, he said, stood with their feet upon a rock. Mr. Gladstone had announced his assent to modifications of his original Home Rule plan, and every one of his colleagues who had been concerned in preparing the Bill had also cordially assented. What more did anybody want to know? He was amazed that Mr. Chamberlain did not produce his own plan. Was Mr. Chamberlain against Home Rule altogether? The Gladstonians wanted to know also what Radicals like Mr. Chamberlain thought about the doings at Mitchellstown, Ennis and other places. As for Chamberlain's urging a postponement of Irish for English legislation, the position of Ireland, the speaker said, would not allow Parliament to deal with other affairs. The ship of State was in a storm and was surrounded by tumultuous waves. There was only one way of making port—to summon back the old pilot. (Cheers.) Resolutions were passed expressing confidence in Mr. Gladstone and demanding justice for Ireland.

A mass meeting, which was attended by 10,000 persons, was held to-day at Tower Hill. The police seized the placards announcing the meeting and demanded the names of the promoters of the demonstration. Speeches were made from six platforms. The speeches condemned the Government's Irish policy and the conduct of the police at Mitchellstown. Appropriate resolutions were put and carried. A strong force of police was present, but their services were not needed, as the proceedings were orderly throughout.

This, with the surplus of other products, will realize about $7,000,000. The average yield of wheat for the Province will be about 25 bushels to the acre, and may probably reach 30.

Major Phipps Free.

The term of imprisonment of Major Ellis P. Phipps, the defaulting superintendent of the almshouse, expired last midnight. His season of mental and physical depression, which invoked the solicitude of his physicians and friends, was followed, as the time of his release drew nearer, by brighter spirits and his old physical vigor. When he left the prison he was as vigorous-looking as when he was first arrested. He has yet formed no plans for the future. It was announced some time ago that he would tell all he knew about almshouse irregularities when he was released, because he fancied that his quondam friends had deserted him in his hour of need. The Major the other day denied any intention of making any statement.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

The Durham Chronicle acknowledges that THE ADVANCE man is a "self-sacrificing individual." Thanks; sorry we can't return the compliment.

The Meaford Monitor completed four years of its existence last week, under the management of its present Editor & Proprietor, Bro. Sunter. May it live for ever!

A boss barber, wife and family have moved into town; ditto a painter; ditto a tanner. Several new industries have sprung into existence. All we want now is a boot-black and we can shake hands with Owen Sound and other pretentious hamlets!

By the way, we notice that those cable fiends have taken that old European war skeleton out of its closet again. Wish somebody would smash the blamed old "cussarn" into a hundred million fragments and give us poor Americans even a brief season of repose.

What is an independent newspaper? Well, my son, its a kind of journal with political leanings in the direction of the men who have a controlling interest in public money bags. In short, my son, it is a sort of newspaper which can accommodate itself to circumstances—favorable circumstances, of course!

This "Third Party" movement forcibly reminds one of those politicians who sit on the fence inactive while a great national contest, perchance, is being fought out on both sides of them. After the battle they are usually to be found on the side of the victors—mere camp followers as it were. It also reminds one of drones.

Did you ever see a man trying to catch a train as it was moving out of the depot, and while he was yet some distance from the object in view? If you have, then, gentle reader, you have some faint conception of the strenuous efforts the village, yclept Durham, is making to keep pace with Flesherton, Priceville and other progressive places.

The Hanover Post is enraged at THE ADVANCE, and with pretty good reason. The Pilot finds it a mighty big undertaking to attempt to squash the truth, and so he has crawled into one of the Post knot-holes, and will presently come forth with the air of injured innocence worn by the little darkey when he stole the chickens and put them under his torn straw hat. Lying doesn't pay!

When THE ADVANCE clips an item or article from any of its exchanges, it invariably gives credit. But the same can not be said of several of our esteemed local contemporaries, who appropriated the following "editorial note" from THE ADVANCE, of a recent date, without giving credit:

There are some envious mortals in this world, who cannot bear to see anybody get along well except themselves. In grasping for the whole earth, it maddens them to find that somebody else has been getting a few stray chunks as well as themselves.

The attention of our Township Fathers is again directed to the Boyne Water Bridge in this town, which is really in a very bad condition. The wooden butments are beginning to bend towards each other in an alarming manner, and it is only a question of time before there will be a serious collapse, unless immediate steps are taken to prevent such a calamity. The wonder to us is that that somebody has not ventilated the matter at the Council Board before this. [Since foregoing was in type, Reeve Christoe and Councillor Sharp have examined the bridge and will attend to the necessary repairs at once.]

Did it ever strike chronic grumblers that Flesherton is going ahead and rapidly growing into a fine healthy boy, ready to discard short pants at any moment? Well, such is the case, and its growth is not of the mushroom variety either. The said chronic growlers will have to direct their attention to some more congenial atmosphere. As far as Flesherton is concerned, their occupation's gone for a dead certainty.

Bro. Creighton, of the Owen Sound Times, is not so easily disconcerted as our smart city contemporary, the Toronto World, would have us believe, if we are to credit Dame Rumor's latest and most authentic report, to the effect, that very little more stock is required to float the new Conservative newspaper organ, The Empire. Bro. Creighton has a knack of "getting there" in any undertaking he takes hold of.

OUR NEW OFFICE.

The new ADVANCE Office on Sydenham street (nearly opposite the Photograph Gallery) is now ready for occupation, and this week we take up our quarters therein. For over six years and a half, THE ADVANCE has been continuously issued in the old office on Collingwood street, and it seems like parting with an old friend, to leave the scene of many of the trials and vicissitudes incident to pioneer Fleshertonjournalism, if we may be permitted to use the term. But this life is full of changes, and after this date subscribers, patrons and friends will find us established in our new quarters on Sydenham street, prepared, as usual, to give prompt and careful attention to every department of our business. As a sort of celebration of the event, we offer THE ADVANCE from now until the end of next year for One Dollar cash. We shall be pleased to have all our old friends, and as many new ones as possible, call on us in our new office.

AN EDITOR'S RESPONSIBILITY.

The Editor is legally and morally responsible for every utterance—whether written by himself or correspondents—published in his journal. Every article, letter, or news item, comes directly under his notice, and for every opinion advanced, he is, as above stated, legally and morally responsible.

Years ago the following words, italicised, were invariably placed over communications to the Editor (several times, we must acknowledge, they have adorned the columns of THE ADVANCE):—"The Editor wishes it to be distinctly understood, that he does not hold himself responsible for the opinions expressed by his correspondents." Thus making it appear, that the Editor had discovered a happy idea, whereby the legal consequences following the injudicious, perhaps spiteful, statements of any of his correspondents were placed upon the shoulders to which they morally, though not legally, belonged, and whereby the Editor was relieved from all responsibility in the premises! Why, the Editor might just as well place the italicised words above his editorial columns and expect to relieve himself from responsibility for the opinions expressed by himself!

We see, however, that this stereotyped phrase has been modified somewhat of late, and now reads something like this:—"The Editor does not necessarily ENDORSE the opinions expressed by his correspondents." This, at least, shows less childlike simplicity than the former. For, while the Editor may or may not endorse the utterances of others, he tacitly acknowledges his personal responsibility for the same when he gives publicity to them in his paper. Morally, we maintain, he should not be held amenable for the indiscretions or malicious statements ventilated by others through his journal; legally, we are bound to acknowledge, he can be so held. What is morally right is often legally wrong. In other words, "law is not always justice," as many journalists feel convinced, after having passed through a vexatious and costly libel suit, resulting from the spiteful effusions of some impecunious writer.

The law of libel has been somewhat amended in Ontario, so that it might be safely said that Editor's responsibilities are thereby considerably lessened—in so far as this Province is concerned. But more radical amendments are yet necessary of fulfilment before an Editor can truthfully place the stereotyped phrase—quoted near the commencement of this article—as a sort of prefix to his correspondence department. There must be an amendment that will relieve the Editor of responsibility which is not rightfully his, but which, by a curious and amazing legality, is at present fastened on his shoulders like a veritable "load of sin." What right has an Editor to be dragged into a court of justice and made to atone for the misdeeds of others? True, his paper was made the medium, whereby the mischief was wrought. But it might be equally true, and, in nine cases out of ten, really is true, that the Editor—not knowing the circumstances, and having no time to investigate before going to press—is quite innocent of the malicious character of the letter. On its surface nothing libellous is discernable, either to the Editor or to the casual reader: interested parties only can see the poisoned sting concealed beneath an apparently placid and innocent exterior. We could give dozens of instances coming under our personal notice, which would fully sustain the above statement, did space permit.

In view of the peculiarly disagreeable position thus occupied by Editors at this time in this connection, greater caution should be exercised in the correspondence departments of their respective journals—especially as regards the productions of new writers, or those who could have none but selfish ends to gain. Where there is reason to believe a personal attack is intended on some one, it is a good rule not to publish it unless over the writer's real name; for many of these anonymous writers, though not all, are nothing better than literary assassins. Where this rule is strictly adhered to, the burden of responsibility is greatly lightened.

Mr. Wm. Harvey, an old an respected resident of Proton, died at Hopeville on the 19th Sept. He leaves a wife and four children to mourn his death.—Dundalk Herald.

A youthful Dundalk hunter aimed his loaded gun at a pigeon in a tree, one day recently. The pigeon became curious, flew down on the youth's shoulders and proceeded to investigate matters generally. The young hunter dropped his gun in astonishment, when the pigeon flew off into the depths of the forest.

While Mr. Wm. Middaugh, of Melancthon was drawing a load of hay along the back line near Corbetton last week, one of his horses stepped on a burning stick by the roadside where bush fires were raging, and turning quickly, upset the hay into the fire and it was burned up.—Dundalk Herald

Mr. Daniel Sullivan, a wealthy Irish Catholic farmer of Albion township, has presented Rev. Father Jeffcott, the popular parish priest of the Roman Catholic congregation here, with a fine horse worth about $150. Most christians think they are doing well if they give a few beggarly dollars a year to the church to which they belong, but Dan. Sullivan does not deserve to be mentioned with that class.—Orangeville Post.

Miss Mittie Frane organized a Women's Christian Temperance Union in Dundalk a couple of weeks ago, with Mrs. Newell, wife of the Editor and Proprietor of the Herald, as President. Mrs. Newell is spoken of as a very energetic and eminently practical Temperance lady.

Constable Noble, of Markdale, was in town on Saturday with a warrant for the arrest of Mr. Luke on the charge of stealing a horse from Mr. Hannah of Flesherton Station. It seems that Mr. Hannah drove over to Markdale on Friday, accompained by a little girl. He went into one of the hotels and left the girl sitting in the buggy to wait for him. In a short time Mr. Luke came along and told the girl to go in and get warmed and he would hold the horse. She did so and he drove off with the horse. Not turning up a warrant was got out for his arrest, but he has not been seen since. The horse was found out in the country where it was left by Mr. Luke who had no intention of stealing it but merely drove it off for a joke.—Durham Chronicle. Mr. Luke denies having had anything to do with "spiriting away" Mr. Hanna's horse and rig.

Mysterious Murder!

Correspondence of The Advance.

MIDDLETON, ONT., Sep. 25.—One of the most heartless murders ever published, was committed a little over a mile east of Stewart Station this morning, judging from circumstances, about 2:30 a. m. The night watch-man of Mink Tunnel, while performing his duties, discovered evidence of a terrible struggle in the sand by the side of the track about seven a. m. In his own words: "About two o'clock this morning two half-breed Indians came to my stack and asked for matches, which I gave them, after which they went away. I noticed they went west, but not having any suspicions of their purpose, I did not pay any further attention to them. About seven o'clock, I went out and walked about half a mile west, when I discovered evidence of a terrible struggle in the sand. There was a lot of blood on the sand and stones by the side of the track, and some on the rails.

Looking over the bank, I found the dead body of a half-breed, lying face downward about ten feet from the bank, fearfully mangled—almost past recognition. About the face and head he was so badly disfigured, that I could not say as to whether he was one of the men who were at my stack or not." The murderer is still at large, but strong suspicion points to a certain half-breed Indian named Louie Moses. As to this there is no certainty, but public sentiment is of opinion that the country would be well rid of him. The object of the crime is difficult to determine. It certainly could not have been robbery, although the fact that he had just purchased a new pair of boots and a hat and that they are both gone would suggest that opinion, impossible as it seems. He was said to have been a very quiet and well-behaved half-breed, which would indicate that it was by no act of his that he got into the row, unless as is supposed, that whiskey had something to do with it, which is probable, as he, in company with others, where known to have sold some fish to a dealer at Peninsula Station yesterday. They probably got liquor there. Arrangements have been made for the holding of an inquest. Until then, the case will be wrapped in mystery.

I may further add that I was down at Stewart Station and saw the body of the murdered man. It was a terrible sight.

Cause and Effect.

A few months ago there was an addition to the family of Colonel Percy Yerger, on which occasion Mrs. Yerger's mother, a venerable lady, spent several weeks with the family.

A few days ago Mrs. Yerger received a letter from her mother to the effect that she intended to make another visit.

"Is grandma comin' again?" asked little Tommy, making a disgusted face.

"Yes, Tommy"

"Oh, Lord, that means another squalling baby in the house," sighed Tommy, thinking of the previous visit of the old lady.

An Admiring Little Wife.

Henry George—"My dear, this steak is burned to a crisp."

Mrs. George—"Mercy me! so it is!"

"And the potatoes are not half done."

"So I see now."

"And the bread is sour, and, in fact, there's not a thing fit to eat, and I'm as hungry as a bear. What on earth have you been doing with yourself all the morning?"

"I've been swinging in the hammock, dear, dreaming about how lovely everything will be when your millennium gets here."

Advertise Well.

From the Yonkers Gazette.

Advertise well! 'tis the secret of glory, stick to this principle fast as a leech:
Think of the names that are famous in story; advertise well is the lesson they teach
How have men compassed so wide a connection, made the world swallow their nostrums at will?
'Tis that by constant and serious reflection, advertise well is the principle still.

Advertise well! you will never repent it; nothing more wise can a business man do.
Stick to this motto, and never forget it; advertise well—it will pull you safe through.
Advertise well; do not think what 'twill cost you; publishers' bills are but friends in disguise.
How do you know what your caution has lost you! Would you be wealthy, you must advertise.

Advertise well! though business be waning; those who spend freest must win in the end.
Up and be doing! no need for complaining; act for yourself, and be your own friend.
Advertise well! all lanes have a turning; nothing pays better than paper and ink.
Thousands who daily this motto are spurning, find that it brings them to bankruptcy's brink.

The Doctor's Prescription no Good.

A pretty good story is current on Dr. Race. He was sitting in his office the other day when a big Chinaman rushed in in a state of great excitement.

"I am Dr. Race," said the physician.

"Give medicine for Chinee boy, quick!"

"What is the matter with him?" asked the doctor, reaching for his prescription case.

"Him dead."

A Case of Practical Economy

An anecdote worth laughing over is told of a man who had an infirmity as well as an appetite for fish. He was anxious to keep up his character for honesty, even while enjoying his favorite meal, and while making a bill with his merchant, as the story goes, and when his back was turned, the honest buyer slipped a codfish up under his coat-tail. But the garment was too short to cover up the theft, and the merchant perceived it.

"Now," said the customer, anxious to improve all opportunities to call attention to his virtues, "Mr. Merchant, I have traded with you a great deal, and have paid you up promptly and honestly, haven't I?"

"Oh, yes," answered the merchant; "I have no reason to complain.

"Well," said the customer, "I have always insisted that honesty was the best policy and the best rule to live and die by."

"That's so," replied the merchant. And the customer turned to depart.

"Hold on, friend," cried the merchant. "Speaking of honesty, I have a bit of advice to give you. Whenever you come to trade again you had better wear a longer coat or steal a shorter codfish."

The Judge and the Conductor.

Judge Donohue, of the New York Supreme Court, on one occasion was brought to his bearings in a way as effective as it was amusing. He wanted to stop while the conductor was on the platform collecting fares, and pulling the rope the car was brought to a sudden stop. The conductor rushed into the car and demanded:

"Who rung that bell?"

"I did," said Judge Donohue.

"Why?"

"Because I wanted to get off."

At this the conductor indulged in some remarks which were not complimentary. The judge afterwards complained to the superintendent of the line, who promised to look into the matter. When they next met the judge demanded of the superintendent whether he had reprimanded the conductor.

"I spoke to him," was the reply.

"Well, what did he say?"

"He said that he was coming up some day to adjourn your court."

The irate magistrate saw the point and did no pursue the investigation.

How He Was Made Better Off.

A Scotch tradesman who had amassed, as he believed, £4,000, was surprised by his old clerk with a balance-sheet showing his fortune to be £6,000. "It can not be," said the principal; "count again." The clerk did count again, and again declared the balance to be £6,000. The master counted himself, and he also brought out a surplus of £6,000. Time after time he cast up the columns—it was still a 6 and not a 4, that rewarded his labors. So the old merchant, on the strength of his good fortune, modernized his house, and "put money in the purse" of the carpenter, the painter, and the upholsterer. Still, however, he had a lurking doubt of the existence of the extra £2,000, so one winter night he sat down to give the columns "one count more." At the close of his task he jumped up as though he had been galvanized, and rushed through the streets in a shower of rain to the house of the clerk. The clerk's head, capped and drowsy, emerged from an attic window at the sound of the knocker to inquire the errand of his midnight visitor. "Who's there?" he mumbled, "and what d'ye want?" "It's me, ye scoondrel!" exclaimed his employer, "ye've added up the year of our Lord among the pounds."

SIR HUGH'S LOVES.

"'Nay,' he said, quietly, 'I am only speaking for your good. You are young, Crystal, but you must be conscious, indeed your manner told me so last night that you have grace, beauty, and talents, triple gifts that the world adores. You will be its idol. Make your own election, then, my child, for you are now a woman. I will never seek to influence you, I am only a humble priest. What has such a one to do with a ball-room queen; the world's ways have never been my ways, for from my youth I have determined that "for me and my house, we will serve the Lord."'

"His calm steadfast voice awed me; every word seemed to rebuke my vanity and presumption. Ah, I saw it all now. Raby was disappointed with my choice; he had hoped—he had hoped otherwise.

"We had reached the end of our walk by this time. Before us was the poor cottage where Lettie White was dying. I took my hand from Raby's arm and sat down on the little stone bench by the beehives. Raby seemed to linger a moment, as though he expected me to speak to him, but I remained silent and he turned away with a quick sigh and went into the house. Soon after I heard his voice through the upper window, where the white curtains were flapping in the breeze, and Lettie's weak tones answering him.

"Before me was a field of crimson clover; some brown bees were busily at work in it. There were scarlet poppies too gleaming in the hedge down below; the waves were lapping on the sands with a soft splash and ripple; beyond was the sea vast and crystalline, merged in misty blue. Did I hear it with a dull whirring of repetition, or was it the voice of my own conscience; 'For me and my house, we will serve the Lord.'

"Raby came out presently, and we walked home, still silent. The dignity of his office was upon him; his lips were moving, perhaps in petition for the dying girl.

"When we reached the house he went up to his room. The evening came. I got out our German books—Raby and I were studying together—and presently he joined me. In his absence of mind he had forgotten all about the ball, as I knew he would, and we were both absorbed in Schiller's magnificent Wallenstein when Margaret entered, looking what Hugh Redmond called his 'Marguerite of Marguerites,' his pearl among women.

"Raby started and looked perplexed.

"'What, is it so late? You are dressed, Margaret, and this careless child has not commenced her toilet. Pray help her Maggie, she will be dreadfully late.'

"Margaret gave me a wistful smile.

"'The carriage is here already,' she answered, quietly, 'and Mrs. Montague is waiting. Crystal is not going to the ball, Raby.'

"'Not going?' He turned and looked at me, our eyes met, and then he understood.

"'Does not Margaret look lovely,' I asked in assumed carelessness, when the hall door closed, and he came back to the room.

"For answer he took me in his arms.

"'Not half so fair as my Esther,' he said tenderly, 'though she is not wearing her regal dress. 'I thank God,' and here his voice grew low and solemn. 'I thank God, Crystal, that my darling has chosen the better part that shall not be taken away from her.'

CHAPTER XXV.

GO BACK TO RABY.

O calm grand eyes, extinguished in a storm,
Blown out like lights o'er melancholy seas,
Though shrieked for by the shipwrecked.
O my dark!
My cloud—to go before me every day,
While I go ever towards the wilderness,
I would that you could see me bare to the soul.
Elizabeth Barrett Browning.

"Things went on very happily for a long time after this. The church at Sandycliffe was finished; Raby gave up his curacy, and read himself in; and then came the day when Margaret and I heard him preach.

"Shall I ever forget that day—it was Eastertide—and all that belonged to it? the last unclouded Sunday that was ever to rise on me; the tiny flower-decked church already crowded with worshippers, the memorial window that Raby and Margaret had put in, sacred to the memory of their father, with its glorious colors reflected on the pavement in stains of ruby and violet; and lastly, the grave beautiful face of the young vicar as he looked round upon his little flock for the first time, his eyes resting for a moment as though in silent benediction on the vicarage seat.

"Were I to tell you what I thought of that sermon, you might think my praise partial, but there were many there, Hugh Redmond among them, who commented afterwards on the eloquence and vivid power of the preacher. Hugh Redmond had accompanied us to church, for he and Margaret had been engaged some months, and they were always together. He declared that that sermon had made a deep impression on him.

"Many were affected that day by Raby's deep searching eloquence, but none more so than a lady who sat alone under the pulpit, and who drew down her crape veil that no one might see her tears

"I knew her well; she was a childless widow who had lately come to live at Sandycliffe in a pretty cottage about half a mile from the Grange, and with whom Margaret had become very intimate—a fair gentle-looking woman who had gone through much trouble, and who wished to devote her life to good works; and as I looked at her now, my own eyes misty with sympathy, did I ever imagine that the time was fast approaching when I should wrong her with the bitterest hatred, and even seek to lift my hand against her.

"And yet you were one of God's dear saints, Mona!

"The service over, we lingered for a moment in the shady churchyard, Hugh and Margaret and I, until Raby should join us. He came out at last, a little pale and tired-looking. Margaret met him, her eyes shining like stars.

"'Oh, Raby,' she faltered, 'God has given me my heart's desire.' He smiled, but his hand went out to the lit standing silently behind him.

"'What does my child say?' he whispered, when the others had gone on a little; but I had no answer ready, he was so good, so far above me. With a sudden impulse I lifted the kind hand to my lips as though he were a king.

* * * * *

"Raby was very zealous in his profession. There was little to do in Sandycliffe, but he offered himself as coadjutor to the vicar of Pierrepoint, and as there was a large poor population there, he and Margaret, and Mrs. Grey, found plenty of scope for their energies.

"Mrs. Grey had no ties, she was rich and lonely, and she sought relief from her sick heart in ministering to the needs of others. Her health was delicate, and the air of Sandycliffe suited her—she had taken a fancy to the place; and the pretty cottage she had rented was more to her taste than her house at South Kensington.

"Margaret and she were always together, their natures were congenial to each other, and a warm friendship grew up between them; Raby was also much interested in the young widow. I heard him say more than once that she was a rare creature, and so humble in her own estimation that one would never have guessed how cultivated and accomplished she really was; 'her manners are so perfectly gentle,' he went on, 'no wonder Margaret is glad to have found such a friend.'

"I began to think she was Raby's friend too, for nothing seemed to be done in Sandycliffe without Mrs. Grey—'our Mrs. Grey,' as Raby called her. Scarcely a day passed without seeing her at the Grang, and very often, as I knew, Raby called at the cottage.

"When I was with him their conversation was always about Pierrepoint, about the workmen's club Raby had started and the mothers' meeting that was Mrs. Grey's hobby; she was certainly, in spite of her weak health, a most active creature; Raby always seemed to defer to her opinion. He told Margaret that Mrs. Grey was one of the most clear-headed women he had ever met, that her large-minded views were always surprising him. I used to listen in silence to all this. I liked Mrs. Grey, but I began to be jealous of her influence; I thought Raby was too much guided by her judgment—perhaps he was fascinated by her sweet looks.

"'Small beginnings make large endings.' 'Behold how great a matter a little fire kindleth.' Even in a small country place like Sandycliffe there are busy and mischievous tongues. Presently a whisper reached my ears that fanned the smouldering embers of discontent within to a scorching flame.

"Raby was a young unmarried man, and Mrs. Grey was young and attractive, what if people declared that her heart was buried in her husband's grave, and that she would never marry again; they knew young widows always said those sort of things. Perhaps the vicar would induce her to change her mind some day. It would be such an excellent match, they went on; they were evidently cut out for each other, both so good; and then she was rich, it would be such a fortunate thing for Mr. Ferrers, especially when his sister left him; and then looking at me, they supposed I should go to Redmond Hall with my cousin when she married. People used to talk like this to us both. Margaret used to laugh as though she were amused at the notion, and she seemed to expect me to laugh too; then she got a little indignant, and contradicted the report gravely. Nothing of the kind could ever happen, she said—she wished those busybodies would leave Raby and Mona alone; Mona was her friend not his. But somehow I did not believe her. Fern, you look at me reproachfully, you think I ought to have been wiser; but how could I know; I was Raby's adopted child, his pet, but Mrs. Grey was more his equal in age and she was very pretty. Her fair delicate style of beauty, and her extreme softness and gentleness might be dangerously attractive to a man like Raby, and I feared—I distrusted her.

"Alas! in a little time I learnt to look upon her as my deadliest rival; to hear her name on his lips would send a jealous thrill through me.

"They were always together, at least it seemed so to me; but perhaps I was wrong. By and by I dropped all pretence of parish work; it did not suit me, I said. Raby seemed grieved, but he was true to his word and did not try to influence me. Perhaps he thought I was restless and was pining for excitement and gaiety. Alas! he little knew I would wander miles away, that I might not encounter them coming up the village street together, or witness the frank cordial smile with which they parted. Mona's look, her touch, her soft vibrating voice set every nerve on edge. I was pining with a disease for which I knew no name and no remedy, and which was preying on my health and spirits.

"And worst of all, I was completely misunderstood. When in the unequal struggle my appetite failed and sleep forsook me, and a sort of a fever kept me restless and irritable, and still no physical illness was at the root, they misconstrued the symptoms and attributed my depression to another cause. I saw in their looks that they distrusted me; they thought my old enemy was coming back, and redoubled their gentleness and care. Then Raby would speak tenderly to me, till every word sounded like a caress; and Margaret would follow me from place to place like some guardian spirit, as though she did not wish to lose sight of me. But they never guessed the cause—how could they? for as the weeks went on, a cold forbidding haughtiness hid their child's suffering heart from them. I would die, I said to myself recklessly, before they should guess my secret.

"Raby's face grew sad and then somewhat stern. I knew the old doubts were harrassing him; he feared their quiet life was irksome to my youth, that I was fretting in secret for the gaieties and triumphs I had renounced.

"One day we three were sitting at luncheon together; I was playing with the food on my plate to prevent them noticing my want of appetite, as though I could ever evade Raby's eyes, and longing to escape from the room, for I felt more than usually miserable.

"Raby was watching me, I could see, though his conversation was directed to Margaret. She had been talking about the new schools that Mrs. Grey proposed building at Pierrepoint.

"'She wants to sell her house at South Kensington,' she said; 'she never means to live there again. It is a great pity, I tell her, for it is such a comfortable house and so beautifully furnished. But she will have it that she feels happier in her cottage; how good she is, Raby.'

"'Yes, indeed, hers is almost a perfect character,' he replied; 'she is so strong and yet so womanly, so very, very gentle.'

"Something in Raby's words touched too sensative a chord, and after a vain attempt to control myself, I suddenly burst into hysterical tears, and left the room. They thought it was my strange temper, but I was only miserable that the enemy—my Philistine—was upon me, when he was only lurking in ambush for the time when my weakness would render me an easy prey.

"Let me go on quickly, for the remembrance of that day overpowers me. They never came near me. Raby always treated me himself at such times, and sometimes he would not allow Margaret to come to me; it was so now, and yet her dear face and sympathy might have saved me. I sobbed myself quiet and then I lay on the couch in the morning-room, feeling strangely ill. I was faint and sick. I had eaten nothing, and I wanted food and wine, and to be hushed and comforted like a child; and no one came near me. Of course not! they thought it was a fit of the old passion. No doubt Raby was in the village talking it over with Mona.

"It grew towards evening—cool quiet evening, but there was no quiet in my heart. I was burning with inward fever.

"I had had little sleep the night before, something odd and tumultuous seemed rising in my brain; a gleam of fair hair was blinding me. He loves fair women, I thought, and he calls me his dark eyed Esther. Oh, Raby, I hate her! You shall never marry her! You shall never call her your darling! I felt as though I should kill her first; for, indeed, I was nearly wild with passion, they had left me too long alone.

"Presently the door opened, and Ra came in. He looked very grave, I though as he sat down beside me. His quiet glance recalled me to myself.

"'Crystal,' he said, gently, 'have you been ill again, my dear?' They always called the paroxysms 'illness' now, but the word displeased me.

"'Where is Margaret?' I asked, sullenly. 'I cannot talk to you, Raby. I am weak, and you do not understand. If I am ill, as you say, you should not keep Margaret from me.

"'She is at the schools,' he returned, soothingly, 'I left her with Mrs. Grey—they will be here directly; but, Crystal, my darling, before they come in I want to have a little talk with you. You are better now, are you not? I want to tell you what I have decided to do for my child's welfare. I am going to send her away!'

"I sprang up with an exclamation of dismay, but he put me back firmly and quietly on the couch as though I were a child, and went on with his speech.

"'Crystal,' he said, rather sternly, 'I claim obedience as your guardian; I claim it legally and morally.' Never had he spoken so severely before. 'I am doing what costs me a great sacrifice. I am going to send you away from us for a little while for your own good; for your own peace and happiness. Alas! I see plainly now, how we have failed to secure either.' I tried to speak, but I could not. I crushed my hands together as though they were a vice, as I listened.

"'Heaven knows,' he continued, sadly, 'how I have tried to do my duty by you, and how Margaret has tried too; how we have loved you, prayed and cared for you, never thinking of ourselves, but only of you. What have we done that you should hide your unhappiness from us? Why did you not come to me and tell me frankly, and like a brave girl, that the sacrifice I asked was too great for you to yield; that your youth and temperament demanded a different life to mine; that the quiet and monotony were killing you; would anything have been too hard for your brother's love?'

"I shivered at the word. Oh, Raby, why—why did you utter it? who were, who never could be a brother of mine. He had never used that word before; it bore a terrible meaning to me now.

"'I have spoken to Dr. Connor,' he went on more quickly, 'and his opinion coincides with mine; and so I have arranged it all with Mrs. Grey; surely a kinder or a sweeter soul never breathed, not even our own Margaret. You are to go abroad under her care for six months; Dr. Connor advises it. Yes, it will be hard for us, but never fear, my darling, the time will soon pass.'

When to be Married.

In a letter to the Sunday Herald on the marriage question, Ella Wheeler Wilcox makes the following sage remarks:

It is an erroneous idea of romantic minds that early youth is the season of deep and passionate emotion. Physicians and the wise men of the Catholic Church, however, know that the emotions of women in our American climate are most fully developed between the ages of 25 and 35. The Church guards during that time with especial care all those destined to a life of celibacy, knowing full well that they are more susceptible to temptation than at an earlier and more undeveloped age.

It would seem, then, from a purely scientific standpoint that an attachment formed after 25 would be far more intense and more enduring than one formed in the unripe period of immature youth.

Physically our American women do not fully develop until the age of 25. Given a healthful mode of life, employment for the mind, and sufficient out-door exercise, and they are far more attractive at that age than at 18. Happy is the man who wins the heart of such a woman, with her ripened beauty, her developed emotions and her wise appreciation of the really worthy things of life.

In the United States Court at Boston, a decision was rendered yesterday morning sustaining the demurrer of the Bell Telephone Company against the Government suit and the case was dismissed.

A Dakota farmer laid upon the nearest editor's table a vegetable that weighed five pounds ten ounces. After all the agricultural sharps of the village had tried to tell what it was, the guesses ranging from a rutabaga to a pumpkin, the farmer told them it was a radish, and proved it to them after the manner of proving a pudding.

At Newport, R. I., yesterday, the Supreme Court granted a divorce to Mrs. Henry A. Hulbert, jun., of New York. This settles an interesting case of fashionable New York society parties.

UNIQUE HOSPITALITY.

Mrs. Y. is a brilliant Boston woman of abundant executive ability, shrewd wit and delightful hospitality. The exigencies of her husband's business led to the keeping up of an establishment in the west, where Mrs. Y. passes some months of the year, and where she entertains a great many people. One day there was brought to Mrs. Y. the card of an English gentleman, accompanied by a letter of introduction from friends of the Y.'s abroad. The hostess went down stairs and greeted the guest cordially. "We are so accustomed to travellers here," she said, "that we know just what to do with them. We expect everybody to arrive travel-stained and exhausted, and we let everybody take a bath the first thing. I spoke to the servant before I came down, and everything is all ready." "But," stammered the stranger, "I cannot think of putting you to so much trouble. I——" "Oh, I know just how you feel," interrupted Mrs. Y.;" "a bath is the only thing that restores me to my normal condition when I've been travelling; and you have come right through from Boston." The guest demurred, but Mrs. Y. was too executive and too truly hospitable to allow his scruples to prevent the carrying out of her kindly intent. The Englishman was shown upstairs to the bath-room, where it is to be presumed he combined with the progress of his toilet reflections upon the originality and practicality of American hospitality. In due time the guest descended again to the parlor, where Mrs. Y. awaited him. "I hope you found everything to your mind," she said. "Oh, yes," he replied, "I have had a delightful bath, and now I must bid you good afternoon, as I have to catch a train." "What?" cried the hostess aghast; "you are not going?" "Unfortunately I must; I only stopped over a train to call on you." "Mercy!" she exclaimed in dismay; "I thought you had come to remain. You certainly cannot go away when I haven't seen you at all!" "I really must," was the reply, "but I assure you I have had a most refreshing bath, and I shall always remember with sincere pleasure your unique hospitality." The story was too good to keep, and Mrs. Y. told it at her own expense, greatly to the entertainment of her friends, who declared that this fashion of entertaining callers was one which deserved to be widely introduced, as it would solve many a perplexing question of the proper method of disposing of guests who were not easy to amuse.

When the Congregation Nods.

A bequest of Richard Dovery, of Farmcots, England, dated 1659, had in view the payment of 8 shillings annually to the church of Claverly, Shropshire, for the payment of a person to keep the people awake.

On the 17th of April, 1725, John Rudge bequeathed to the parish of Trysull, in Shropshire, 20 shillings a year, that a poor man might be employed to go about the church during the summer and keep the people awake.

At Acton church, in Cheshire, about thirty years ago one of the church wardens used to go round in the church during service with a huge wand in his hand, and if any of the congregation were asleep they were instantly awakened by a tap on the head.

At Dun church, in Warwickshire, a person bearing a stout wand, shaped like a hay-fork at the end, stepped stealthily up and down the aisles, and whenever he saw an individual asleep he touched him so effectually that the spell was broken—this being sometimes done by fitting the fork to the nape of the neck.

A more playful method is said to have been used in another church, where the beadle went round the edifice during service carrying a long staff, at one end of which was a fox's brush and at the other a knob. With the former he gently tickled the faces of the female sleepers, while on the head of the male offenders he bestowed with the knob a smart rap.

Thackeray's Views of Death.

I don't pity anybody who leaves the world, not even a fair young girl in her prime; I pity those remaining. On her journey, if it pleases God to send her, depend on it there's no cause for grief, that's but an earthly condition. Out of our stormy life, and brought nearer the Divine light and warmth, there must be a serene climate. Can't you fancy sailing into the calm? Would you care about going on the voyage, but for the dear souls left on the other shore? But we shan't be parted from them, no doubt, though they are from us. Add a little more intelligence to that which we possess even as we are, and why shouldn't we be with our friends though even so far off. * * * Why presently, the body removed, shouldn't we personally be anywhere at will—properties of creation, like the electric something (spark is it?) that thrills all round the globe simultaneously? and if round the globe why not Ueberall? and the body being removed or elsewhere disposed of and developed, sorrow and its opposite, crime and the reverse, ease and disease, desire and dislike, etc., go along with the body—a lucid intelligence remains, a perception ubiquitous.—From the Thackeray Letters in Scribner's for October.

Seventy-two years ago Robert Tirrell, of Rhode Island, then a soldier in the British army, deserted and came to America. The old man, who is 93 years old, has just received a pardon from the granddaughter of the king he deserted, and is going back to the old country to die among his kinsfolk.

William Milan, a merchant of St. Joseph, Mo., has gone to Australia to marry a young lady whom he has never seen, but with whom the engagement was brought about by correspondence. The young lady is a handsome heiress, and Milan is also rich.

If I hadn't been I wouldn't a nursed my sister's nine young ones that was down with scarlet fever till every blessed one of them died, ma'am, and buried the last of 'em a week come Friday."

SACRED MUSIC.

Some of the Tunes Suspiciously Like Secular Airs.

Says the "Casual Observer" of the New York Graphic: A musician who is not much in the habit of taking that kind of exercise went to church on Sunday and, desiring to experience as much novelty as possible, he did not go to any beautifully appointed æsthetic Episcopal service, nor did he feed his spiritual nature on the dramatic embodiment of the Christian religion given by the Roman Catholic Church. No, he wanted to do the thing up brown now that he was in it, and for that end he felt it to be necessary to install himself in the more or less uncomfortable pew of one of the most protesting of Protestant sects. Now, what he found most curious in his unfamiliar experience was the familiarity of considerable portions of it. One of the opening hymns was, "O could I speak the matchless worth," and he was struck all of a heap to hear this sung to the mangled remains of a duet in Mozart's opera, "Die Zauberflote," wherein Pomina and the bird catcher, Papageno extol "The manly heart with love o'erflowing," posing together before the footlights. It was not such a shock, but it was still a surprise when later he heard "Thou Art, O God, the Life and Light" sung to "Consolation," one of Mendelssohn's "Songs Without Words." If there is anything that definitely disproves the Wagnerian theory of the special, intrinsic significance of music in itself and altogether independent of association, it is this habit of hymn-book makers of putting sacred words to all sorts of secular music. Whether or not there is significance in the music itself—and as even the hymn-book makers have not yet turned "Captain Jinks" to account, there is still a little ground for the belief that there is—there is a great deal of significance in it by association, and musical associations are very strong, and it is pretty hard on people of retentive ears to find their most sacred moods broken in upon by tones that have hitherto lightened altogether different hours. "The Lord is my Shepherd" is often sung to a slightly disguised version of that popular air, "Scenes that are Brightest," in Wallace's opera of "Maritana." The air, "Nearer, My God, to Thee," has now become so associated with the hymn that the shock would probably be with most of us to find it reunited with its original mate, "Oft in the Stilly Night." The only explanation of the possibility of this state of things is that the people who go to church don't, as a class, hear any music anywhere else.

They Had Got Used to Babies.

"Say," said a woman wearing a faded yellow dress, as she came out of a Western Dakota house which stood near the road, as we drove up, "you didn't see no young 'uns down the road, I reckon?" "No." "Couple o' mine missin' again, guess," and she surveyed a good sized flock who were playing around the house. "Or, hold on, I guess there ain't, either." She began singling them out with her finger, saying: "One, two, three—stand still, you brats, till I count you!—four, five—come back here, Ophelia, till yer counted—six, seven, eight, an' two at school makes ten, an' the baby is 'leven, an' two out'n the field is thirteen. All right, stranger, they're all here. I 'lowed two or three o' 'em had lit out, but the census is correct!" "You have a large family, madame." "Lawks, family till you can't rest! An' say, do you know what's a fact, gen'l'men, when the fust one, Sheridan—he's out'n the field shuckin' corn now—when he was a baby what d'ye think me an' the old man used to do to him?" "Give it up." "Used to wake him up to see him laugh! Yes, sir; regular thing every time he went to sleep! Sometimes one big fool of us an' sometimes the other would sneak up an' chuck him under the chin an' say: 'Wake ut, oo tootsy wootsy, and' laugh oo cunnin' 'ittle laugh forloo paph!'" "Didn't never wake up any of the other twelve?" "Well, not hardly, stranger—we know a powerful sight mor'n we did. Here, Washington, quit hurtin' yer little sister or I'll give you a switchin' you'll remember till yer 100 years old!"—Chicago Tribune.

At the Sunday School.

Teacher—William, what is the Golden Text to-day?

William—Dunno.

Teacher—It is "Watch and—" what else?

William—Dunno.

Teacher—Think again. What did your papa do just before breakfast this morning?

William (with animation)—Kissed mamma! How'd you know?

Why He Whistled.

Old lady (to grocer's boy)—Don't you know boy, that it is very rude to whistle when dealing with a lady?

Boy—That's what the boss told me to do, mum.

Old lady—Told you to whistle?

Boy—Yes'm. He said if we ever sold you anything, we'd have to whistle for the money.

Some Excuse for Him.

"Oh, no, ma'am," pleaded the tramp, "you may think my life all sunshine, but it ain't. Wherever I go I am beset with dangers. In short, ma'am, I carry my life in my hands."

"Ah, I see," exclaimed his temporary hostess, "that accounts for your not washing your hands. You don't dare to do it for fear you'll drown yourself."—Boston Transcript.

A sad case of suicide has occurred at Chelsea, Ont., under singularly distressing circumstances. Minnie Allan, an attractive girl of 19, daughter of a respectable farmer living near the village, died on Thursday evening from the effects of poison, administered, as subsequent events proved, by herself. She was ill on the Wednesday, and on Thursday morning early medical assistance was summoned as she seemed very ill. Dr. Davis, who was sent for, on arriving found that her recovery was impossible. She would have become a mother in a few months. After the girl's death letters were found stating that she had been betrayed under promise of marriage. A fortnight ago her lover married another woman, and this had such an effect on Minnie Allan's mind that, as the girl herself stated, she preferred death to the disgrace which was about to overtake her.

Three deaths from cholera occurred at Swinburne Island, New York harbor, on Saturday, and five new cases were taken there.

Thousands of people were turned away from Plymouth Church, Brooklyn, yesterday, when the place occupied for forty years by Henry Ward Beecher was filled by his intimate friend and possible successor, Rev. Joseph Parker, D.D., of London. With Dr. Parker in the pulpit was Dr. Beecher's former assistant and the present acting pastor, Rev. S. B. Halliday, D.D. In the pastor's pew sat Mrs. Beecher and Mrs. Parker.

A report has reached Brookham, Miss., that serious trouble is brewing between negroes and whites about twenty miles southeast of that place, near Lime and Pike and Lawrence counties. About 300 men of each color are said to be under arms and a collision is feared. Several white men have left here with shotguns for the scene of the trouble.

An unusual scene occurred at the Metropolitan Methodist Episcopal Church, Washington, last night, when Rev. John P. Newman, in a sermon on "Infidelity," alluded in severe terms to the Anarchists. "Could any American citizen," he said, "ten years ago have imagined the circulation of a petition to pardon those whose hands are red with the blood of the defenders of the public peace and safety? What is back of this anarchy—this daredevil movement on the part of these villains, who ought to have been hung long ago?" At this point many of the audience rose to their feet, clapped their hands, and with loud demonstrations announced their approval of the minister's words.

Friday was the Empress of Germany's 76th birthday. The buildings in Berlin and Potsdam were decorated with flags and bunting in honor of the occasion. King Leopold of Belgium, the Emperor and Empress of Brazil and the Baden Princes presented their congratulations to the Empress.

Wm. Rowlands, M.C.R. brakeman on an extra east-bound freight, while coupling cars at Rodney on Sunday morning had his right arm frightfully crushed. He was at once taken to St. Thomas and suffered amputation of the injured member.

Mr. P. J. U. Beaudry, assistant clerk of the Privy Council, died at Ottawa yesterday afternoon of typhoid fever after a short illness. He had held the position of assistant clerk for three years, and was highly esteemed by all those acquainted with him.

The inquest on the body of Thos. Campbell, who was drowned through the ferry boat collision in Toronto Bay, was concluded last night, when the jury returned a verdict that Campbell's death was caused by the negligence of Capt. Martin, of the Sadie, and a warrant was issued for his arrest.

The two-year-old son of Joseph Grantham, caretaker of Trinity Church, St. Thomas, had a narrow escape from a terrible death yesterday morning. The child toddled into a stable where his father was currying a horse, and was kicked by the animal in the head and thrown through the door, receiving terrible flesh wounds, but nothing more serious.

On Sunday night burglars broke into the Grand Trunk station at Exeter and forced the safe open by breaking off the hinges and driving spikes in by the side of the door, but did not get any booty, as there was no money in the safe. Burglars also broke into Hawkshaw's hotel and stole three overcoats, a revolver, a pair of shoes, a watch and a meerschaum pipe. No clue to the burglars.

Alfred Jones, aged 14, a son of George Jones, of Lambeth, met with a painful accident the other day. He was on the straw stack helping to hang the barn door, when by a sudden movement he was thrown violently to the ground, and striking the hook on which the door was to hang, cut his back severely from the shoulder-blade downwards and across. The cut was about five inches long.

Armandeus Anderson, a Swedish emigrant, aged 17, died from exhaustion and insufficient nourishment on a Michigan Central train while passing through St. Thomas on Sunday night en route to Buffalo to join his mother and sister. The rumor spread among other emigrants that the cause of death was Asiatic cholera, and excitement ran high until Dr. Smith, the company's physician in St. Thomas, assured them there was no cause for alarm.

The wife of Charles Carroll, a farmer living on the Mount Brydges road, near Strathroy, was found on Saturday afternoon hanging in the barn dead. Mr. John Carroll, cousin of the deceased's husband, had been ploughing for his relative, and on coming in to dinner saw the body hanging and cut it down. The woman had apparently climbed up into the mow, attached a rope to one of the poles forming a scaffold some eleven feet above the floor, and there hanged herself. There was no apparent motive for the deed.

W. H. Stuart appeared at the London Police Court yesterday to answer the charge of threatening to shoot E. J. Harris, the latter having, according to Stuart's story, enticed away the defendant's wife. The case was referred to in yesterday's TIMES. Mrs. Stuart appeared as a witness for Harris. She said she married Stuart about two years ago, but finding he already had a wife and family, she turned him out of her home, which was left her by her first husband. She took Stuart back twice and then discarded him for "keeps." Harris, on being asked why he did not go and live with his own wife, intimated that he preferred to manage his own domestic affairs. The case ended in Stuart being bound over to keep the peace.

The Rouvier Cabinet is looking forward to the reassembling of the Chambers with feelings the reverse of agreeable, as questions and interpellations regarding its home and foreign policy threaten it from every quarter.

The Rome Riforma says accord between the Church and Italy is impossible unless the Church abandons her pretensions. It would be to the advantage of the Papal See, even in its relations with other States, if it could be brought to comprehend the spirit of the age.

The latest news from Samoa is that the Germans took King Malietoa on board a gunboat for the purpose of exiling him on account of his failure to prevent his people from robbing German plantations. King Malietoa had previously written to the British and American Consuls expressing disappointment at the absence of their support.

Binns, who was Marwood's successor as hangman, has been discharged for drunkenness. He is travelling in Cheshire with a show which depicts an execution scene, with a chaplain, officials, reporters, etc., a wax model of Mrs. Berry, the Oldham prisoner, being dropped through a trap. Great crowds attend the performance, which is disgustingly realistic, and efforts will be made to stop it.

The ultra-Protestant party is by no means gratified at the election of the new Lord Mayor of London. DeKeyser is a Belgian Catholic, but he promised to recognize officially none but the State religion, as was done by his predecessors, who were Quakers or Nonconformists. Mr. DeKeyser, who is the first Catholic Lord Mayor since the Reformation, is a capable man and clever speaker. He is known to Americans as the owner of the Royal Hotel, Blackfriars.

The first contingent of troops which Spain will send to Morocco has been despatched. It consists of 6,000 men. The object of sending this force is to protect the interests of Spain in Morocco in case the country relapses into a state of anarchy, which is feared will follow the death of the Sultan. Eight battalions of infantry, besides cavalry and artillery, have been concentrated at Cadiz and Malaga, in readiness to cross over to Morocco immediately. This force is under command of Gen. Lasso. Several war ships are also in readiness for active service.

For some time Mormon meetings have been held by missionaries from America in Pentonville road, London. These meetings have been held in private houses, but bills have been extensively circulated inviting any one to attend. One of those meetings was held on Sunday night in a small house. A crowd collected outside. Speeches were made about polygamy in Utah and the mob forced an entrance through a window. A scene of great excitement and confusion ensued. The landlord, fearing the destruction of his property, sent for the police, but before they arrived the wall of the garden and that separating it from the next garden were thrown down, and probably worse would have happened but for the arrival of a sergeant and six constables. The Mormon missionaries and their disciples got out at the back of the house.

Decline of Matrimony.

Marriages increase as we approach the lowest grade where there is the least pride, ambition or energy other than animal or self-preserving. They decrease as we ascend to the grades where acquisitiveness, business enterprise, intellectual tastes, political or social opportunities, or what not, induce a larger activity in the individual, involving the necessity of larger preparations and resources outside of mere self-support. And the reason is found not only in the unwillingness of the woman to begin, with her husband, in a lower scale of living in the household and in society, but as well in the unwillingness of the man to change his style of living to suit the conditions of matrimony, to deny his wife any of the advantages she enjoyed before marriage, or even for himself to sacrifice part of his other aims and ambitions to the maintenance of a wife and a home. To come at the point briefly from another direction, a survey of the conditions seems to indicate that the tendency of the times in education, society, habit, life in general, is to unfit women for becoming wives and men for becoming husbands. Domesticity is infringed by the multiplication of social, business and professional cares and responsibilities, the inducements to marriage lessened in number and force, and the family and the home, our national bulwark, threatened with decay through neglect for more selfish individual considerations and ambitions.—Springfield Union.

English Literary Notes.

The forthcoming life of Rev. Dr. Morley Punshon will contain many interesting facts not previously published. Professor MacDonald, of Edinburgh, is the biographer. The details of the five years he spent in Canada are supplied by Professor Reyner, Dr. Punshon's son-in-law.

Messrs. Isbister announce the second volume of Dean Plumtree's "Dante," a completion of the work; also "Everyday Christian Life," by Archdeacon Farrar.

Mr. Swinburne has also finished a new drama to be called "Locrine."

"Scenes from the George Eliot Country," by Stephen Parkinson, is the title of a volume now in press, which deals more especially with the early life of George Eliot and identifies characters in her novels with persons of whom she had knowledge in actual life, and places and scenery with portions of the midland counties amid which she spent her youth and young womanhood.

How He Got Those Black Eyes.

Judge, to Pat, who has been arrested for beating Mike—Well, you did pound him, didn't you?

ANOTHER WAR CLOUD.

Will England Become Involved in an Eastern War?

A London cable says: Nobody in the inner official circle would be surprised if within a month British regiments were on the march from Quetta toward Candahar. All the news from Afghanistan shows that the position and health of the Ameer alike are declining. Instead of his quelling the Ghilzai revolt, as reported, it is now wider spread and stronger than ever. His generals are apparently no longer striving to cope with it. The Ameer himself gives very little time to affairs of State, being in a condition of great despondency over his illness, changing his doctors continually, and it is reported that he is making life a genuine burden for each as the failure of his cure becomes apparent. Ayoub Khan is said to be on the road to Candahar himself, but all these reports of his whereabouts are distrusted at the Indian and Foreign Offices as Oriental lies. Nothing is regarded as sure about him, save that he is bound to make trouble. His pretensions to the throne are being aided by the Ameer's illness and unpopularity and the infancy of his son, if not by Russian intrigue. This last is just now an uncertain quantity. In fact, there are reasons for believing that Russia for the present is very anxious to secure English friendship as an offset to Prince Bismarck's Continental combination, and is willing to abandon a good deal in Asia for the sake of securing it; but there are other reasons for believing that Russian agents in Asia are acting in ignorance or defiance of this new imperial policy to undermine the English in Cabul. So the whole thing is in a maze.

Sir West Ridgeway, who succeeds General Buller, is absolutely without experience other than Oriental. Those who know him speak highly of him, and he has certainly done good work on the Russo-Afghan frontier. His article in the Nineteenth Century on the frontier ought to encourage faith in Lord Salisbury's old advice to study large maps. He believes that Russia will keep her word respecting the status quo. Hitherto, he says, the Russian advance in Asia has been like the gliding of a knife through butter, but now that it touches Afghanistan it has met the hard substance of the dish. He scouts the idea of an invasion of India. It would be madness, he argues, in the Russian Generals, who depend for their supplies upon a single lightly constructed railroad, to leave their rear exposed to the hostile, excited races of Central Asia. Sir West Ridgeway speaks well of the personal regard and friendship of the Russian officers and the bulk of the people toward Englishmen.

And winking tapers show the sun his way;

I need no revelation to believe."

Happiness.

The foundation of all happiness is health. A man with a perfect digestion may be a millionaire, may be the husband of an angel and the father of half a dozen cherubs, and yet be miserable if he be troubled with dyspepsia, or any of the disorders arising from imperfect digestion or a sluggish liver. Dr Pierce's Pleasant Purgative Pellets are the safest and surest remedy for these morbid conditions. Being purely vegetable, they are perfect harmless

The Decline of the Dance.

The dancing of our youth was really an able-bodied exercise. The original polka fatigued the muscles like wood-chopping or sowing. But now these same muscles have given in to costume. Necessity has laid upon them that they shall have no free motion. Some French writer said that the waltz had killed the dance. Crinoline and tie-backs have in their turn killed the waltz.

Gold and Silver.

Along her father's field they strayed,
All flecked with cowslips yellow,
A little dainty gold-haired maid,
A sturdy 9-year fellow.
And there love's course they two began,
(Ah, thorny path for treading!)
And vowed when they were maid and man
The town should see a wedding.
Their golden curls were born and blent,
Through wafts of fragrance treading;
"And oh!" they murmured, well content,
"'Twill be a golden wedding!"

"'Tis time," said he, "to claim her vow,"
And forth he went and found her;
But she was grown a beauty now,
And half the town was round her.
"I see," says he, "you don't want me!"
Though tears were ripe for shedding.
"I'm glad your eyes are good," said she—
"Ah, where's that golden wedding?"
He flung away, and left her there,
Such heart-sore tear drops shedding
And gossips cried, in blank despair,
"She spoiled the rarest wedding?"

He sailed the seas, he beat the French,
Two score good years he tarried,
And then he thought, "That little wench—
I wonder if she's married?"
Next week a bluff old tar rolled past,
The gabled High street treading,
And ancient gossips crowed, "At last
We're like to have the wedding!"
She waited for him forty years—
The gray their locks wore threading;
And some with smiles and some with tears,
Beheld their silver wedding.

"Untold Agony from Catarrh."

Prof. W. HAUSNER, the famous mesmerist, of Ithaca, N. Y., writes: "Some ten years ago I suffered untold agony from chronic nasal catarrh. My family physician gave me up as incurable, and said I must die. My case was such a bad one, that every day, towards sunset, my voice would become so hoarse I could barely speak above a whisper. In the morning my coughing and clearing of my throat would almost strangle me. By the use of Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy, in three months, I was a well man, and the cure has been permanent."

"Constantly Hawking and Spitting."

THOMAS J. RUSHING, Esq., 2902 Pine Street, St. Louis, Mo., writes: "I was a great sufferer from catarrh for three years. At times I could hardly breathe, and was constantly hawking and spitting, and for the last eight months could not breathe through the nostrils. I thought nothing could be done for me. Luckily, I was advised to try Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy, and I am now a well man. I believe it to be the only sure remedy for catarrh now manufactured, and one has only to give it a fair trial to experience astounding results and a permanent cure."

Three Bottles Cure Catarrh.

ELI ROBBINS, Runyan P. O., Columbia Co., Pa., says: "My daughter had catarrh when she was five years old, very badly. She is now eighteen years old and sound and hearty."

Our Township Show was held in Priceville this year, on Tuesday of last week, and, notwithstanding the wet weather, was largely attended by visitors and exhibitors. His Excuse was a Good One.

Principal (severely)—"You have been reported to me by your teacher for insubordination. She says she asked you to spell 'Ichthyophagus' and that you sulked and refused to say a word. Have you any excuse?"

Scholar (nervously)—"I—I guess I must have been spell-bound."

ADVERTISE in The ADVANCE

Tit-Bits.

Consisting of Local and Other Interesting Items gathered by The Advance Reporters.

Rev. Thos. Watson attended the great Baptist gathering in Toronto last week.

Mr. Thos. Duncan intends moving his tailor shop to the office recently occupied by THE ADVANCE.

The Council has taken action in the matter of the Boyne bridge and has let the job for repairing it.

If you want your Watch to go properly and keep time to the minute, take it to Russell to be repaired

Miss Bert. Jones, of Milton, who has been visiting her sister, Mrs. C. W. Bellamy, returned home last Monday.

A drain is to be dug from Durham street to the Boyne, at the rear of the lots on the west of Sydenham street.

WANTED.—Two fair-sized Spring Colts, for which spot cash will be paid. —GEO. BUSKIN, Flesherton P.O. 2t.

Artemesia plowing match takes place to-day on the farm of Robt. Oliver, Esq., Old Durham Road. Report next week.

Keep an eagle eye for Richardson & Co's big announcement next month. It always pays to read their advertisements.

If you want bargains in Watches, Clocks, Jewelry, Silverware, Spectacles, &c. go to Russell's Noted Jewelry Store, Flesherton.

As will be seen by advt. elsewhere in these columns, Mr. Geo. Moorehouse has the Flesherton Station Mill in good order for Chopping.

Mr. W. W. Trimble keeps the best brands of Roller Flour, Meals, &c. for sale cheap at his store near Clayton's boot & shoe shop. See advt. on this page.

The Station post-office is being very materially improved, by fitting up a neat little store in front. We congratulate friend Purdy upon this evidence of prosperity.

THE ADVANCE will be sent to new subscribers from now until end of 1888 (1 year and 8 months) for ONE DOLLAR. Show this to your neighbor, who does not get THE ADVANCE.

THE ADVANCE and Hamilton Weekly Spectator one year for $1.65 spot cash; or THE ADVANCE from now until end of next year for $1. New subscribers added to our list every week.

Mr. Wm. Hewgill jr., (an old schoolfellow of ye Editor's) of Collingwood Twp.,—son of the excellent Deputy-Reeve of that township—called at our office one day last week in the absence of ye Editor.

You will now find THE ADVANCE printing office in one of the new brick buildings recently erected for the Editor—nearly opposite the Flesherton Photograph Gallery on Sydenham street. Call and see us when in town.

Attention is directed to Mr. J. E. Moore's large advertisement in another column. Mr. Moore is selling furniture very cheap and purposes employing a number of workmen for manufacturing purposes, when prices will be still further reduced. His announcements will appear in these columns from time to time, and readers of THE ADVANCE are asked to be on the look-out for them.

Terrible Bargains at Russell's Noted Jewelery Store, Flesherton. Just now they are giving 20 per cent. off on all cash sales of $1.00 and over. Come before the thirty days are up and secure one of those fine Watches.

Mr. C. J. Leitch, tailor, of this town, intends building a handsome brick residence and tailor shop on Collingwood street next summer. He has let the job of excavating it to Mr. Geo. Glassford, to be done this fall.

Some people have the idea that the Market Reports in newspapers are never changed and therefore cannot be relied upon. This is a mistake as far as THE ADVANCE is concerned, as they are carefully corrected every week.

Having purchased an immense stock of Statements and Billheads at a great reduction from regular prices, THE ADVANCE Office is the place for wide-awake business men to get stocked in those lines cheaper than any where else.

Several persons, suspected of complicity in the recent burglary here, are still drifting aimlessly (?) around in this neighborhood. Load your guns and pistols to the muzzle and file your bulldog's teeth! These rascals mean mischief!

Mr. W. W. Trimble returned from a pleasant excursion trip to various parts of Michigan last week. He met Mr. D. S. Munro in Detroit and says Mr. M. looks hearty and is filling a lucrative position in a large wholesale establishment.

A Columbus movement watch, purchased by the Editor of THE ADVANCE at Russell's Noted Jewelry Store, Flesherton, has not varied thirty seconds from standard time during the three months which have elapsed since the purchase was made.

Our heartiest thanks are due Messrs. Will Armour, Joe Field, E. Vanzant, R. Legate, N. Lawrence and others for the assistance rendered us last Friday evening in transferring our presses and other heavy material to our new office on Sydenham street.

Mr. Daniel Hewgill, brother of the universally esteemed Deputy-Reeve of Collingwood Township, Mr. Wm. Hewgill, gave us a pleasant call on Friday last. While in town he was the guest of Wm. Ward, Esq. He (Mr. Hewgill) lives about three miles west of Woodbridge.

Mr. Watson the famous orator and humorist, lectured in the Town Hall here Friday evening last, under the auspices of the Ladies' Aid of the Presbyterian church, his subject being, "Mind Your own Business, or the Eleventh Commandment." A curious one truly, but forming the text for the most humorous and instructive lecture, with one exception, ever heard by the Editor in this place. The exception was the splendid address or lecture delivered by Dr. McLellan a few years ago, under the auspices of South Grey Teachers' Association. Mr. Watson is, like Dr. McLellan, a very fluent speaker, but as a delineator of character he is superior to the latter. He has a pleasant but impressive delivery and frequently "rounds up his periods" in a manner approaching the dramatic. Dr. McLellan is a more profound reasoner but Mr. Watson holds a mixed audience more completely under his control than the former. But be these things as they may, the lecture on Friday night was thoroughly enjoyed by nearly every person present. For our own part, we could have sat for hours longer listening to it; and while not prepared to accept every statement expressed, we can sincerely say we put in an evening of real enjoyment, and felt grateful to the Ladies' Aid for the rich intellectual feast provided for the occasion. The lecturer was frequently and heartily applauded, and at the conclusion, on motion by Rev. A. Wilson, seconded by Mr. John Anderson, a cordial vote of thanks was tendered him.

The Boyne Water Bridge was carefully repaired by Mr. Geo. Swanton this week. Councillor Sharp and Reeve Christoe are deserving of credit for the prompt manner in which they attended to this important matter.

Mr. J. W. Bates advertises great reductions in the prices for all kinds of furniture sold by him at his ware-rooms on Toronto street. Read his column announcement on last page of this issue of THE ADVANCE.

Terrible Bargains at Russell's Noted Jewelery Store, Flesherton. Just now they are giving 20 per cent. off on all cash sales of $1.00 and over. Come before the thirty days are up and secure one of those fine Watches.

Some young rascals singled out a horse and rig, which was standing in the Methodist church shed last Sunday evening, untied the britchen strap of the harness and contrived to break the top off the new driving whip. There are evidently a number of pretty bad boys in Flesherton just now, some of whom may get an insight of prison life if they do not mend their ways.

David Bates was riding on a horse in the direction of the Boyne bridge last Friday morning, when, in passing another horse, attached to a buggy, the animal managed by some feat of legerdemain to insert its hind leg between the spokes of the vehicle. David dismounted with considerable celerity but the horse finally contrived, after a series of kicks and plunges, to extricate its leg without breaking any bones.

We are always pleased to hear of the success of our Flesherton and district boys abroad. This week it is our pleasing duty to tell our readers that Dr. Geo. Armstrong, son of Squire Armstrong of this town, was recently elevated to the responsible and highly important position of a Professor in the Minneapolis (U.S.) Medical College. Step by step our esteemed friend Armstrong is rapidly climbing the ladder of fame in the medical world. May he soon reach the top!

Master John W. Field will complete his third year in THE ADVANCE Office on the 12th of November. As a token of the estimation in which Johnnie is held by the Editor, he was recently presented with a neat silver watch, purchased at Mr. W. A. Brown's Jewelry store, Markdale. Master Geo. W. LeGard completed the first year of his apprenticeship in THE ADVANCE Office on Tuesday last. Both boys bid fair to reflect credit upon their parents, their native place, and THE ADVANCE Office.

Flesherton has never had a more energetic citizen than Mr. John Gordon. He has always taken the most lively interest in the progress of the town and has sacrificed time and means repeatedly in that connection. As a Temperance worker he stands without a peer in this district. All will, therefore, most sincerely regret that severe losses in the North-West some time ago, have tended to cripple him financially somewhat of late; and all will unite with us in the earnest and sincere wish that he may successfully tide over the difficulties—from which no one can claim immunity—and resume his accustomed position in the ranks of our business men.

The boys who prowl around the Methodist church shed here on Sunday nights, may be introduced to Squire Armstrong one of these days and asked to explain why they get into vehicles, amuse (?) themselves whipping the horses while the owners are worshipping inside, and otherwise meddle with what does not belong to them. If the sexton would arm himself with a good healthy cowhide and "warm their jackets for them," it would only be giving those boys what they richly deserve. Several of them are known and will be watched in future.

W. H. FLESHER.

Flesherton, March 3rd, 1887.

To-Day.

O soul, why sittest thou so long
  Beside a dead past, making moan?
Why wring thy pallid hands and cry
  "Too late!" Is not to-day thine own?

Thy harvest fields of life are bare,
  No wealth of ripened grain thou hast,
Thy careless hands were folded close
  Until the sowing-time was past.

But glean among another's sheaves,
  And starve not for thine early sin;
A hired hand within his fields
  Another's harvest gathers in.

Too late, indeed, for thee to build
  The structure of thy visions sweet;
Yet thou, with helpful hands, mayst strive
  Another's labors to complete.

Too late! Thy myrtle branches lie
  All withered by the noon-tide's heat;
Yet thou the nettles mayst destroy
  Which grow within another's gate.

The golden sun of hope fulfilled
  Is hidden from thy skies away;
Yet light serene and fair still lies
  Upon the pathway of to-day.

—Emma Withers.

To-Morrow.

The future hours? Ah, no;
  It is the gods' alone!
The hours are ringing low
  "Farewell" in every tone.
The future! Think! Beware!
Our earthly treasures rare,
Hard won through toil and care,
  Our palaces and lands,
Great victories, and all
Possessions, large and small—
But only to us fall,
  As birds light on the sands!

—Victor Hugo.

SIR HUGH'S LOVES.

"'You shall go to Switzerland and Italy, and see your father's grave, and your beautiful Florence again. You shall see fresh sights and breathe fresh air until this weary lassitude has left you, and you come back to us like our old Crystal.'

"'I will not go, Raby,' I exclaimed, exasperated beyond endurance at the very idea. 'I will never go with Mrs. Grey;' but I might as well have spoken to a rock.

"'I am your guardian, and I tell you that you will go, Crystal,' he returned, severely, but his sternness was only assumed to hide his pain. 'Nay, my child,' as he saw my face, 'do not make it too hard for me, by a resistance that will be useless. Think how the months fly by, and how the change will benefit you, and how good it is of our dear Mrs. Grey to give up her peaceful home and her work just for your sake and mine.'

"His sake! He was driving me mad. Ah, it was on me now. He might talk or he might be silent, but this would make itself heard.

* * * * *

"Oh Mona, lying deep in your quiet grave, where they carried you so soon, it was not I, but the demon who possessed me!

* * * * *

He was very white now. He took hold of my hands and held them firmly.

"'How dare you, Crystal,' he said, sternly; 'how dare you speak of a lady, of Mrs. Grey in that way. Ah, Heavenly Father, forgive this unhappy child, she cannot know what she says.'

"I answered with a mocking laugh that seemed forced from my lips, and then, as though my unhappy fate were sealed, Mrs. Grey entered.

"She thought it was an hysterical attack, nd came at once to Raby's help.

"'Do not be alarmed, Mr. Ferrers,' she aid, gently, it is only hysteria;' and she held out a glass of coldwater to him. The action provoked me. I tore myself from Raby's grasp, dashing the glass aside. I longed to break something. There was a bottle beside me that Hugh Redmond had carelessly left that very morning. I snatched up the vial, for I wanted to crush it into a million atoms, and rush from the room; but she called out in affright, 'Oh, Crystal, don't touch it, it is——' and then she never finished.

"I saw her white hands trembling, her blue eyes dilated with horror; and then my demon was upon me. I knew what it was, and I hurled it at her, and Raby sprang between—he sprang between us, Oh, Raby, Raby!—and then, with a shriek that rang through my brain for months afterwards, he fell to the ground in convulsions of agony.

* * * * *

"I cannot go on. I cannot!

"Was not Cain's punishment greater than he could bear?

"When they came to me as I lay across the threshold of his door, and told me that the light of those beautiful eyes was quenched for ever; that I should never meet that loving glance again, that he was blind—blind—and that it was my hand that had done it; then it was that in my agony I breathed the vow that I would remove their curse from them, that I would wander forth, Cain-like, into the great world, until my punishment was in some degree commensurate with my sin. Fern, I have never faltered in my purpose. I have never repented of my resolve, though their love has sought to recall me, and I know that in their hearts they had forgiven me. I have worked, and wept, and prayed, and my expiation has not been in vain,

"In the Crystal you know you will hardly find a trace of the high-spirited girl that Raby loved, nay, that he loves still. Ah, I know it all now; how he seeks his darling, and makes it his life purpose to find her, and bring her back to peace. I know how even in his intolerable anguish he prayed them to have mercy upon me, and to spare me the awful truth. I have seen his face, that changed blind face of his. I have ministered to him with these hands, I have heard his dear voice, and yet I have not betrayed myself."

"Crystal," sobbed Fern, and indeed she could scarcely speak for her tears, she was so moved by this pitiful story, "if I were you I would go back to-morrow; how can you, how can you leave him, when he needs you so?"

"I go back to him?" repeated the other girl, mournfully. "I who have blighted his life and darkened his days; who have made his existence a long night? I who have robbed him of the glory of his priesthood, and made him what he is, a wreck of his former self?"

"Yes," was the steady answer. "I would go back to him and be his eyes, though his goodness humbled me in the dust. Ah, Crystal, are you worse than she out of whom the Saviour cast seven devils, and who loved much because much had been forgiven her?"

"Hush, hush! you do not know, Fern!"

"My darling, I do know," persisted Fern, gently, "and I tell you that it is your duty to go back to Raby, who loves you so. Nay," she continued, as a deep blush rose to Crystal's olive cheek, "he never cared for this Mona—your own words have proved that. Go back to him, and be the light of his eyes, and take his darkness from him, for I see plainly that he will never leave off seeking you and you only."

CHAPTER XXVI.

THE TALL YOUNG LADY IN BROWN

Not enjoyment and not sorrow
Is our destined end or way;
But to act that each to-morrow
Finds us further than to-day.

In the world's broad field of battle
In the bivouac of life
Be not like dumb driven cattle,
Be a hero in the strife."

Longfellow.

As Fern finished her little speech, Crystal hid her face in her hands, but there was no answer—only the sound of a deep drawn sob was distinctly audible. A few minutes afterwards she raised it, and in the moonlight Fern could see it was streaming with tears.

"Do not say any more," she implored; "do you think my own heart does not tell me all that, but I will not go back yet; the flaming sword of conscience still bars my way to my Paradise. Fern, do you know why I have told you my story? it is because I am going away, and I want you to promise me something, and there is no one else I can ask; no, not your mother," as Fern looked surprised at this, "she has enough to trouble her."

"What is it?" asked Fern, rather timidly.

"I am going away," returned Crystal, "and one never knows what may happen. I am young, but life is uncertain. If I never come back, if anything befalls me, will you with your own hands give this to Raby," and as she spoke, she drew from her bosom a thick white envelope sealed and directed, and placed it in Fern's lap. As it lay there Fern could read the inscription: "To be given to the Rev. Raby Ferrers, after my death."

"Oh, Crystal," she exclaimed, with a shiver, "what could happen to you. You are young—not one-and-twenty yet—and your health is good, and——" but Crystal interrupted her with a strange smile.

"Yes, it is true; but the young and the strong have to die sometimes; when the call comes we must go. Do not look so frightened, Fern, I will not die if I can help it; but if it should be so, will you with your own hands give that to Raby: it will tell him what I have suffered, and—and it will comfort him a little."

"Yes, dear, I will do it;" and Fern leaned forwards and kissed her softly. The moon was shining brightly now, and in the clear white light Fern noticed for the first time how thin and pale Crystal looked; how her cheek, and even her supple figure, had lost their roundness. There were deep hollows in the temples, dark lines under the dark eyes; in spite of her beauty she was fearfully wan. The grief that preyed upon her would soon ravage her good looks. For the first time Fay felt a vague fear oppressing her, but she had no opportunity to say more, for at that moment Crystal rose quickly from her seat.

"You have promised," she said, gratefully; "thank you for that. It is a great trust, Fern, but I know I can rely on you. Now I can talk no more. If your mother comes in, will you tell her about Miss Campion? I think she will be glad for many reasons. Now I will try and sleep, for there is much to be done to-morrow. Good-night, my dear;" and the next moment Fern found herself alone in the moonlight.

When Mrs. Trafford returned, she heard the news very quietly.

"It will be better—much better," she said, quickly. "You must not fret about it, my sunbeam. Crystal is beginning to look ill; change and movement will do her good. Our life is very quiet. She has too much time to feed upon herself. She will be obliged to rouse herself among strangers." And when Fern told her tearfully of the promise she had made, Mrs. Trafford only listened with a grave smile.

"Put it away safely, my dear; you will never have to give it, I hope; only it is a relief to the poor child to know that you have it. Her's is a strange, morbid nature. She is not yet humbled sufficiently. When she is, she will go back, like the Prodigal, and take the forgiveness that is waiting for her. Now, my darling, all this sad talk has made you look pale. You must try and forget it, and go to sleep." But, for the first time in her healthy girlhood, sleep refused to come at Fern's bidding; and she lay restless and anxious, thinking of her friend's tragical story until the grey dawn ushered in the new day.

The little household in Beulah Place were very busy during the next few days. The girls went out shopping together to replenish Crystal's modest wardrobe, and then sat working until nearly midnight to complete the new travelling dress. Fern was putting the final stitches on the last afternoon while Crystal went to bid good-bye to her pupils. The black trunk in the girl's room was already packed, for she was to start early in the morning.

Percy had not yet heard the news; he had been away from town the last week, to Crystal's great relief. She had begged Mrs. Trafford and Fern to say nothing about her movements. He might appear at any moment, and Crystal dreaded a scene if he heard of her approaching departure.

"It will be much better for him not to know until the sea is between us," she had said to Mrs. Trafford. "When he hears I have gone without bidding him good-bye, he will see then that I mean what I say—that my life has nothing to do with his;" and Mrs. Trafford had agreed to this.

It was with a feeling of annoyance and very real discomfort, then, that Crystal caught sight of him as she came down the steps of Upton House. He was walking quickly down the street, and evidently perceived her at once. There would be no chance of escaping him, so she walked slowly on, quite aware that he would overtake her in another minute. As they were to part so soon, she must put up with his escort. Of course he had been to Beulah Place, and was now in search of her; poor foolish boy!

The next moment she heard his footstep behind her.

"Miss Davenport, this is too delightful," and his handsome face wore a look of pleased eagerness. "I thought I should have to wait some time, from Fern's account but I have not been here a moment. There is no hurry, is there?" checking her pace as Crystal seemed inclined to walk fast.

"We are busy people, Mr. Trafford," she answered, pleasantly, "and can never afford to walk slowly. Why did you not wait with your sister? you have not seen her for a long time."

"Has it seemed a long time to you?" he returned, with quick emphasis. "I wish I could believe you had missed me, that you had even given me a thought during my absence;" and he looked wistfully at the girl as he spoke.

"I am sure your mother and Fern missed you," she replied, evasively. She wanted to keep him in good humor, and avoid any dangerous topics. She would like to leave him, if possible, with some kindly memory of this interview. In spite of his sins against her, she could not altogether harden her heart against Fay's brother.

Any person meeting these two young people would have regarded them as a perfectly matched couple. Percy's refined aristocratic face and distinguished carriage made a splendid foil for Crystal's dark beauty and girlish grace. As Percy's eyes rested on her they scarcely noticed the shabby dress she wore. He was thinking as usual that he had never seen any one to compare with this young governess; and he wondered, as he had wondered a hundred times before, if her mother had been an Englishwoman; his mother would never tell him anything about Miss Davenport, except that she was of good birth and an orphan.

"Did you bring Mr. Huntington with you?" she asked rather hurriedly, for she was quite aware of the fixed look that always annoyed her. The admiration of men was odious to her now the only eyes she had cared to please would never look at her again.

"Do you mean Erle?" was the careless answer. 'Oh, no, my dearly beloved cousin has other game to bring down;" and here there was a slightly mocking tone in Percy's voice. "He is with la belle Evelyn as usual. I am afraid Erle does not quite hit it as an ardent lover; he is rather half-hearted. He asked me to go down to Victoria Station to meet his visitor, but I declined, with thanks. I had other business on hand, and I do not care to be ordered about; so the carriage must go alone."

"You are expecting visitors at Belgrave House then?" she asked; but there was no interest in her manner. She only wanted to keep the conversation to general subjects. She would talk of Belgrave House or anything he liked if he would only not make love to her. If he only knew how she hated it, and from him of all men.

"Oh, it is not my visitor," was the reply; "it is only some old fogie or other that Erle has picked up at Sandycliffe—Erle has a craze about picking up odd people. Fancy inflicting a blind parson on us by way of a change."

He was not looking at the girl as he spoke, or he must have seen the startled look in her face. The next moment she had turned her long neck aside.

"Do you mean he is actually blind and a clergyman? how very strange!"

"Yes; the result of some accident or other. His name is Ferrers. Erle raved about him to my grandfather; but then Erle always raves about people—he is terribly soft hearted. He is coming up to London, on some quest or other, no one knows what it is, Erle is so very mysterious about the whole thing."

"Oh, indeed," rather faintly; "and you—you are to meet him, Mr. Trafford."

"On the contrary, I am going to do nothing of the kind," he returned, imperturably. "I told Erle that at 6.30, the time the train was due, I was booked for a pressing engagement. I did not mention the engagement was with my mother, and that I should probably be partaking of a cup of tea; but the fact is true nevertheless."

All in Fun.

Policeman Allen, of the western district, found a man sleeping on the commons in the vicinity of Broadway and Twenty-third. On getting the fellow to his feet, the officer discovered that he had been badly beaten. "How did you get that black eye?" asked Allen.

"Oh, that's all right; all in fun; we all have to take it some time."

"But your nose is mashed flat; explain, who assaulted you."

"And your right ear looks as though it had been through a sausage mill."

"It don't matter, if she's happy; I can stand it."

"She, who do you mean? Man, there an't ten hairs on your head. Did your wife beat you up?"

"No, no; it was a little family affair. We have 'em often, so it don't matter. Sometimes my wife's mother takes a hand in the shindy; the old gal is always there when she is in the humor for fun, and last night she was boiling over with it."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

The Port Colborne Gas Well.

The gas at the well suddenly disappeared on Tuesday, and no reason can be accounted for it. It is surmised by some that the hole at the vein has by some means filled up, thus preventing the gas from coming up. On Wednesday, men were at work putting down a two-inch pipe inside the casting to ascertain, if possible, the cause of the obstruction. No one thinks it can be possible that the gas has already been exhausted in the well; still it is causing the company considerable uneasiness.

GOOD ADVICE TO GIRLS.

Be Very Careful About the Letters You Write to Married Men.

A habit very common with a number of our thoughtless young ladies who do a great many things quietly which they would not like to have known of at home—a habit deserving of the strongest condemnation—is that of promiscuous correspondence with gentlemen, whether the gentlemen be married or single. The young ladies who find pleasure in this habit use their pens on any pretext that turns up, and sometimes on no pretext at all. We are not really sure that this does not come less under the head of an undesirable habit than a sin, for there is an indelicacy about it quite amounting to immodesty, of which no girl who respects herself, or who desires the respect of others, will be guilty.

These young letter-writers, however, generally get a fit reward for their thoughtlessness or their culpability. If their correspondent is a man of systematic habits, their letters are docketed and ticketed, and his clerks have as much of a laugh over them as they wish; and if he is not a systematic man, then those letters are at the mercy of any and every one who chooses to waste time reading them. If their correspondent is a married man, then his possession of their letters, even of the most trivial kind, places the writers at a disadvantage. Sooner or later the letters fall into the hands of his wife, who reads the folly or the wickedness with clear eyes, and holds the writer not only in contempt, but in her power. No young girl can be sure that her correspondent is not merely amusing himself with her; and it is often the case that her letters are unwelcome and a nuisance, and he does not check them and does reply to them, not from interest in her, but merely manly chivalry. When the writer has recovered from her folly or forgotten about her idleness, there is the letter ready to rise, like an awful betraying ghost, after she herself has possibly undergone a change, that will make her face burn, branded with shame, should the letter ever chance to confront her, or perhaps even the memory of it. Her motive may have been all innocence at the time, but it is left forever under doubt, and, in fact, except in the baldest business affair, there can be no excuse, and therefore no innocence, in the matter of a young girl's writing letters to any man not her personal relative or guardian, for about most of these letters there is an unmaidenliness amounting to indecency, and in the end her correspondent himself never thinks other than light of her on account of them.—Harper's Bazar.

"The Editor Knows Everything."

It is encouraging to see how rapidly the friends of our cause all over the country are realizing and acting upon this truth. For one thing, they are making the poverty press do good missionary work. John Smith writes to his county paper expounding the anti-poverty gospel, and requesting to be put right if he is wrong. The editor is only too happy to oblige—and, besides, it's such an easy thing to do. The editor is perfectly at home on the subject—knows all about anti-poverty, united labor party, Henry George, Dr. McGlynn and all the rest of it, and has only been waiting for a good chance to knock the whole concern into a cocked hat. Ever read "Progress and Poverty?" Well, no; but, bless you, he knows the book just as well as though he had read every word of it, has read all about it a hundred times. And so Mr. Editor sits down, and triumphantly proves to his correspondent some such proposition as that even if it were possible to divide the land up so that every man, woman and child should have a piece it wouldn't be a week before some men would be selling their shares, and other men buying them; or, perhaps, like His Grace Archbishop Corrigan, in his famous pastoral, he gives a lot of splendid arguments against the private ownership of land, and then claims that they prove private ownership to be altogether justifiable. In other words, he sets up a figure of straw, christens it Anti-poverty, and demolishes it triumphantly. Now, this sort of argument rarely fails to recoil. Men read the paper and ask themselves if it really can be possible that hundreds of thousands of men—clergymen, mechanics, lawyers, doctors and storekeepers, men of every trade and occupation—can be deluded by such a transparently shallow theory as that which the editor has exploded in a single column article. And, just as a matter of curiosity, these men take up "Progress and Poverty" or the Standard, or begin to question their anti-poverty friends, and then — ah! then there's a pretty kettle of fish! They see the truth—see it face to face for the first time, and, seeing it, they can't help recognizing and believing in it. — New York Standard.

MISS FAY AT HER OLD TRICKS.

A Seance in London that Ended Disastrously.

Miss Fay, who has received several flattering notices in leading London papers, was giving a "spiritualistic" seance at Blackburn on Tuesday night; but the performance came to a sudden termination, for some people in the audience struck lights. Miss Fay was supposed to be floating across the room in semi-darkness, but as the figure passed over the heads of the audience it was caught, and lo! the spiritualistic object was found to be nothing but a dummy of worsted and gauze, manipulated by wires, while Miss Fay herself was seen to have climbed to the roof. There was a disturbance after this, the platform was stormed and the police had to be called in.—Pall Mall Gazette.

Pressure That Should Be Resisted.

"Knoxonian" writes in the Canada Presbyterian: The path of the Church is fairly strewn with the victims of irresponsible pressure. Clergymen suffer from this kind of pressure more perhaps than any other class of men. A few restless, irresponsible spirits surround a pastor and urge him to send for some sensational revivalist and get up a revival. The pastor wants a genuine revival in the congregation much more than any of the restless spirits do. He has worked for it, planned for it, prayed for it, done all in his power to promote it. But he knows very well that many excellent people of conservative leanings in the congregation do not take kindly to some modern revival methods. He knows also that seeds of discord have been sown at many so-called revivals that have brought forth bitter fruit for years. He knows also that more effective and more useful special services might be held under the auspices of the session and by ministers of his own church, but he has a chronic fear of being charged with opposition to revivals; he yields and the sensational unknown is sent for. The result is perhaps disastrous. But when the disaster comes, where are the irresponsibles who brought the pressure to bear? They are snickering around corner groceries gabbling over the affair in much the same spirit as they would gabble over the last lacrosse or baseball match. The Church may lose influence, lose money, lose the inestimable blessing of peace, but the irresponsibles lose nothing, for the best and simplest of all reasons—they have nothing to lose. By all means hold special services, when reasonable and responsible persons desire to hold them. But let such services be begun, continued and ended by men of known and established Christian character, men for whom the Christian people of the community have respect and in whom they have confidence. A revival carried on by persons that no sane man would make executor for an estate worth $100 is not likely to do much good.

"A Grand Nicht" with Carlyle.

Alfred Tennyson at one time often paid a visit to Thomas Carlyle at Chelsea. On one of those occasions these two great men, having gone to Carlyle's library to have a quiet chat together, seated themselves one on each side of the fireplace, and lit their pipes. And there for two hours they sat, plunged in profound meditation, the silence being unbroken save for the little dry regular sound that the lips of the smokers made as they sent puffs of smoke soaring to the ceiling. Not one single word broke the silence. After two hours of this strange converse between two great souls that understood each other without speech, Tennyson rose to take leave of his host. Carlyle went with him to the door, and then, grasping his hand, uttered these words—"Eh, Alfred, we've had a grand nicht! Come back again soon."

Blew Out the Gas.

Edward Moran and Thomas Moran, from Ardoch, Dakota, on their way to Ontario, obtained a room Monday night at the Massasoit House, corner of Central avenue and South Water street, and were found dead in their beds yesterday morning. The gas-jet was open and the room full of gas, which it was presumed they had blown out. They were well-dressed young men. Besides their clothing and other valuables $76 was found in their pockets. The coroner held an inquest, and a verdict was returned of asphyxiation by gas.—Chicago Times of yesterday.

"Yes, occasionally," George reluctantly admitted.

"Oh, George, and what did he say?"

"He said, 'Well, George, my boy, I don't care if I do.'"

DETROIT CHARLEY ROSS.

The Strange Mystery of Little John Connerton.

A Pet Son's Absence For Twenty-five Years—A Fond Mother's Vain Search—A Fortune Awaiting the Missing Heir—Another Sad Chapter of the California Wreck.

A woman with sad, frightened face, and eyes reddened and swollen by weeping, hurried off the Michigan Central train from the north this noon, says the Detroit News of Thursday. An undertaker was with her. As they passed forward men were unloading a long pine box from the baggage car. The woman was Mrs. Cornelius Connerton, saved from the wreck of the propeller California. The rough box contained the remains of poor "Con." Connerton, the son who went down before the mother's eyes.

There was reason why she should be sad-eyed and pallid. Not alone from the fearful death struggle she had with the waves, but from the chapter of afflictions which was in her life. This rough box was only the last of a series of bereavements. The strangest feature of them has yet remained untold. It was the first blow which came to the Connerton home, which has stood for 30 years on Sixth street. First it was a rude shanty, but it had a dozen around its table and prosperity followed the thrifty occupants.

Among the brightest members of this family group was little Johnnie Connerton. He was an apt youngster at school, getting along so well that his proud father sent him to the Academy of St. Roches, near Montreal, and then to Toronto. Of course he was the pet of the household when he came home for the summer vacation. Although but 14 years old he was unusually intelligent, and particularly quiet and obedient at home.

"May I go down town a little while?" he asked.

The question was addressed to his older sister, now Mrs. Sanpier. She did not readily assent to the request, for the Cahill boy was considered wild.

Johnnie was so earnest in his promise and so trusty that his sister finally consented to his going. He ran off chatting and laughing. But he did not come right back. He was not back in an hour. The next day he was still gone. A week passed by and he was still missing. That was twenty-five years ago. He has never been heard of since. Is he dead or alive? That is the question which daily comes to the bereft mother.

Search was made for the lost pet. He was advertised for and traced. But all trails came to naught. The young Cahill boy had also disappeared at the same time, but he finally returned. He told an improbable story of how the two had made their way to New York city, where they had finally got separated. They parted in one of the busy streets of the metropolis. Young Cahill returned here and was the youth who burst a blood vessel with fatal results during a family quarrel in Springwells a short time since.

But the fond mother has never abandoned hope. She had thought that her boy shipped on some man-of-war and she determined to go on a personal search for the lost one. Starting alone she went to New York, where the shipping offices and the wharves were scoured.

"Have you seen my boy?"

That was the question which the rough wharfers heard all one summer as she carried on her search. Then she turned to the navy yards and then to Washington. But it was no use. A whole summer of searching was in vain. The years have gone by and hope has almost given way to despair.

If John Connerton came home to-day he would find himself a rich man. When he left the modest little shanty 25 years ago there was little wealth about it. But the thrifty father soon added to his means, until the Connertons have become well off. They own houses and lots on Howard and Sixth streets, and only recently sold a farm for $17,000 cash. Of this Johnnie is in part an heir, his share being worth something like a hundred thousand dollars. His absence ties up the estate, and the law forbids a division. Perhaps the lost heir may some day return to claim his thousands.

For 25 years this has hung like a pall over the Connerton home. But another and a younger son, Cornelius, cheered the bereft mother, for his devotion was constant and warm. It is this son who was drowned on the propeller California.

STOOD TO HIS POST.

The Captain of the California Traduced by Cowardly Men.

A Detroit despatch says: The Free Press has the following despatch from Mackinac: The opinion is expressed that if Capt. Trowell had been supported by his first officers and the rest of the crew there would have been no loss of life. It has been stated that only one boat could be lowered, but such was not the case. There were two boats lowered. The first, which should have taken the woman, was taken possession of by eight of the crew. Two more of the crew jumped into the water and caught hold of the boat, but they were not taken in, and, after hanging on as long as possible, were forced to let go, and were drowned. It is claimed by the men that were in this boat that they could not lift their companions into the boat, but this is a flimsy excuse. It is probable that the reason they were not taken into the boat was because it was feared they would overload it. The second boat that was launched was taken possession of by the first mate and two of the crew, while the captain was in the cabin after the passengers. When he returned to the deck they were gone and the passengers and remainder of the crew were left to their fate.

It has been charged by one of the crew that the captain deserted his post. The man who makes the charge was one of those that rushed into the boat and left the poor women passengers. Captain Trowell remained on the deck of his steamer until it sunk from under him, and even then he, with the assistance of his brave engineers who had manfully stood by him, succeeded in clearing a boat from the wreck and rescued the lady passenger that was saved and also the stewards. Mrs. Connerton, the lady passenger, and also Mrs. Blood, the stewardess, are loud in their praise of the captain and engineers. From all the facts learned it is evident that Captain Trowell stood at his post like a hero and did all in his power to save his passengers and crew.

THE TUG ORIENT

Founders in Lake Erie in Tuesday's Gale—All on Board Lost.

A Detroit despatch says: Another distressing marine disaster took place on Lake Erie in the great blow of Tuesday. The ill-fated craft was the tug Orient, which went down with all hands near Point au Pelee about 2 o'clock that day. The Orient left Toledo Monday night for Sandusky, expecting to pick up a tow, but retraced her course as far as Dummy Light. On the following morning she was seen by the crew of the tug Oswego making bad weather and flying a signal of distress. The Oswego herself, although a much larger tug than the Orient, was in great danger of foundering, and any thought of attempting to render assistance in the fearful sea running could not be entertained. The violence of the storm increased, and the waves broke over and almost submerged the little craft. The schooner Gleniffer, Captain Robertson, lay behind the Point, and her crew were witnesses of the disaster. Shortly before the tug went down the crew could be discerned baling her out with pails, but their feeble efforts did not count for much against the great mountains of water breaking over and filling her cabin. Her fires had evidently been extinguished, and having no steerage way she wallowed helplessly in the seas. Finally, to the horror of the helpless spectators, she took a header and disappeared from sight, carrying with her the lives of six brave men. They were, D. Lyons, master; John Davis, first engineer; Wm. Panghorn, second engineer; Edward Kane, mate; P. Dillock, fireman; Joseph Sharkey, steward. The crew all belonged to Marine City, where the boat was owned. Captain Lyons and Engineer Davis were both part owners. The crew was composed of young men, all well known and experienced tug men.

A MARRIED MAN

Advertises his Business by Insulting his Wife and She Sues Him.

A St. Thomas despatch says: A singular lawsuit is now pending between John D. Alton and his wife, of West Lorne. Alton, who is a tailor by trade, opened a shop in a house deeded to his wife by her father. His mother-in-law came to live with them, and domestic infelicity ensued, resulting in the husband being imprisoned, in default of payment of $1,200 sureties to keep the peace. During his confinement his wife and her mother removed his fixtures, and rented the building to a dressmaker. The husband, on returning, ejected the dressmaker and turned out his mother-in-law, but his wife accompanied her, whereupon the husband opened out business, posting up all over the village the notice, "My amiable, adorable and most abominable wife having left, and my domestic expenses having been thereby reduced, I am now able to make suits much cheaper than heretofore," etc. He now claims he did not know the meaning of "abominable." Mrs. Alton now brings suit to eject her husband from what she claims are her premises, and Alton enters a counter suit, claiming that whereas he expended $1,100 on the property he has a lien thereon.

What Causes Intemperance?

"Are you familiar with the various causes which bring about so much drunkenness in this benighted land?" he asked.

"I am (hic) quite familiar with some of them, sir," hiccoughed the young man politely: "such as whisky, gin, brandy and beer for (hic) instance."

Mrs. Ezra S. Allen ascended alone in a balloon from the State fair grounds at Narragansett Park, Providence, Wednesday afternoon. She reached a height of three miles, and met with diverse currents of air and a whirlwind. The situation grew so threatening that she pulled the explosion cord and fell with the balloon a mile and a half. The force of the fall was broken by the balloon alighting in a treetop.

THE COST OF FINE PIANOS.

An Alleged $50,000 Investment—Prices of Wealthy Men's Instruments.

The one subject of which piano dealers and piano manufacturers and workmen in piano factories have been talking for the past few days is the piano said to be for Mr. Henry G. Marquand, with five figures following the dollar mark in the invoice thus: $46,950. No such price as $46,950 was ever paid for a piano before, but no prophet will venture to say that no one will ever pay so much again.

"What do you think about such a piano?" said a reporter to an uptown music dealer.

"Had you arrived at the age of maturity before the war of the rebellion began," said the dealer, "and had you been of a cynical disposition at that time, you would have been interested, not to say astounded, at the large sums of money paid as income taxes by men in this town. It gave one notoriety to pay a large income tax, and no one was debarred from paying as good a tax as he chose. Perhaps a piano could be built with that sum, but it would have to be inlaid with gold and have the monogram set in diamonds before the bill could honestly call for half as much as that."

"Ordinarily from $1,500 to $2,000. Mrs. Jay Gould bought one recently that cost $2,500. It was an upright grand and just as fine an instrument in everything that goes to make a piano as ever left the factory of one of the best known makers in the city. C. P. Huntington has recently purchased a piano. His cost $2,000, while Judge Hilton, another millionaire, got one not long ago for which he paid a little more than $2,200, I believe. Now, these instruments were the very best the workmen could produce. The builders knew, of course, that it would help them to sell fine pianos to other families if such people as these had their make of instruments. The choicest woods, seasoned to the exact dot, were used in the cases; extra quality cloth worth $18 a yard, where the ordinary stuff used is worth from $5 to $10, went to the actions; the ivory was selected from perhaps a hundred different tusks, and so on from the casters under the legs to the varnish on top, everything was the best. The monograms were worked out in gold or antique metal, or some other expensive stuff, and when the instruments were set in the parlors of the purchasers there was a richness to the tones that would enchant any one. And the tone was there to remain; such an instrument will last wonderfully. But, after all, you can get just as good an instrument, one with precisely the same tones and one that will last just as well, for less than half the money paid by Mr. Gould."—New York Sun.

CURED BY FAITH ALONE.

A Doctor's Ruse to Make a Dumb Woman Resume Talking.

A reliable physician in Danbury relates a remarkable case of curing a woman who had been unable to utter a syllable in two years. She had been treated by a number of doctors for her loss of voice, but to no purpose. This physician satisfied himself that there was no disease of the organ of speech nor any derangement. He concluded that she could speak if only she would be influenced to exert the will power. From a conversation with her carried on in writing he discovered that she had great faith in miraculous cures, and thought she could only be relieved in some such way. He found, too, that she was superstitious. He concluded to try the effect of a little mummery on her. Accordingly, one morning when visiting her he sat down by a table and leaned his head down upon his hands for some five minutes without speaking, as if in rapt meditation. He suddenly jumped up and told the woman that he was now right, and he was going to cure her on a certain day. He then gave her minute directions in respect to it. He told her that on that day he should come to the house at 10 a. m.; that he should first give three raps upon the window, and then he should go to the front door and give two raps; that when the door opened he would be found standing with both hands upon the door-post and his head leaning upon them; that the door to her room must be opened wide, and that he would walk in with measured tread, and when he got to her bedside he should say: "Good morning," and that she would answer in reply, "Good morning, doctor." On the appointed day he did just as he said he should, and when he said "Good morning" to her she promptly made the reply, "Good morning doctor," in a loud, strong voice. She seemed utterly astonished herself, but said she felt that what the doctor said would be true, and firmly believed that he had wrought a miracle in her cure.—Newhaven News.

He Drowned the Dog.

"I drowned my dog last night—the spaniel, you know."

"Why, how did you manage it? The dog swam like a duck."

"Well, I tied a loaf of bread to his neck and he went down like a rock."

"A loaf of bread?"

It Might Have Been Worse.

Husband (reading the paper)—"Another terrible railroad accident!"

Wife (shocked)—"Is that possible! How many were killed?"

Husband—"One killed and four injured!"

Wife (disappointed)—"Is that all?"

Saturday was the third day of the Mormon conference at Salt Lake. Wilford Woodruff, President of the Twelve Apostles, read a long epistle referring to the state of the Church and the Mormon people and to the death of Jno. Taylor, saying the Church was now in the hands of the twelve, which was supposed to mean that they will not elect a president at this conference. The epistle was very long, and devoted mainly to Church affairs. He bears a personal testimony to Jos. Smith, transmitting to the apostles the keys of priesthood and power and the ceremonies of the Latter Day authority.

LIGHTNING CALCULATION.

Some Feats Performed by the Famous Zerah Colburn.

Zerah Colburn was asked to say what number multiplied into itself would give the number 568,336,125, writes Professor Proctor. The idea was to see how far he would get ahead of a practiced computer, who was set to work finding the cube root of the number—for that was what Colburn was asked for—by the usual process. But before the practiced computer had written down the number Colburn gave the answer, 645. Colburn was at this time only 8 years old, and he had not even so much instruction in arithmetic as most boys of that age have received. He knew nothing of the rules of extracting roots. But even if he had known how to extract the cube root of a number, his feat would not be less marvellous. Let any one who would learn to appreciate Colburn's calculating powers try the following experiment: Set down the number just named, and obtain the cube root by the ordinary method, making no hurry over the work; next copy the figures thus obtained, setting them down—in their order as obtained—as fast as a pen or pencil will travel, noting the time taken in this easy part of the work. Then consider that a child 8 years old obtained the right result, without pen or pencil, in less time than had been taken to copy down the number itself, to which all the calculation thus written out had been applied.

Asked what numbers will divide 36,083 exactly, Colburn at once answered: "None." Let the reader try how long it takes with pen and paper to prove that this is really so; he will have to try the divisors 3, 7, 11, 13, 17, 19, 23, 29, 31, 37, 41, 43, 47, 53 and many more, up to 187, before the proof will be complete. Once, and once only, did Colburn have to make any considerable effort in dealing with a number as he had dealt with 36,083. The number was somewhat famous in mathematical annals—viz.: 2,294,967,297, of which the great arithmetician, Fermat, had declared that it had no division. Fermat even gave what appeared to him a proof of this; but the celebrated mathematician, Euler, showed that the proof was incomplete. Euler also, after long labor, found a number, 641, which will divide Fermat's "indivisible." Colburn was set the same task that had foiled Fermat and had occupied Euler for months. The child could not answer that day, nor the next, nor for a week or fortnight; but in the third week he gave the solution. During that time he had kept no record of his work save in that wonderfully retentive brain of his. It may interest the reader to know that the number over which Fermat and Euler had contended is obtained by multiplying two into itself 31 times and adding units. Colburn did the work of thus obtaining the number in a few minutes.

She Couldn't Understand It.

"What in the world has happened to you since the last time I saw you?" asked one lady of another when they met on the street the other day; "I can't understand it. Then you were pale, haggard and low spirited, and I remember you said that you hardly cared whether you lived or died. To-day you look ever so much younger, and it is very evident from your beaming face that your low spirits have taken flight." "Yes, indeed," was the reply; "and shall I tell you what drove them away? It was Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. I was a martyr to functional derangement until I began taking the 'Prescription.' Now I am as well as I ever was in my life. No woman who suffers as I did ought to let an hour pass before procuring this wonderful remedy."

—Queen Anne pills are said to be the latest novelty offered by the druggists for interior decorations.

How to Reduce Your Expenses.

You can do it easily, and you will not have to deprive yourself of a single comfort; on the contrary, you will enjoy life more than ever. How can you accomplish this result? Easily; cut down your doctor's bills. When you lose your appetite, and become bilious and constipated, and therefore low-spirited, don't rush off to the family physician for a prescription, or, on the other hand, wait until you are sick abed before doing anything at all; but just go to the druggist's and for 25 cents get a supply of Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Purgative Pellets. Take them as directed, and our word for it, your unpleasant symptoms will disappear as if by magic, you will have no big doctor's bill to pay, and everybody interested (except the doctors) will feel happy.

A Prize of $100,000

is a good thing to get, and the man who wins it by superior skill, or by an unexpected turn of fortune's wheel, is to be congratulated. But he who escapes from the clutches of that dread monster, Consumption, and wins back health and happiness, is far more fortunate. The chances of winning $100,000 are small, but every consumptive may be absolutely sure of recovery if he takes Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery in time. For all scrofulous diseases (consumption is one of them) it is an unfailing remedy. All druggists.

Owing to the prevalence of Asiatic cholera in Italy and Mediterranean ports, the importation of rags into the Dominion from those regions is prohibited.

Imitation

Is sometimes called the sincere form of flattery. This may account for the number of imitations of the original and only positive corn cure—Putnam's Painless Corn Extractor. All such fail to possess equal merit, so when purchasing get the genuine "Putnam's." Safe, sure and painless. All druggists.

A large dog in a neighboring town, says the Boston Journal, has a great pleasure in chewing gum. When he sees any one engaged in gum-chewing, he will tease for a piece until he is satisfied. Then he will be quiet for half an hour masticating the gum with an expression of deep satisfaction.

Very Well Satisfied.

"You don't mean to say that you had to pay just as much for your pew during the summer months when the church was closed as when it was open?"

"Certainly."

"How ridiculous!"

"Oh, I don't know; I don't begrudge the money. I enjoyed the pew quite as well as though I was in it; better, if anything."—Boston Transcript.

A large number of Kingstonians, en route to Kingston from New York, in connection with an excursion, had a great shake up on the New York Central, near Rome, where, in some way, a coach got off the track. The prompt stoppage of the train avoided fatalities.

The treatment of many thousands of cases of those chronic weaknesses and distressing ailments peculiar to females, at the Invalids' Hotel and Surgical Institute, Buffalo, N. Y., has afforded a vast experience in nicely adapting and thoroughly testing remedies for the cure of woman's peculiar maladies.

Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is the outgrowth, or result, of this great and valuable experience. Thousands of testimonials, received from patients and from physicians who have tested it in the more aggravated and obstinate cases which had baffled their skill, prove it to be the most wonderful remedy ever devised for the relief and cure of suffering women. It is not recommended as a "cure-all," but as a most perfect Specific for woman's peculiar ailments.

As a powerful, invigorating tonic, it imparts strength to the whole system, and to the womb and its appendages in particular. For overworked, "worn-out," "run-down," debilitated teachers, milliners, dressmakers, seamstresses, "shop-girls," housekeepers, nursing mothers, and feeble women generally, Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is the greatest earthly boon, being unequaled as an appetizing cordial and restorative tonic.

As a soothing and strengthening nervine, "Favorite Prescription" is unequaled and is invaluable in allaying and subduing nervous excitability, irritability, exhaustion, prostration, hysteria, spasms and other distressing, nervous symptoms commonly attendant upon functional and organic disease of the womb. It induces refreshing sleep and relieves mental anxiety and despondency.

Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is a legitimate medicine, carefully compounded by an experienced and skillful physician, and adapted to woman's delicate organization. It is purely vegetable in its composition and perfectly harmless in its effects in any condition of the system. For morning sickness, or nausea, from whatever cause arising, weak stomach, indigestion, dyspepsia and kindred symptoms, its use, in small doses, will prove very beneficial.

"Favorite Prescription" is a positive cure for the most complicated and obstinate cases of leucorrhœa, excessive flowing, painful menstruation, unnatural suppressions, prolapsus, or falling of the womb, weak back, "female weakness," anteversion, retroversion, bearing-down sensations, chronic congestion, inflammation and ulceration of the womb, inflammation, pain and tenderness in ovaries, accompanied with "internal heat."

As a regulator and promoter of functional action, at that critical period of change from girlhood to womanhood, "Favorite Prescription" is a perfectly safe remedial agent, and can produce only good results. It is equally efficacious and valuable in its effects when taken for those disorders and derangements incident to that later and most critical period, known as "The Change of Life."

"Favorite Prescription," when taken in connection with the use of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, and small laxative doses of Dr. Pierce's Purgative Pellets (Little Liver Pills), cures Liver, Kidney and Bladder diseases. Their combined use also removes blood taints, and abolishes cancerous and scrofulous humors from the system.

"Favorite Prescription" is the only medicine for women, sold by druggists, under a positive guarantee, from the manufacturers, that it will give satisfaction in every case, or money will be refunded. This guarantee has been printed on the bottle-wrapper, and faithfully carried out for many years.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

It has been suggested that an Academy of Music be started in Flesherton with—well, we won't suggest the name of the head man just yet. The whirligig of time will reveal the fact in due time.

Ras Wiman lectured to a number of Brampton ladies and a few dozen neighboring farmers recently, on the Commercial Union question. It was a cold day—for Mr. Wiman! And it promises to be yet colder.

A four story building in course of erection in New York city collapsed on Monday afternoon last and a number of people were killed and injured. A great many buildings erected in cities on this continent are little better than huge coffins.

Wonder if it wouldn't be a pretty good idea to build a tramway between Flesherton and the Station—to connect city and suburb, as it were? Another good idea—a more practical one, too—strikes us, and it is this: How would a good straight level road, with a nice plank sidewalk all the way, fill the bill? If anybody else has got a better suggestion to offer, let us hear it.

A member of our staff made a couple of rough boxes—the roughest we have ever seen—for use in our new printing office. The painters, carpenters and plasterers kicked them around and soiled their handsome features before we got a chance to take a second mortgage on them. We hated like sin to acknowledge ownership, so when a little boy asked what they were for, the m. o. o. s. gruffly replied—"Oh, them's old boxes we picked up to put spring poets and other vermin in!"

The pilot shows his hand in the most unmistakable manner in last week's Hanover Post. We knew he would all along, notwithstanding his artful little dodges to screen himself behind the editorial chair. He threatens—the usual subterfuge of cowards! while the craven tool stands with his fingers in his mouth ready to carry out the behests of his crafty ally. Let him threaten to his hearts content: THE ADVANCE has done nothing of which it need be ashamed. But the Pilot—what of him? We shall see.

It has always been said that pigs are stubborn animals. So they are. They are also the most contrary brutes on the face of the earth. Tuesday, about noon, we witnessed an interesting illustration of the above on Collingwood street. Several men were most earnestly endeavoring to persuade one of the swine family to go in a certain direction, while, with equal persistence and earnestness, the pig was acting as though some pressing engagement was urgently attracting him in an entirely opposite direction. The men reasoned, coaxed, cajoled, but all to no purpose—the rope to which his pigship was attached invariably pointed in the opposite direction to the one in which he was urged to direct his footsteps. Force was used, with the same result. About the only way to reason with a pig—or a "pig-headed" man—is to adopt their own lines of argument, when, they will quickly veer around and, obeying natural instincts, oppose you still; but you gain your point, and this is just what you have been aiming for!

DEATH OF THE REV. DR. NELLES.

The Estimable Chancellor of Victoria University Passes Away.

Cobourg, Oct. 17.—At 4.30 o'clock this afternoon Rev. Dr. Nelles, Chancellor of Victoria University, died of Typhoid fever after only six days' illness. He was conscious to the last. The town and college is in deep mourning over an irreparable loss.

Samuel S. Nells, D.D., LL.D., for thirty-seven years at the head of the University of Victoria College, was a son of William and Mary Hardy Nelles, and was born at Mount Pleasant, near Brantford, Ont., Oct. 17th, 1823. His paternal ancestors were originally from Germany, and were among the early settlers in the Mohawk Valley, N.Y. In 1839 he went to Lewiston Academy, N.Y., where John G. Saxe, the poet, was his tutor.

In June, 1842, Dr. Nelles was one of the first two students matriculated at Victoria College, Cobourg. After spending two years in this institution he finished his under graduate course at the Wesleyan University, Middletown, Conn., and received the degree of B. A. in 1846. Returning to Canada Dr. Nelles was appointed to the presidency of Victoria College, and since Sept., 1850, has held that responsible position. Under his administration Victoria College has greatly prospered. The degree of D.D. was conferred upon him by Queen's University in 1860 and that of LL.D. by Victoria University in 1873.

He was held in high esteem by the educators of the province, and was loved and revered by all who knew him. As a lecturer and preacher on educational subjects he had but few peers in the Dominion.

In July, 1851, he married Miss Mary B. Wood, daughter of the Rev. Dr. Enoch Wood of Toronto. Mrs. Nelles and five children, two sons and three daughters, survived the loss of a husband and father who was uniformly kind and good. Dr. Nelles died on the anniversary of his 64th birthday. The funeral will take place at Cobourg on Wednesday afternoon.

DR. NELLES' BIRTHPLACE.

Dr. Nelles had a warm corner in his heart for the old village of Mount Pleasant, five miles from Brantford, where he was born. It is a straggling street, with old houses, and fine old trees on either side of it, running thrugh a rich and beautiful country, settled by the Nelleses, Biggars, Hardys, Ellises and Eadies seventy years ago. The Doctor would go a long piece out of his way to see a Mount Pleasant boy, and once found he would sit and talk with him, altogether unmindful of time, of the chronicles and characters of his native place.

A SON'S SAD JOURNEY.

One of the Doctor's sons arrived in town last night from the west, but not in time to catch the train for Cobourg. He had retired to bed at Thomas' hotel before the news reached the city of his father's death, and consequently had yet to learn of his and his family's bereavement.

North Grey Fall Show.

The North Grey Agricultural Society held their annual Fall Show on Tuesday and Wednesday of this week. The show of Grain, Fruit, Vegetables, Dairy Produce, Manufactures, etc., was held in the Town Hall. In grain there was not as many entries as last year, but the quality was good. There was an excellent display of Butter, both as to quantity and quality. A number of Manufantures were to the front with Furniture, Musical Instruments, Sewing Machines, Harness, etc., and also a display of Cloth and Gents Furnishings, by C. Hall, and Geo. Eberle. The show of live stock was not up to former years in the number of entries. The Horses were perhaps the best ever shown in the county. The show altogether was not a success, and some steps should be taken by the Society, and all those interested to improve our Exhibitions in the future.—Owen Sound Advertiser.

County News.

Chesley is agitating for a new town hall.

A young woman drew a revolver and deliberately shot at her seducer, during the progress of Euphrasia Township fall show a few days ago. It is to be regretted that her aim was not surer, as the earth would have been well rid of the scoundrel, who belongs to a disreputable race.

A running race arising out of the speeding contests at the Great Northern came off at the Town Park on Wednesday afternoon, between Tyson's "Grey Eagle," and Mahoney's "Black Cloud." Both are Thornbury horses. "Grey Eagle," was ridden by Tweedy, one of the best jockies in Canada, and Arthur Cameron rode "Black Cloud." The race was easily won by "Grey Eagle," in two straight heats.—Collingwood Enterprise.

Barrie, Oct. 10.—John Nixon, a farmer living about two miles south of here, was run over and instantly killed near Allandale, on Saturday night by the Hamilton express, The engineer saw him lying across the rails, but not in time to stop the train. Doctors think he fell in a fit while walking on the track, it being the nearest way home. He leaves a widow and four children.

On Thursday evening last, a regular old time chivari was got up by the "boys" on the return of Mr. Timothy Chambers and his bride—the wedding having been celebrated at Chatsworth on the previous Monday. Cow bells, gongs, saws and tin pans were brought into requisition to an extent which could not fail to rouse a responsive echo of joy in the breast of the "youthful" bridegroom, who is upwards of 75 years of age.—Owen Sound Times

Big Breeders.—An exchange says, a man by the name of Maxwell, Heathcote, has a Toulouse goose which this year has laid 26 eggs from which 41 goslings have been hatched. This can't compare with a brood sow owned by that illustrious character the Laird o' Keppel, She has in the past three years had 87 pigs, and her last litter was 27. He expects in the next three years to double the number. Bravo!—Wiarton Echo.

On Friday last Mr. Jas. H. Telfer, auditor for the Norther Railway, was in town and went for a drive with his wife and child, and Mrs. Jas. Telfer. On Sixth street, the horse went through a large hole in a culvert, and falling over broke the shafts. Mr. Telfer was very quick in jumping out and securing the animal, or the consequences might have been serious to the occupants of the rig. The horse was slightly injured. Mr. Telford very properly intends to bill our negligent and culpable Council for the costs. A Council which permits its Board of Works to keep the streets in such a disgraceful condition should be bounced by the electors, who have to pay twenty-two mills on the dollar for this sort of thing.—Collingwood Enterprise.

The morning after the show things looked rather curious to some people and especially strange to a few young sports, who thought they saw a bear meandering around in the top of a tree in Breeze's bush. Pitchforks, shotguns, carving knives, bootjack and black bottles were in active demand for a while, and fully armed and equipped the boys started out determined to kill the bear or capture the tree alive. Several halts were called on the way to the bush and the charge of the bottles closely examined and everything found satisfactory. By the time they reached the bear it had transformed itself into a revolving tree, and as revolving trees are becoming rather scarce in this part of the country they concluded to let the bear alone. The tree must have been surrepticiously removed, as it could not be found a short time after on search being made for it by a party of curiosity seekers.—Chatsworth News.

On Saturday morning last, about 2 o'clock, burglars entered the residence of Mr. E. Stonehouse, Barrister, of this town, gaining an entrance through the dining-room window. After searching down stairs and not finding anything valuable proceeded upstairs and going into his daughter's bedroom obtained Mrs. Stonehouse's gold chain and a locket. It seems Miss Stonehouse awoke and saw a figure in the room, and as Mr. and Mrs. Stonehouse had been away and returned, exclaimed, "is that you, Ma," when the man decamped, nearly tumbling while in the act of going down the stairs. They also visited a Mr. W. Hills, mason on Main street. They opened the side window where on the table was a number of flower pots and other articles, which they lifted outside, seemingly placing them very carefully on the ground for safety. In attempting to get through the window disturbed a dog inside, which on hearing the noise barked ferociously causing the burglars to make a hasty retreat and awakening the inmates, thus preventing the marauders from getting anything.—Brampton Times.

Our British Columbia Letter.

To the Editor of The Advance.

I have just returned from a week's visit to Chilliwhack. You will want to know where on earth that is. Well it is about 45 miles up the Fraser, east from New Westminster. It is a valley of level land extending about 30 miles by 10 to 15 in width, and to all appearance hemmed in by mountains of all conceivable shapes and forms. The land is exceedingly fertile, being mostly made up of a sandy sediment, left after high floods. During the high water of '82 some settlers had to be taken out, or, shall I say, rescued from the windows of their houses in canoes by Indians. Yet here they are again reaping abundant harvests.

This being the time of the Pro. Show, and held at this place, we—I mean my larger half—took boat at Port Haney and after five hours steam-boating—picking up every passenger wherever he showed himself on the river's bank—we got to the much praised Chilliwhack. In passing through the village of Centreville, some one shouted, "Webster!" Turning around—"Were you ever in Markdale—ah! why, yes, I was sure it was you; my name is Bruce—shake, old fellow!" Next we called on John Mercer, who was hammering away as busy as ever Vulcan was. We were a trifle odd on foot, as everybody was either in carriage, buggy or waggon. A turn in the road brought us face to face, and laughing all over at that. Who? Why, Wm. Hall, a former resident of the Valley near Meaford Road, and whom we knew when a child and have not seen for ten years.

"Well, well," says Willie, "I knew it was you the minute I saw you."

We stayed with him all night. He has 18 cows and a lot of young stock. He showed us a patch from which he dug a ton of potatoes and now has a fine appearance for a crop of turnips. Don't think it was over 8 square rods.

Next in order we visit our old friend, Shelton Knight. He has a fine place and some fine well-bred cows. He takes the prize for one, also first for butter, Berkshire pig, carrots and some other articles. Another night spent here. Next morning, in company with Mrs. Knight and Ebby Knight, we are driven some three miles to Fanny's place, where we meet another friendly greeting; and after a pleasant day spent here, her husband will not hear to us walking back, and takes his waggon and drives us to Shelton's, where we stay till the following morning and ride to steamboat landing. I forgot to say Wm. Hall takes first prize for a herd of young stock, and that his sister Jane is now en route for the East again.

Chilliwhack is the garden of the Province. It is well adapted for stock-raising. Root crops grow to an immense size. 3 tons of hay per acre. Land is held from $50 to $100 per acre. Some ranchers have as high as 50 head of cattle. Sheep—I have not seen a good one in the Province. Steam threshers and machinery of all kinds are in common use here.

After 5 hours tedious waiting for the boat, upon which we had return tickets, the rain—well, yes, it can rain here about as good as it does at the equator, sometimes pouring down the while. At last she came, having been delayed at Hope for cattle. Laughing now took the place of some coarser expressions, as some unlucky passengers sat down with a jerk in the soft mud in trying to descend the bank towards the gangway of the boat.

Yours truly,

J. M. Webster.

The only Evidence of Insanity.

The following experience of a Mississippi lawyer was related by himself to the writer many years ago. He said:

"I was defending a prisoner for horse-stealing, and seeing no other means of defending him, under the circumstances, I set up the plea of insanity. I argued it at length, read many extracts from works on medical jurisprudence, and had the patient attention of the court. The prosecuting attorney did not attempt to reply to my argument or controvert my authorities; I seemed to have things my own way, and whispered to the prisoner that he needn't be uneasy. Then came the judge's charge, in which he reminded the jury that there was no dispute between council as to the facts of the case. Indeed there could not have been, for several witnesses swore positively that they saw my client steal the horse. 'But,' concluded the court, 'the plea of insanity has been set up, and I charge you, gentlemen of the jury, that it should receive your very grave and serious deliberation; but I must be allowed to say, gentlemen, that for myself, upon a review of the whole case, I can discover no evidence of insanity on the part of the prisoner, except, perhaps, in the selection of his council.'"

Criticism.—A lady in Brockville states—I was induced to try Nasal Balm for a long standing cold in my head that was pronounced Catarrh. The Balm gave immediate relief and permanently cured me. It was so pleasant and agreeable to use that I at first thought it "no good." I now use it with my children for colds and stoppage of the nasal passages.

HOT TIMES IN IRELAND.

Dramatic Scene at the Trial of the Lord Mayor of Dublin.

HIS WORSHIP ACQUITTED.

The Moonlight Traitor Tells How Policeman Whelehan Was Murdered.

A last (Thursday) night's London cable says: The Irish situation remains practically unchanged. The Government and the League are in deadly grapple, but as yet it is uncertain which will win. Although Lord Salisbury, Mr. Balfour, Lord Salsbury and Lord Ashbourne are ready to go to the utmost extremities, they cannot possibly forget the restraint of public opinion. Conservatives are consoled with the reflection that hitherto the Government have done all they attempted, while the Nationalist resistance is abortive. The disappearance of Mr. Davitt and Mr. O'Brien's escape produced a bad moral effect on their followers.

A last (Thursday) night's Dublin cable says: The trial of Lord Mayor Sullivan and Mr. O'Brien, for publishing in the papers respectively controlled by them reports of meetings of suppressed branches of the National League, was opened this afternoon at the Mansion House Court. At 2.30 the Lord Mayor was driven to the court, followed by Mr. John Dillon, ex-Lord Mayors Gray and Dawson and ex-Sheriff McDonald and others. The city marshal led the civic dignitaries, who were all arrayed in the full robes of office. Mr. O'Brien joined the procession soon after it started. The streets through which it passed were thronged, and the Lord Mayor and Mr. O'Brien were the recipients of a great ovation. Policemen wandered singly through the crowds. A cordon of police surrounded the Mansion House, and prevented the crowd from approaching the court-room. There were fifty municipal officers in court. After the case had been called a warm dispute occurred between the police attendants in the court and Mr. Sexton, M. P., and High Sheriff of Dublin, arising from the desire of the latter to place the city sword and mace before the magistrate. The police attempted to prevent the placing of the city emblems on the table, whereupon Mr. Sexton and the other municipal officers seized the sword and attempted to place it there by force. The police and municipal officers struggled for possession of the sword, while the spectators in the gallery cheered Mr. Sexton and exhorted him to "Hold on." After a few minutes, both sides desisted, a compromise was effected and the sword was placed on the magistrate's bench.

Mr. O'Brien did not enter the court to answer the summons against him. The case of Mr. Sullivan was proceeded with. Mr. Carsen appeared as counsel for the Crown and Mr. Timothy Healy appeared for the defence. After hearing the evidence the Court dismissed the case on the ground that the Crown had not proved that the meeting reported in the Nation was a meeting of a suppressed branch of the National League. The spectators and the crowd outside were wildly enthusiastic over the decision. Mr. O'Brien's case will be called to-morrow.

The Counsel for the Crown has given notice of an appeal against the decision of the Court.

In the trial of moonlighters at Ennis for the murder of Constable Whelehan, Callinan, who turned State's evidence, testified as follows:

On Sunday night, about dusk, we met in a quarry. Two guns and two revolvers were brought by the Learys and were loaded in the quarry. A council was then held. Thomas Leary said that Sexton should be shot dead. He did not believe in scratches. One man shot had more effect than twenty wounded. On leaving the quarry we went through the bogs to Sexton's house. Most of the party wore handkerchiefs or white cloths over their faces. When we got to the bog near to the public road at Sexton's house, Thomas Leary told the parties to stand. He then said: "If we meet any police let nobody run away. Walk on as if we were on business, and if the police stop us let us all turn on them and mob them and kill them." Several spoke at the time. Thomas Leary and Michael Murphy were the chief spokesmen. We then got on the road. Peter Murphy was left in the field near the road, so that in case any police passed he could give the alarm. We then proceeded up the back yard to Sexton's house. I put my hand on the latch and found it bolted. I then knocked, and some one from the inside asked who was there. I said "Police," as had been previously arranged. The door was then opened. I was the first that stepped in. Thos. Leary, Daniel Leary and Murty Curtis were abreast behind me, coming in. Lalor and Hehir were behind them, and Michael Murphy was to stay in the back yard to give the alarm. Michael Murphy had a stick. The moment I entered I wheeled to the right into a bed-room. The visit of our party that night was not to be confined to the Sextons. We were to visit the house of one Callaghan, who did not live far away from Sexton's. The reason for the visit was his taking or grabbing Kelly's land. The particular reason for visiting Callaghan's was that Thomas Leary said if he was not visited that night it could not be done for a long time, as the police would be very busy in the neighborhood after Sexton was shot. Thomas Leary was inside the threshold of the door, and in the scuffle that followed I saw him let go his rifle and force his way out of the back door. I saw the police run down and several arrests were made. Peter Murphy was down in the field the last time I saw him. I had previously asked Thomas Leary to get me a stick to help me to walk through the bog. When we got to the bog where the council was held Michael Murphy said, "Give me the stick, as I have no arms and I must stay in the back yard." I then gave it to him. I would know the stick.

Mr. Lynch, for the defence, gave him a most searching cross-examination, but Callinan displayed the greatest coolness and composure and proved himself a capital witness by the clear and succinct manner in which he answered every question.

The Rev. P. D. O'Reagan, Dean of the Catholic Church at Mitchellstown, has obtained a summons against Capt. Plunkett for trespass for entering the Dean's grounds at the head of a force of police and hussars and dispersing a crowd assembled there on the occasion of the conviction of Mr. William O'Brien.

A last (Friday) night's London cable says: In a speech at Abeerystwith this evening Lord Spencer said he was satisfied that the League had nothing to do with the crime in Ireland. Referring to the trial of Lord Mayor Sullivan, he said he would not advocate a breach of the law, but in the present state of affairs he could not expect anything different on the part of the Irish people. He was convinced more strongly than ever that Ireland needed Home Rule.

A last (Friday) night's Dublin cable says: The hearing in the case of William O'Brien, who was summoned for publishing accounts of meetings of suppressed branches of the National League in United Ireland, has been adjourned pending a decision of the appeal to the Superior Court by the Crown in the case against Lord Mayor Sullivan. Mr. Healey, Mr. O'Brien's counsel, applauded the Magistrate's decision, and said the court had shown itself fair-minded in its disposition of the case. Mr. O'Brien was not present.

The work of eviction at Gweedore was finished to-day. There was no resistance or disorder.

A London cable says: The collapse of the Government's prosecution of Lord Mayor Sullivan and Mr. O'Brien involves a great deal more than mere delay in the enforcement of a single clause of the Coercion Act. Since the Dublin magistrate's decision and free construction of the clause of the Act forbidding the publication of reports of the proceedings of suppressed branches of the National League, the matter has been submitted to the Crown lawyers in England and Ireland, and their opinion thus far given supports Magistrate O'Donnell's finding, making it extremely improbable that the Government will proceed with its appeal from his decision. The discussion of the case in the Dublin court disclosed a road by which the League may drive a coach and six through the Crimes Bill. Judge O'Donnell dismissed the case against Mr. Sullivan on the ground that proof was wanting that the reports published were those of branches that had been suppressed by proclamation. The Crown Counsel pointed to the fact that this decision implied that the Government, in the event of subsequent charges of illegal publication, must prove that the meetings whose proceedings were published were really meetings of suppressed branches of the League, and that the persons present at such meetings were really members of those branches. This construction, he contended, was tantamount to permanently disabling the prosecution, unless the charges could be supported by the admission of incriminated parties, and further than this it would be impossible under such interpretation of the Act to obtain the evidence required to convict. The position, therefore, is that if the decision of the court holds good, not only will press prosecutions be futile, but the Government will have great difficulty in proving that meetings of suppressed branches are illegal.

The Scotland Yard officials profess to have received information to the effect that a number of American Fenians are contemplating a series of dynamite outrages in Ireland and England. Returning ships at both Queenstown and Liverpool are closely watched, and a sharp watch is kept upon the American Fenians by trusted agents in New York. All the special police precautions that were in use during the troublous times of 1881 and 1882 have been revived for Mr. Balfour's protection.

At Ennis yesterday the prisoners under examination for complicity in the murder of Constable Whelihan were, on the testimony of Callinan, the approver, committed for trial. Bail was refused. The populace cheered the prisoners as they were led to jail

The summons obtained by the Rev. P. D. O'Reagan, Dean of the Catholic Church at Mitchellstown, against Captain Plunkett for trespass for entering the Dean's grounds and dispersing a crowd which had assembled there on the occasion of the trial of William O'Brien, has been dismissed by the magistrate on the ground of irregularity.

A League mass meeting was held at Longford to-day. During the proceedings the platform collapsed and a Government reporter was injured. Mr. T. M. Healy, M. P., chaffed the reporter on his first trial of a plank bed. Continuing, Mr. Healy said that there would soon be no landlords left in Ireland. He would deal with the landlords in securing their rights as he would in driving rats from a haystack. The landlords were more bothered by the Plan of Campaign than they were by the killing of bailiffs. The deadliest place to hit them was their pockets. He hoped that the mortgages of Lord Granard would not leave him a brass farthing to bless himself with. The Irish were strong enough to subdue the paltry Loyalist crew.

IT READS LIKE A FAIRY TALE.

An Atlanta despatch says: A pretty little romance has just reached an interesting culmination in Rabun county. At the base of the Tiger Mountain, half a mile off the main road leading to Clayton, resides a sober old farmer named Geo. W. Dillard, who has a wife and two sons. Early last summer Mr. Dillard received a letter from his wife's brother, whom he had not seen since 1849. At that time James McCurrie was a young man, as was also George W. Dillard. The news had reached Georgia of the wonderful gold discoveries in California. Among those who were full of the excitement were McCurrie and Dillard. They had perfected all arrangements for going thither, and were bidding the family good-bye when Dillard faltered. The tearful eyes of McCurrie's young sister touched his heart, especially as she was weeping for him and not for her brother. Throwing down his bundle, he declared that he would stay if the girl would marry him. To this she cheerfully agreed, so Dillard remained a Georgia farmer, while McCurrie jumped into the stage coach and was borne away. Since that time he has never been heard of.

It was with mingled feelings, therefore, that Dillard read the letter from his old comrade. McCurrie stated that he had worked against adverse fortune, declining to write to the folks at home until he could strike it rich, but every year found him growing poorer, and now old, feeble and poor, his great wish was to look once more upon his native hills. That he could not do so unless he was sent money enough upon which to return. Mr. Dillard read the letter to his wife and sons.

"We must send him the money," said the old man. So a cow and a mule were sacrificed and the money went on its mission across the continent. Several weeks' time brought another letter, in which the old man expressed his gratefulness for the kindness done him, but he was too ill to undertake the journey. After that no more was heard from him.

On Monday Dillard received a letter which recited that James McCurrie was dead; that he wished to test the fidelity of his sister's family; that their prompt response to his appeal had moved him, and that by his will his property in California, valued at $1,600,000, was willed in equal parts to his sister, her husband and their two sons.

The two young men passed through Atlanta to-night en route for California to take possession of the property, which they hope to shortly convert into cash, when they will return.

Detroit's Little Tragedy of Love.

A Detroit despatch says: Hiram Corliss, foreman of the trimmers who look after the street lamps, sustained a fatal shock while working on the crosstrees of an electric-light pole in front of the opera house last night. The network of wires caught him as he fell, and for nearly ten minutes he hung suspended in the air while a great crowd gathered below. When finally he was rescued there was a faint spark of life, but five minutes later he was dead.

"Who is it?" asked a girl, as the body was being removed to the undertaker's. A bystander told her. The girl broke into a fit of hysterical weeping and fell to the sidewalk. It was Emma Cook, who was Corliss' fiancee.

In a sandpit near Omaha two enormous teeth have been dug up. The naturalist who tells the story of their discovery says that they must have belonged to some animal that was at least "six times as large as the modern elephant," and that ate timber as a steady diet. Maybe the existence of such an animal accounts for the vast prairies of the west, and that he starved to death when the supply of timber gave out.

In the Frigid North.—They have a cold time of it in Arthur, according to the Enterprise, which this week has the following: "Perhaps somebody will call us an able-bodied prevaricator when we assert that the frost on Sunday night last was severe enough to burst iron pipes. It is a fact, however, that the pipes of two threshing engines were burst by the water in them becoming congealed."

An apple tree on the farm of Capt. T J. Williamson, in Pleasants county, Va., which has borne fruit for a number of years, has never been known to blossom. This year the tree is again full of fine large apples, the strangest thing about which is that the fruit has neither core nor seed.

HOW SHE HID HER MORPHINE VICE.

A School Girl with a Deceptive Pen and an Ink Bottle that Held the Drug.

A Philadelphia despatch says: The ingenuity of morphine victims to hide their vice has never been better illustrated than in the case of a young girl at a fashionable young ladies' boarding-school near this city, who has just been taken away by her parents. She said she learned to use morphine from a young married woman, well known in society in New York, whom she met at a watering place last summer.

The disclosure came about accidentally. When the young student returned to the school this fall she had periods of deep despondency, and often asked the privillege of going to the room in the seminary set apart as a hospital. There she would lie for a day at a time, only rousing herself when any one approached the table, on which stood an ink bottle and a stylographic pen. The nurse having occasion to send a message to the doctor attempted to write with this pen, the young girl at that time being asleep. The pen not only refused to write, but the practised eye of the nurse instantly recognized in the point the puncturing needle of a hypodermic syringe. This led to an examination of the ink bottle. It was a four-ounce bottle, but there was no ink in it. It was painted black on the outside, and contained Magendie's solution of morphia, enough for 128 one-half grain doses, or sufficient to last until the Christmas holidays. The principal of the school was summoned immediately and the sleeping girl's arm bared. It was punctured from the shoulder almost to the hand, and the livid blue marks confirmed the suspicion which was changed to absolute certainty by the small abscess which had begun to form in the forearm just above the wrist. The habit had been formed about two months only, and there is a possibility that a cure can be effected.

A CHILD'S FATAL SHOT.

A Young Man Instantly Killed by an Eight-Year-Old Boy.

A Mattawa despatch says: Ernest Aspect dit Desairne, a resident of Buckingham, Quebec, was shot dead here about half-past 7 o'clock on Tuesday evening. The deceased, who was about 20 years old, was in the employ of Mrs. N. Timmins, and was sitting in the kitchen in conversation with Mrs. Sutcliffe, a fellow-servant, when an 8-year-old son of the latter picked up a double-barrelled gun which was standing in the corner of the room, one barrel of which unfortunately proved to be loaded. Pointing the weapon towards the deceased and his own mother, the child cocked both locks, pulling first one and then the other trigger, the second of which caused the discharge of the piece, lodging the whole of the heavy charge of shot in the throat of the unfortunate young man, whose death was instantaneous. Judge Doran, stipendiary magistrate and coroner for the district of Nipissing, was immediately notified, and decided that an inquest was unnecessary.

Animals as Doctors.

An animal suffering from chronic rheumatism always keeps, as far as possible, in the sun.

A dog, on being stung on the muzzle by a viper, was observed to plunge its head repeatedly for several days in running water. The animal eventually recovered.

When a dog has lost his appetite he eats that species of grass known as dog's grass, which acts as an emetic and purgative. Cats also eat grass. Sheep and cows, when ill, also seek out certain herbs.

Animals suffering from rheumatic fever treat themselves by the continued application of cold water, which M. Dulauney considers to be more certain than any of the other methods.

Animals get rid of their parasites by using dust, mud, clay, etc. Those suffering from fever restrict their diet, keep quiet, seek dark, airy places, drink water, and sometimes plunge into it.

The warrior ants have regularly organized ambulances. Latrelle cut the antennæ of an ant, and other ants came and covered the wounded part with a transparent fluid secreted in their little mouths.

A terrier hurt its right eye. It remained under a counter, avoided heat and light, although habitually kept close to the fire; it adopted a general treatment, rest and abstinence from food. The local treatment consisted in licking the upper surface of the paw, which it applied to the wounded eye, again licking the paw when it became dry.

Within the past 40 years numerous attempts have been made to introduce the English skylark into this country. Large numbers of the birds have been brought over and liberated at various points from Delaware to New England, but without exception the birds have disappeared at once and never been heard of again, except occasionally, after intervals of years, reports come of one being heard in some parts of the country. Abroad they flourish from the south of England to Scandinavia. Why they die in this country no one knows. Some think that they do not die, but that the country is so big that they scatter over it as soon as landed, and are swallowed up in its immensity, as it were.

NOVEL CURE FOR A CANCER.

A Connecticut Man's Life Saved by Live Toads.

The usefulness of toads has been a debated question. While the gardener has contended that the batrachian had its place as a destroyer of insects, even this has been pooh-poohed by doubting humanity, and as a medical remedy—why they have not even been dreamed of. It has remained for a Connecticut man to discover a new field of usefulness for the toad as a remedy for what has been hitherto considered incurable—the cancer.

Thomas Gladden, a resident of New Britain, Conn., tells the remarkable story of his experience. Mr. Gladden is a vender of tin, who has followed the occupation of selling from house to house for many years, and is one of the few specimens of Yankee peddler still following his profession. He is known in many towns within a radius of 25 miles from his home, where he had been a regular visitor from time to time.

About five years ago a small pimple on the left cheek of Mr. Gladden developed into a cancer. So he was informed by various reputable physicians whom he consulted. He tried various remedies without success, although some of them succeeded in staying the progress of the deadly scourge, which had increased meanwhile to a great sore which covered a good part of his face. But while the disgusting malady did not increase it did not get much better, and indeed Mr. Gladden was told that he might eventually lose his life. It was very painful at times. Finally, a neighbor suggested a new remedy—live toads. W. S. Campbell was the neighbor. Campbell looks like a man who might suggest a remedy of that nature. He gives the idea of being a man whose ablutions are not of ever-recurring frequency. Nevertheless, it is said that there are a good many things in his head that other mortals have not dreamed of in their philosophy! He studied medicine years ago, but has not practiced.

"Toads will cure it," was the constant refrain of Mr. Campbell, who called often on his neighbor. Finally Mr. Gladden, who resented the theory at first, was prevailed upon to try it. He thought it would not kill him at any rate, and the cancer was sure to do that in time. So the neighborhood was scoured for toads. The neighbors were called into service. They captured them by the dozen. Big fat fellows were at a premium. When they had a large number of them penned up operations commenced. This is the way it was done: The legs of the toads were secured to prevent scratching and he was laid on the centre of the sore. The operation was painful. The sufferer could feel every breath. The toad lived for several hours. The first first dozen who were applied lived perhaps for five. When they had absorbed a certain quantity of poison they would cease to breathe. This process went on for several days until over twenty toads were used. The last one was not visibly affected.

The neighbors watched the case with great interest, and it was a constant theme of conversation in the vicinity. Many will bear witness to the efficacy of the remedy and the truth of the facts above stated. As for Mr. Campbell, he shuffles about in great glee, and will talk by the hour to any one who will hear him discant upon the case. Mr. Gladden was seen yesterday upon his waggon, looking apparently well. He is a man 50 years of age, and, while he has always been a hard worker, has been a man of good habits. The first appearance of the cancer was 25 years ago, but it did not develop until within a few years. It now seems entirely cured, and Mr. Gladden bids fair to enjoy many years. For the present, however, there is a scarcity of toads in the vicinity of South Main street, New Britain.

SPORTS AND A STEER.

Duncan C. Ross and Other Sports Arrested at St. Thomas.

A St. Thomas despatch says: Duncan C. Ross, the world-renowned athlete, together with Robert Wood, the famous cowboy, were arrested here yesterday afternoon. Ross, Wood, Prof. Reid and other noted sports were billed to appear in the Roller Rink yesterday evening in a grand mounted sword contest, cowboy specialties, etc. Yesterday afternoon Ross and Wood procured a steer from Mr. D. McIntosh, drover, for the purpose of advertising their show on the street. After running the steer in a shameful manner and throwing it a number of times by means of a lasso, they finally allowed it to stray away. Mr. McIntosh, on hearing the state of affairs, immediately swore out a warrant, on which they were arrested about 4.30 p.m. They were subsequently liberated on bail, but will appear at the Police Court this morning.

Penalty of the Lash.

A Montreal despatch says: For the fourth time in the criminal record of this city the lash is to be administered at Montreal jail next Thursday upon the person of Damore Desormier, an alleged Catholic clergyman, who recently attempted to assault a young girl of St. Martin. The cat-o'-nine-tails has been applied on three convicts within the last twenty-five years. On the 25th of October, 1875, an Italian named Catabria received thirty-five lashes for indecent assault on a girl under the age of 12 years. The punishment took such an effect upon his physical and moral system that, when he died within a short time afterwards, his death was generally ascribed to the lash. The next one subjected to that punishment was J. Bte. Dubois, who received twenty lashes in August, 1883, without flinching, but when the last stroke had fallen sank to the ground insensible, and awoke to consciousness a maniac. On September 28th, 1883, Ferdinand Verronneau received twenty lashes for rape. He was the only one who seemed able to bear the severe punishment.

After the ceremony the Prince is to go to Port Eliot, where he will be the guest of Lord and Lady St. Germans till Friday afternoon, when he is to return to London on his way to Sandringham.

Perhaps people would not indulge in these silly, ignorant speculations as to the marriage between one of the Prince of Wales' daughters and the Czarewitch, or one between Prince Albert Victor and one of the daughters of the Emperor of Russia, if they were aware, first, that the Czarewitch, who is now 19, is so weak both in body and mind that there can be no question of his marriage with anybody; second, that the second son, the Grand Duke George, is only 16; third, that the Grand Duchess Xenia is in her 13th year. Russia has benefitted so much during the last sixty years by her family friendship with Prussia that one cannot doubt that in due time the Emperor Alexander will endeavor to strengthen the bonds which unite him with Berlin by another alliance with the Hohenzollerns. He would gain absolutely nothing by increasing his connection with England.

As they recited their past experience each to the other a mutual affection sprang up, resulting in a marriage certificate being purchased, and in an hour from their first meeting Rev. Dr. Archibald, of Knox Church, had made them one. They took rooms at the City Hotel, where they remained till Monday morning, when Hearn induced his wife to raise $5 on her jewellery at a second-hand store, and securing her trunks under pretence of taking them to the station preparatory to moving to Sarnia, decamped. Lizzie's father, who is a street preacher from London, Eng., is well-known in St. Thomas, where he has spent the summer, and but a few days since left for Whitby, where his other daughters, who are most respectable young women, reside. A SCENE IN CHURCH.

Emma Abbott, the Actress, Defends Her Profession.

A Nashville, Tenn., despatch says: McKendree Church, the leading M. E. Church of this city, was the scene of a sensation today. The pastor, the Rev. W. A. Chandler delivered a very severe and bitter sermon on the subject of the theatre. Miss Emma Abbott occupied a seat in the rear of the church, and at the conclusion of the sermon arose and in a short speech entered a protest against the very general character of the pastor's denunciation. It produced the greatest sensation and has since been the one source of conversation in the parlors, in family circle, upon the streets and in the public places. Many members of the church uphold the pastor, but many others commend the course of Miss Abbott. Her appearance showed much suppressed indignation, but her words were very clear and distinct and were heard by all present. She declared the minister's charges unfounded and said that her life was as free from blame as that of any living woman. In all the operas of the past week to which the minister referred there was no impure or improper thought. The great lights of the stage, such as Jenny Lind, Modjeska, Albani and countless others had been good women, model wives and mothers. She defied any one to say that aught had ever been said against the fair fame of Emma Abbott. There was considerable applause at the conclusion of her remarks. Before it subsided, Mr. Chandler answered that he could not answer the lady because she was a lady.

"Never marry a widower," was the advice of a young matron to a friend.

—The life of Dr. Morley Punshon, which is to be published shortly in England, will be brought out at so high a price (12s. 6d. sterling) that it is probable no special Canadian edition will be issued. The details as to Dr. Punshon's life in Canada were supplied by Dr. Reyner, his son-in law. Efforts were made by several Canadian publishing houses to arrange for a cheaper special edition for Canada, but without success.

A Parliamentary return just published shows a further adoption of continuous brakes on British railways. Of the ten different kinds of brakes in use only four meet the Board of Trade requirements. Of these 52 per cent. are fitted to the engines and 54 per cent. to carriages and other vehicles. Of the brakes not complying with the Board of Trade condition 40 per cent. are applied to the engines and 32 per cent. to carriages and other vehicles. At the present rate of progress, by June of next year, every kind of railway rolling stock will be provided with some sort of continuous brake.

JAILED FOR LIFE.

A last (Wednesday) night's Chatham despatch says: At the Assizes here to-day George Hewell (colored) was tried on the charge of criminal assault on Mrs. McLean. The evidence on the part of the Crown showed that a most atrocious crime had been committed. Mrs. McLean is a very delicate young woman, the wife of a respectable farmer, and had been recently confined at the time of the offence. The perpetrator of the outrage called at her house, she being alone, and asked her for a drink and a piece of soap. She complied with his request, and as she took the cup from him he rushed upon her, choked her and threw her upon the floor, where a desperate struggle ensued. He flourished a knife and threatened to kill her if she screamed. After a lengthy struggle, her clothes being torn, her breasts bleeding and her eyes blackened, the villain accomplished his purpose, she being then in a semi-unconscious condition. He took her by the shoulders and placed her in a chair, threatening her life if she gave the alarm. She identified the prisoner as being the person. Other witnesses proved that he was in the neighborhood of McLean's house. The prisoner was undefended, and his defence was that he was not the person who committed the offence. The jury after retiring ten minutes returned with a verdict of guilty. His Lordship, in sentencing the prisoner, dwelt upon the heinous character of the crime. He sentenced him to imprisonment for life in the Kingston Penitentiary. The prisoner is a hard-looking character, and it is said hails from Alabama, where he claims he was connected with some travelling show. The prisoner did not evince much emotion when being sentenced, though it was seen he was much surprised at the summary way in which Canadians get rid of monsters whose conduct renders them unfit to be at large. The sentence was a just one, and it was with difficulty the constables kept the large audience in court from expressing their approval of it in a decided manner. Mr. Lister acted for the Crown.

He Didn't Get Away.

"You never drink or smoke, do you, George, dear?" she said. "You know I could never marry a man who drinks and smokes." George, in a broken-hearted tone of voice, admitted that he did smoke and drink a little and turned to go. But a pair of white 27-year-old arms were about his neck in a moment. "Never mind, George," said the girl; "perhaps my wifely influence will induce you to give them up."

Got His Money's Worth.

"Where did you go this summer?" asked one business man of another.

"We boarded in the country."

"Expensive?"

"Not very. We got a good deal for our money. My wife got the malaria and I got the rheumatism. My boy Jimmy got his leg broke and little Mamie got poisoned with ivy. And all we paid was $10 a week apiece."

King Mivanga, who is still fighting the tribes inhabiting the country south of the Albert Nyanza, sent messengers to Emin Bey to obtain information regarding the expedition. One squad will go to the southern shore of the Albert Nyanza and the other to Mhagi, a military post which Emin Bey established at about the middle of the west shore of the lake.

Two hundred of the poor, homeless, unemployed persons who sleep at night in Trafalgar square, London, yesterday paraded in a body through the principal streets in the West End. They carried a black banner, bearing in white letters the inscription: "We will have work or bread." A large force of police, mounted and on foot, accompanied the procession, which eventually returned to Trafalgar square, and with the followers attracted held a meeting. The orators described the hardships of those whose only resting place in London at night is in a public square and declared that the only means they had of drawing the attention of the public to their condition was by such demonstrations as they had just made. The meeting adopted a resolution to reassemble in the same place next Monday, and to continue to parade daily until relief is afforded.

A terrible accident occurred at Rencoke's mines at Dillonville on Saturday evening resulting in the instant killing of one man, three others being fatally and twelve seriously hurt. In this instance the blast had been premature, and a number of mines were in close proximity to the explosion, not fewer than sixty men being in the mine at the time.

GONE HOME!

A Veteran Christian Woman joins the Great Majority.

Death of Mrs. Wm. Rutledge, sr.

On Thursday last, about midnight, Mrs. Wm. Rutledge, sr.—a veteran Christian woman and one of the first settlers of Artemesia—passed quietly away to the other world. Full of years, universally esteemed and respected in life, and in death, her loss to religious and other circles as deeply and universally regretted, deceased could have left no better heritage to her aged husband and grown up children and grand-children if she had possessed untold worldly wealth. She had been in poor health many months and suffered much, but she never was known to express regret or repine at her lot. Last winter it was thought she would die, and several times since her physician, Dr. Christoe, thought she could not possibly live beyond a certain time. Wonderful to relate, she has been living for nearly a year since all hope of her existing in this life beyond a few short hours at most, was abandoned. In the interval many of her neighbors who stood beside what they believed was her death-bed, have themselves passed on before her into the land of sunshine. What we call death comes just as surely to the young as to the aged—none can escape the deep sleep which shuts out the mortal and reveals the immortal.

Deceased was what might be termed a stalwart Christian. There were, there are, few who have reached the same plane of religious experience. A calm, firm, honest, every-day Christian was she. Every act of her life bore the impress of heaven. She had nothing but good to say of those with whom she came in contact. She never soiled her lips with the breath of slander or idle gossip. The Editor recalls an incident in point. An individual was once referring in disparaging terms to a certain neighbor. Deceased, who was standing by, placed her hand on the shoulder of the speaker and remarked in her kindliest tones :— "Ah, dearie, dearie, who of the best is without fault and blameless?" And it was ever thus she turned aside the heedless jest or the thoughtless or malicious slander. Her unaffected piety, noble example and good life have led more to become useful citizens and true Christians than thousands of sermons abounding in well rounded periods and elegantly worded sentences. After all good example is the greatest of teachers. Write the single word failure after the name of the man or woman whose teaching and example are at variance with each other.

The funeral took place on Sunday last, the cortege leaving the house shortly after one o'clock in the afternoon. There was an unusually large attendance of sympathizing friends and sorrowing relatives. The coffin was borne into the Methodist church. In a short time that edifice was filled to overflowing, when the occasion was improved by Rev. Mr. Shilton, who preached one of the grandest and most truly eloquent sermons ever heard within the walls of that church, from the words of Paul to Timothy, "I have fought the good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith," &c. The speaker's words were full of power and pervaded by a deep religious fervor, such as can only come from good and honest hearts. In glowing words he briefly sketched the chief events in the life of the brilliant and scholarly Apostle from the time when the light from heaven shone on him until he came down to the end of the journey. Now a graphic word picture follows and we see venerable, gray-headed stout-hearted Paul immured in the lowest depths of a Roman Bastile, calmly awaiting the time when his head will be placed under the dreadful block. Even at this dark hour, humanly speaking, Paul calmly writes that beautiful letter to Timothy, from which the text is taken, and faces real death with the same unflinching courage and devotion to the cause of his Master he has exhibited many times in the past when apparent death stared him in the face. Now the speaker with kindling eye and with tremendous force and earnestness denounces the great evils of the present day; next moment he draws a beautiful and correct picture of a true Christian, and dwells with cheerful hopefulness on the immortality of the soul, showing that those who lead good lives and walk in the footsteps of Christ are blessed in this life as well as in that beyond, while those who disregard God's laws are cut off from both. Paul did not evidently expect to lie unconscious in the tomb for an indefinite length of time before securing the "crown of righteousness" laid up for him by his Maker. When his course was finished he expected to pass at once into the new life. He had "kept the faith"—not for a day, or a week or a month simply, but from the beginning of his religious career to that moment. "I have heard many people get up to speak in class meeting," said the speaker, "who might have had the grace of God in their hearts forty years ago but they were not in possession of it, he feared, at that moment. I very much fear that many go down to spiritual death from within the very pale of the church! God forbid that such a fate should happen any one present!" Paul was a steadfast every day Christian from first to last—never once wavering in his allegiance to the "King of Kings and Lord of lords." "Many of you," said the speaker with great earnestness, "are never seen within the walls of a church except on such occasions as this, when you come to the house of the Lord as a token of respect for the dead. I am glad you are hear, so that I may speak to you plainly and warn you of the danger of the course you are pursuing." If you can make it a point to attend this sacred place out of respect for an earthly friend how much the more should you attend it on account of the Great Giver of all good, whose merciful dealings toward you have been greater than you have deserved? May God help you to lay these things to heart and prepare for the great future which stretches out beyond the short span of life's horizon.

The remains of deceased were conveyed from the church to Flesherton cemetery and lowered to their last resting place in presence of a large concourse of people. The last sad rites were performed by Rev. Mr. Shilton in a solemn and impressive manner.

NOTE.—Deceased was born in Ireland, was a life long member of the Methodist church, and had resided in Artemesia over thirty years.]

Meaford Road.

From our own Correspondent.

Our new saw mill is in operation again. We have a new industry started here in the butchering line. Messrs. Warling and Gilbert are the proprietors.

The latest excitement here was a couple of runaways last week. As Mr. Shields, cattle buyer, and Messrs. R. Buchanan and J. Weber were driving up to Mr. Buchanan's barn to look at some cattle, the horse got frightened at a steam thresher that was at work in the barn and made a sudden bolt—starting off at a furious rate and throwing Mr. Shields out of the rig. After running some distance the horse just as suddenly came to a full stop, when the other occupants of the buggy very quietly descended, nothing the worse for their ride.

The same evening, as Mr. J. Holly was leisurely driving along the Meaford Road his horse made a sudden bolt, throwing Mr. Holly out and his feet getting caught in the lines brought the horse and rig around on a very sharp curve. A little fright was the only harm done.

We have had a trial of both steam and horse-power threshing machines here last week, Messrs. T. Ross and G. Hutchinson being on the war-path.

A Matter-of-Fact Message.

A neighbor being dangerously ill, a lady one morning sent her new maid over to inquire concerning her condition

"Go over," she said, "and inquire how Mrs. X. is this morning. And if she is dead" she added, as the girl started, "ask when the funeral is to be."

The messenger went as directed, and soon returned with the air of one who has done her whole duty.

"Mrs. X. is better this morning," was her report, "and they cannot tell when the funeral will be."

MIND YOUR OWN BUSINESS.—Now can any one properly mind their own business or any other persons if they have spent a wretched night of tossing on a hard or otherwise uncomfortable bed? There are lots of people simply wearing themselves out for want of proper rest. You see them in every walk in life, meet them at every corner and in every store. Men and women prematurely old, who ought to be hearty and strong—in fact just in their prime—a slight accident or sickness over-takes them and for want of vital force and energy, they easily become victims. All this could be easily overcome by calling at J. E. Moore's Flesherton Furniture Warerooms and purchasing one of those cheap Spring Beds.

Plowing Match.

The second annual plowing match under the auspices of Artemesia Agricultural Society was held on the farm of Robt. Oliver, Esq., on Thursday, 20th inst. The weather was fine and the turnout of spectators large. The competitors was not as great as could be desired for there were good prizes offered. For boys under 18 years of age there were no competitors. This is to be regretted as it is to the young we have to look for our future agriculturists. The following are the names of the prize winners: Class I., F. Cairns, E. Lomas, H. King. Class II., J. Oliver, J. Chard, N. McLean. The judges were W. Nichols, H. Arquitt, and W. Smiley.

Inistioge.

The weather is becoming cold and winter is apparently coming on at an early date.

Threshing is about wound up and some of the farmers have had to build new granaries.

Quite a number of people here have been on the sick list, but are recovering.

The Sons of Temperance gave an entertainment here on the 6th inst., which was a very pleasant affair. The order has a membership of about 60 and if the Scott Act is voted on in this county we think Inistioge will be in favor of prohibition.

Mr. P. Sander has moved unto Mrs. Millsap's farm, that lady having gone to Priceville to live.

Mr. T. Reid is building a new house.

Mr. J. Moore, of Hamilton, is visiting at Mr. S. Wakeley's.

Mr. W. Taylor saw a bear crossing the townline between Melancthon and Artemesia last week.

The echoes of Inistioge are:

Who stole the oil can from the church?

Who lost the pair of No. 9 half-soles on the side road last Sunday night?

And that some of our bachelors have a grave appearance recently.

Just arrived at R. Trimble's, Flesherton, a magnificent stock of Rubbers, Overshoes and Mens Felt Boots—best value in town.

The Sidwalks.

To the Editor of The Advance.

Dear Sir,—As the winter is drawing on apace, something ought to be done in connection with our sidewalks. Couldn't the Council pass a By-Law compelling each citizen or owner of lots to keep the sidewalk shoveled off during the winter months? As a rule, our sidewalks "go into winter quarters" under great banks of snow. This is too bad. It would be very easy for each citizen to keep them clean opposite his own lot and thereby save a great deal of inconvenience to the travelling public. What say our townspeople? Can't something be done? If so, then get it into working order before winter, and not have people of necessity take to the middle of the road.

Respectfully yours,
PLUNKY.

Flesherton, May 30th, 1887.

A Scene in Church.

Bess went to church one sultry day,
She kept awake, I'm glad to say,
Till "fourthly" started on its way.

Then the moments into hours grew;
Oh dear! oh dear! what should she do?
Unseen, she glided from the pew,

And up the aisle demurely went,
On some absorbing mission bent,
Her eyes filled with a look intent.

She stopped and said, in plaintive tone,
With hand uplifted toward the dome,
"Please, preacher-man, can I go home?

The treble voice, bell-like in sound,
Disturbed a sermon most profound,
A titter swelled as it went round.

A smile the pastor's face o'erspread—
He paused and bent his stately head;
"Yes, little dear," he gently said.

Smiles.

But give me smiles," the maiden said,
"I like not tears and sobs and sighs;
They silence all life's melodies,
And veil God's sunshine from our eyes;
Smiles wake the soul to love divine,
And make the heart leap like old wine."

"Aye, smiles are best," the matron said,
"My children love them more than toys;
They are the manna of the days
To all my romping girls and boys.
And when with sweet words they are given,
They blessing straightway bring from heaven."

Then though you have naught else to give,
Pray give the world a smiling face;
It will forgive your gravest faults
For this one happy act of grace.
It needs no head with world-lore wise
To sunshine make with lips and eyes.

SIR HUGH'S LOVES.

Crystal did not answer; perhaps she could not. He was coming up to London, actually to Belgrave House, and on this very evening. Erle must have got scent of her secret—how or in what manner she could not guess; but all the same, it must be Erle who had betrayed her. She had thought him a little odd and constrained the last few times she had seen him; she had noticed more than once that his eyes had been fixed thoughtfully on her face as though he had been watching her, and he had seemed somewhat confused when he had found himself detected. What did it all mean? but never mind that now. Raby would be coming to Beulah Place, but she would be hundreds of miles away before that; she was safe, quite safe; but if only she could see him before she went. If she could only get rid of this tiresome Percy, who would stay, perhaps, for hours. Could she give him the slip? She could never remain in his company through a long evening; it would drive her frantic to listen to him, and to know all the time that Raby was near, and she could not see him. And then all at once a wild idea came to her, and her pale cheeks flushed, and her eyes grew bright, and she began to talk rather quickly and in an excited manner.

"Oh! do you know, Mr. Trafford," she said, gravely, "I think it is very wrong of you to encourage Mr. Erle to come so often to Beulah Place. Fern is pretty—very pretty, and Mr. Erle is fond of saying pleasant things to her, and all the time he knows Mr. Huntington wishes him to marry Miss Selby. He has no right to make himself so agreeable to your sister; and I think you ought to keep him in better order."

"Oh! I don't pretend to be Erle's mentor," he returned, a little sulkily; for he thought he saw her drift to keep him from talking of his own feelings. "I never interfere with other fellows."

"Yes, but Fern is your sister," in a reproachful voice; "and I do think you are to blame in this. Why do you not tell him that he must leave your sister alone, and keep to Miss Selby. Your grandfather would be very angry if he knew of these visits to Beulah Place, and then Mr. Erle would get into trouble."

"I can't help that," was the indifferent answer. "Erle must take his chance with the rest of us; he knows as well as I do the risk he runs." And in spite of her preoccupation, Crystal noticed a curious change in Percy's tone.

"Do you mean that he would get into serious trouble? is that what you would imply? I do not think you are doing your duty, Mr. Trafford, if you do not warn him of Mr. Huntington's displeasure. Mr. Erle is weak, he is easily guided, but he has good principles; you could soon induce him to break off his visits."

"I don't see that I need trouble myself about another fellow's love affair; I have too much in my own mind. Of course you look impatient, Miss Davenport, it is a crime to speak of my own feelings; but how can you expect me to take interest in another fellow when I am so utterly miserable myself?"

"Mr. Trafford," she said, trying to control her impatience, "I wish you would let me speak to you for once, as though I were your friend," she would have substituted the word sister, but she feared to provoke one of his outbursts of indignant pleading.

"You know you may say what you like to me," he returned moved by the gentleness of her speech, for she had never been so gracious to him before. "You have more influence over me than any one else in the world. If you could make me a better man, Miss Davenport."

"I would give much to do it," she answered in a low voice that thrilled him strangely. "Mr. Trafford, you will be angry with me if I speak to you very frankly, and earnestly—as earnestly," here she paused, "as though we were bidding each other good-bye to-night for a long time."

"If you will call me Percy," he replied, with sudden vehemence, "you shall say what you like to me."

"Very well," she answered, with a faint smile at his boyish insistance, "it shall be Percy then—no, do not interrupt me," as he seemed about to speak. "I am very troubled and unhappy about Mr. Erle's visits; they are doing harm to Fern, and I must tell you, once for all, that you are not doing your duty either to your sister or cousin."

"Erle again," he muttered moodily.

"Yes, because the matter lies very close to my heart, for I dearly love your sister. Mr. Trafford—Percy, I mean—you have youth, health, talents—the whole world lies before you; why do you envy your cousin, because he is likely to be a richer man than you?"

"He has robbed me of my rightful inheritance," was the moody answer.

"It could never be yours," she returned, quickly; "a Trafford will never be Mr. Huntington's heir."

"I would change my name."

"That would avail you little," with a touch of her old scorn, for the speech displeased her. "Mr. Hundindgon would never leave his money to the son of the man he hated, and of the daughter whose disobedience embittered his life. Mr. Erle has to answer for no sins but his own."

"He had better be careful though," was the quick response.

"What, have you done him mischief already? Why—why are you not more generous to the poor boy? Why do you encourage these visits that you know will anger Mr. Huntingdon? Why do you tempt him from his duty? Percy, I implore you to be true to yourself and him. Look into your own heart and see if you are acting an honorable part."

"You are always hard on me," he returned, sullenly. "Who has been blackening my name to you?"

"No one, no one," she answered, quickly; "but you are a reckless talker, and I have gathered much from my own observation. You have told me more than once that you are in debt; sometimes I fear you gamble. Oh!" as a dark flush mounted to his forehead, "I should be grieved to think that this is true."

"You would hate me all the more, I suppose," in a defiant voice.

"Indeed I do not hate you, my poor poy; but you make me very angry sometimes. Do you know me so little as to think I could ever bring myself to love a gambler, or one who tried to rob another of his inheritance—one who was so afraid of poverty that he deserted his mother for the loaves and fishes of the man who was her worst enemy."

"The old story," in a despairing voice; "will you never give me the benefit of an excuse—will you never allow me to defend myself?"

"I am not your judge," was the cold reply; and then, as she saw the misery of his face, she relented. "Indeed it is not too late to retrieve the past. If you have debts, if you are in trouble, own it frankly to your grandfather."

"And be turned out of the house a beggar?"

"What of that" she replied, cheerfully; "you have a profession; every one says how clever you are—what a splendid barrister you will make. You can take pupils; success and money will come to you in time."

"Too late," he muttered; "I cannot free myself." Then, with a sudden change of tone, "Crystal, if I do this—if I leave Belgrave House, will you give me a hope of winning you in the future?"

She shook her head; "I cannot give you that hope."

"Why not?" he demanded, fiercely.

"Because I belong to another," she answered, slowly, and there came a wonderful light in her eyes; "and for his sake I will live as I am to my life's end."

They had reached Beulah Place by this time, and Mrs. Watkins' shop was in sight. There were few passers-by, so no one noticed why Percy stood still and seized his companion's hands.

"You love another man? You dare to tell me this?"

"I tell you this for your own good, and that you may never speak to me again as you have done. You must not be angry with me for telling you the truth; and now will you ring the bell, for there is no need to go through the shop?"

"I am not coming in," he said hoarsely. I cannot trust myself."

"Then we will say good-bye here," was the quiet answer, and she pressed his hands kindly. "Forgive me if I have made you unhappy, but indeed it is your fault, and I thought it better to tell you the truth. Good-bye, my poor boy;" but though her voice was full of gentleness and pity, he scarcely heard it. He had wrung her hands, almost throwing them from him and had turned away without a word.

Crystal had looked after him rather wistfully; her heart felt strangely soft to him to-night. "Was it wrong to tell him, I wonder?" she said to herself, as she quickly retraced her steps. "He is terribly reckless, one never knows how he may take things. It was good of him to listen to me so patiently; and now he has gone away sore and angry."

Crystal was walking very fast now, as though she had suddenly remembered some errand. As an empty hansom passed her she hailed it. "Will you drive me to Victoria Station," she said to the man in a business-like tone; "I want to meet the 6.30 train from Singleton. I think there is time."

"None too much," was the somewhat gruff answer, "but my horse is fresh;" and Crystal drew into a corner and tried to curb her impatience by watching the passers by; but her fear of being too late kept her restless and miserable.

As they drove into Victoria Station a handsome barouche, with a pair of fine bays, attracted Crystal's attention. The footman had got down and was making inquiries of a porter. "Singleton train just due," Crystal heard the man say, as she handed the cabman his fare; and as she quickly passed through the station, the train slowly drew up at the platform.

Only just in time! Crystal pressed eagerly forward, scanning the occupants of all the carriages until she came to the last.

There were two passengers in this compartment; a young lady, with a good-natured freckled face, was speaking to a very tall man who was standing in the centre of the carriage. "You must let me help you out," Crystal heard her say in a pleasant countryfied voice, "and wait with you until your friends find you;" and then came the answer in the deep tones Crystal knew so well.

"Thank you, you are very kind. My unfortunate infirmity gains new friends for me everywhere; so after all, you see, even blindness has its alleviations, Miss Merriman."

"Oh, I will be sure to tell papa what you say; it will be such a comfort to him. Now, will you put your hand on my shoulder—it is a deep step—take care;" but as Raby tried to follow these instructions a little gloved hand, that certainly did not belong to Miss Merriman, gently guided him and placed him in safety.

Miss Merriman nodded and smiled her thanks.

"There, you are all right now. What is the matter, Mr. Ferrers?"

"I thought some one touched me," he returned, with a puzzled look, "and you were on my other side, so I suppose it was some kind stranger."

"Yes, a young lady," as Crystal moved away rather suddenly. "Ah, there is a footman; he seems in search of some one. I will ask him if he be looking for you," and Miss Merriman darted away.

Raby stood quietly waiting, but he little knew that the girl he had come to London to seek was standing a few yards from him, trying to see him through the tears that blinded her.

Many people turned to look after the tall, striking-looking man in clerical dress. The felt hat just shaded the pale, massively cut features. He looked older, Crystal thought, and a little sadder, but the mouth was as beautiful as ever.

Once he looked up as hasty footsteps brushed him, as though he would move aside, but a girlish figure interposed between him and the loaded truck, and again the little hand guided him to safety.

"It is all right—the man says he is waiting for Mr. Ferrers," observed Miss Merriman briskly at this moment. "What horrid things those trucks are; I was afraid one would have knocked you, only the young lady led you away."

"What! a young lady!" asked Raby, quickly.

"Oh, only a tall young lady in brown, who seemed to notice you wanted help. She has gone now—probably a passenger for the down-train."

"I think all young ladies are good to me," returned Raby with grave courtesy, holding out his hand. "I know I have met with a very kind fellow-passenger;" and then, as he took the footman's arm and entered the carriage, Miss Merriman saw the tall young lady in brown walk quickly out of the station, and as she passed her there were tears running down her cheeks.

CHAPTER XXVII.

FLUFF GOES TO SEE GRANDPAPA.

Thou, like a little curious fly
That furses through the air,
Dost pry and pry
With thy keen inquisitive eye.

. . . . . .

And with many questions, ever
Rippling like a restless river,
Puzzling many an older brain,
Dost thou hour by hour increase thy store
Of marvellous lore.
Thus a squirrel, darting deftly,
Up and down autumnal trees,
Sees its hoard of chestnuts growing swiftly
In a heap upon the leaf-strewn leas.

Claude Lake.

"And now, I look almost as smart as the Princess Dove herself."

"I really think you do, Fluff, though you remember her dress was a curious embroidery of rainbows and dewdrops sewn all over with peacocks' eyes; but I assure you I like your white frock much better; and the new hat is very pretty."

"But Fern!——"

"But Fluff!——"

"If I were to be lost—really and truly lost, you know—would the funny old town-crier tell a long story about me, as he did about the dog when we were down by the sea last summer?"

"Of course he would, and mother and I would stand and listen to him and try not to laugh. 'Lost, stolen, or strayed, a little witch-girl in a clean white frock, rather too much starched; a frilled cape that crackles when she moves, and a pretty broad-brimmed hat.' Well, Fluffy, what does that mysterious look mean? you are very rude to interrupt the old crier," and Fern tried to frown, while Fluff nodded her head sagaciously.

"It would not be stolen or lost, it would be strayed, like the sheep in the turnip-field, when the shepherd turned them all out because they had no business there. Supposing I strayed on purpose, Fern, you must send a crier covered all over with gold lace to find me."

"Indeed! have you lost your senses, Fluff?"

"Never mind the senses; I saw them all five in china in Mrs. Watkins' left hand corner cupboard, china images she called them, and I thought them so pretty. Give me the four pence half-penny for buns, Fern—one Bath, two plain, and a half-penny to the sweeper that takes me best over the crossing."

"Oh Fluff, Fluff, do be careful, and mind you do not go too far: come back soon, like a good child."

"Of course I am good on my birthday. What did they do to Ananias and Sapphira, Fern?"

"Dear me, what an odd question, Fluffy!"

"Never mind that; in the Sunday school the teacher always answers the children's questions directly; she is a very nice teacher though she has red hair, but she cannot help that."

"Oh, indeed! so I must tell you about Ananias and Sapphira. What is the matter? how pale you look, my pet. . . . . Well, they fell down dead because they had told a lie."

Fluff shifted her pence uneasily.

"That was the lie they told about the land and money that they wanted to keep themselves. I think they were greedy people, one Bath, two plain, and a half-penny for the sweeper. Here is the four-pence, Fern; I don't think I shall be hungry until tea-time. Now, good-bye, I must go."

"Why, Fluff, what nonsense! here, Fluff;" but Fluff was scutting downstairs as fast as she could go, and Fern was only in time to see her little feet whisking through the shop door.

"I don't believe there is such another child in the United Kingdom," she said to herself, laughing. "She is terribly young for her age, and so amusing; how dull it will be without her this afternoon, and poor Crystal so far away, I wish mother had not let her go, or that she were safe home again;" and Fern sighed as she looked round the empty room.

Now it so happened that Fluff had coaxed her mother to let her take a walk alone on her birthday; this was the treat she had selected for the occasion.

She was to wear her best frock and her new hat that Crystal had trimmed for her as a parting present; and she had promised to be very careful, and not go too far. The fourpence was to be expended in buns—so she and her mother had arranged, but Fluff had secretly intended to put it to another purpose, until her conscientious scruples had obliged her to leave it at home instead of paying the omnibus fare that was to save her poor little legs; they would get sorely tired before they reached their destination.

Fluff ran down several streets, till she was out of breath, and then she fell into a little trot; but first she gave the half-penny to a ragged boy, and begged him earnestly never to tell stories; and after that she asked him the way to Belgravia. Not getting a lucid answer from him, as he only told her that he had been a cripple from his birth and had sold lucifers ever since, which, being brimstone, was bad for rheumatics, Fluff told him she would have repeated the whole story of Ananias and Sapphira to him, only she had no time, and then she resumed her walk with much dignity.

And the method of it was this—if method it could be called which had in its sidelong movements the similitude of a crab. First she went into every baker's shop she passed, and, shaking her head sorrowfully at the fresh currant buns on the counters, asked in a confidential whisper the quickest and shortest way to Belgravia; and when they wished to know what part, or asked her business, she pursed up her mouth and said that was not the question, and would they please confine themselves to facts, or some such speech, in her odd abrupt way.

And she looked such a little lady as she spoke, and held her little head up so proudly, that most of them answered her with civility; and one big baker's boy, just starting on his afternoon round, said he would see her past the dangerous crossing in the next street, and put her a little on her way. Fluff said she was very much obliged to him, and trotted confidingly at his side, adapting her conversation to her hearer as she thought best, for she enlarged in a rambling way on the Miracle of the Loaves, and told him what her teacher said on the subject of the fishes; and then she became confidential, and explained to him that she bore an innocent partiality for the moist peely bits of soft crusts that one could pare off a loaf without showing a sad deficiency, and how she always liked to take in the bread at Mrs. Watkins' for the purpose; and lastly, she told him in a weary little voice that she was going to see grandpapa, who lived in a big house in Belgravia, but that she was getting very tired, for she had a bone in her leg—two bones, she thought—and might she sit please on the top of his little cart to rest her poor legs when he went into the next house?

The baker's boy was a good-natured fellow, but, as he expressed it afterwards, he thought she was the rummiest little lady he had ever met; indeed, he confided his suspicions to a grocer's lad that she "was a bit cracky;" but he let her sit on his cart for all that, and trundled her the length of two or three streets; and further he revived her drooping spirits by a dab of hot brown bread, scooped skilfully out of the side of a loaf which, as he said, would never show.

After that they got facetious, and admired a Punch and Judy show together, and parted with deep regret, when a policeman desired them to move on.

Fluff began to feel rather lonely after this. It was getting late, she was afraid, and those little legs of hers ached dreadfully; but she fell in at the park gates with a playful flower-girl, who ran a race with her, basket and all, and then stood and jeered in broad Irish because she was beaten, while Fluff sat down, sulky and exhausted, on a bench under the trees.

It was nearly tea-time now, she thought: in another hour or so Fern would be sending the old crier after her. She wondered how she was to get back. She was very thirsty, and felt half inclined to cry; and then it struck her that the large splendid-looking building opposite might be Belgrave House, and she ran up to a workman just passing and asked him.

"No," he said, eyeing her wondering, "that was not Belgrave House, it was in the next square;" and when she heard that she clapped her hands joyfully, and went and drank out of a little iron bowl in company with a sweep. She asked him if she might drink first, and he said, "Oh, laws, yes! you aint near so smutty as me," which speech Fluff took as a compliment. But she had fallen down twice, and her nice white frock had got unsightly patches of green on it.

But she felt as though her troubles were over when she stood in front of Belgrave House, its many windows shining like gold.

What a grand place it was—finer than the Crystal Ball Palace where Princess Dove and Prince Merrydew lived; and, oh dear, what joy, the door was open!

The footman had just run out to the pillar box, and another footman was fast asleep in a chair that looked like a baby's cradle turned upside down.

Fluff ran up the steps and looked in.

There was a beautiful scent of flowers as she crept timidly into the hall, such sleepy warm flowers Fluff thought, only they made her head drowsy; and there was a great staircase with carved balustrades and dark slippery stairs, and the doors were all shut, and there was not a sound in the house, except the singing of some birds. Fluff began to feel giddy.

But it was babyish to feel frightened in her own grandpapa's house, so she took courage, and passing the sleepy footman on tiptoe, crept softly up stairs, holding very tightly to the balustrades, for she felt as though she were slipping every step, and presently she came to a sunny landing-place with a conservatory, where some canaries were singing. Here she saw a half-open door, and pushed it open, and then she thought she was in fairy-land.

It was such a large beautiful room, with marble ladies standing in the corners, with wonderful green plants growing in gilded baskets, and satin couches, and lace draperies, and lovely china; and in an arm-chair a gentleman asleep, for he had his eyes shut.

Fluff stole in and looked at him; no, he was not asleep, for his eyes opened, and yet he did not seem to see her, perhaps he was thinking. His face looked very nice and kind, and with the unerring instinct of childhood she laid her hand on his knee.

"If you please, sir, will you tell me where I can find grandpapa."

The gentleman raised his eyes—as Fluff told her mother afterwards, "he looked at me without seeing me;" and then his hand closed quietly over the child's. Nothing ever seemed to startle Raby Ferrers in that strange dreamy life of his.

"Who are you' my child, and who is your grandpapa?"

"My grandpapa's name is Mr. Huntingdon, and he lives in this house—Belgrave House it is called, and I am Florence Trafford, but they call me Fluff at home."

The name aroused him effectually; ah, he was startled now. "Florence Trafford, did you say; do you mean that you live at Beulah Place in the Elysian Fields?"

"Yes, at Mrs. Watkins'—mother, and Fern, and I, and Crystal too, only she went away this morning."

"Away—what do you mean?" and Fluff's poor little hands were held so tightly that they were quite red and sore afterwards.

"Oh, she has gone to America with that horrid Miss Campion; yes, and she is horrid to take our dear Criss-crass away. Fern cried so this morning, and Crystal cried too, but she had to go, she said, so it was no use making a fuss about it; and she does not mean to come back for a long time. What is the matter?" peering uriously in his face, "does your head ache?"—for Raby had uttered a low groan, and had dropped Fluff's hands, and he was pushing back the heavy dead-brown hair as though he were suddenly oppressed.

Peach Culture.

The conditions of failure in peach-growing, concisely stated, are:

1. A wet soil, or one that from any cause holds water around the roots of the tree, whether the land is situated high or low.

2. Excessive fertility while the trees are young, whether it be secured in the natural conditions of the soil or by the ingenuity of man.

3. Severe cutting back of the young growth each year, thus dwarfing the tree and robbing it of much natural vitality.

4. Allowing the tree to overbear and thus exhaust the vitality by a single crop of fruit.

5. By deficient and improper cultivation.

On the other hand the conditions of success in peach-growing are:

1. An elevated locality that is not subject to late frosts in the spring or late frosts in the fall.

2. A warm and moderately fertile soil that is well drained by nature. Artificia drainage may prove successful, but its utility has not yet been fully demonstrated.

3. Thorough cultivation, without manure, until the trees come into bearing, then combine the two so as to supply all the depletion produced in the soil by growth of trees and fruit.

4. Never let a tree overbear.

5. Continue cultivation until the close of the dry season every summer, even if it continues until September.

A Clear Case of Predestination.

I well remember one fellow, a fine soldier, too, who scorned the burden of even a blanket on a march, and so at night, when he failed to steal one (which was seldom), he sat up by a fire and made night hideous with mock sermons of wonderful theology and doubtful morality. Strange to say, he survived the war, and is now enlisted in the army of the Lord. At Vicksburg this same preacher was responsible for a ready retort under trying circumstances. He was then a firm Calvinist, and was always ready to do battle in defence of his creed. One day he was sitting with a group in an angle of the works, discussing his favorite dogma of predestination. Just then a shell exploded among them and knocked the predestinarian over without hurting him. When he recovered his breath and legs he darted off for the shelter of a traverse just in front of us. His antagonist yelled at him and twitted him for want of faith in his own doctrine. He did not pause in the order of his going, but stuttered back: "Ca-ca-can't stop; its pre-predestination that I must get on the other side of the traverse!" and he fulfilled the decree to the letter and with commendable alacrity.—Philadelphia Times.

The Greatest Known Cold.

In his report of his mission to the Lena Delta, Lieut. William H. Schultz says: As we approached Verchoyansk (Northern Siberia), the cold was almost unbearable, compelling a stop at nearly every inhabited yourta (native hut), not only on account of ourselves, but more owing to the reindeer, which suffered visibly during the low temperatures. Fortunately these inhabited yourtas are not far apart as one approaches the village. Breathing was at times difficult, and on January 10th and 11th (1886) the temperature sank to 66° Celsius, corresponding to 86.80° Fahrenheit below zero. This is the coldest temperature ever observed, and I afterward had the satisfaction of establishing it beyond a doubt by the agreement of the thermometers at Verchoyansk, observed by exiles who were furnished with instruments by the Central Meteorological Observatory at Pavlovsk, near St. Petersburg. Verchoyansk thus maintained its reputation of being the pole of the greatest known cold, although its latitude is only 68° north.

GRAND TRUNK RAILWAY.

Sir Henry Tyler's Speech at the Half-Yearly Meeting Yesterday—The Double Tracking—St. Clair Tunnel—The C.P.R. Competition.

A London cablegram of last (Thursday) night's date says: The half-yearly meeting of the Grand Trunk was held to-day at the Cannon Street Hotel, Sir Henry Tyler presiding. There was a large attendance.

The Chairman, before moving the adoption of the report, referred to the great loss the company had sustained by the death of Sir Charles Young, one of the directors, and was sure it would be the wish of the meeting that on behalf of the directors and shareholders he should in fitting terms express their sympathy for Lady Young in her bereavement.

A GREAT IMPROVEMENT.

Reviewing the company's history for the past half year, Sir Henry said they had rapidly recovered from the disastrous effects of competition and were now making satisfactory progress. The winter of 1886-7 had been an abnormally severe one in Canada, and the competition facing them constantly was increasing; yet, so far, they had maintained and even improved their position. The results of the past half-year indicated a revival even beyond that which took place in the memorable year 1883. They had carried more passengers and a greater quantity of goods than in any previous half-year, and at the same time, despite the unusually heavy snowfall, had reduced the working expenses to 70 per cent. The effect of the Inter-State Commerce Law had not yet been fully experienced, but as far as the local Canadian traffic went they were not, of course, affected by the Act. They had lost passenger traffic to the Northwest in consequence of the competition of the Canadian Pacific, but only to a moderate extent. They had also lost some traffic from the Baltimore & Ohio line and from the Central Pacific, but had been able to make the losses good in other directions. Their Pullman cars were equal to any running in America, and much superior to those on the continental railways in Europe.

COMPETITION IN CANADA.

They had met increased competition between Montreal and Peterboro' to a greater extent than anywhere else, yet at those points they had taken more traffic in and out during the half year than ever before. They had lost Mr. Squires' hog traffic, and in the last few weeks had temporarily lost the dressed beef traffic, but he thought the quarrel would only be a lover's quarrel and that they would get the traffic back. Adding together all the receipts from their lines, they had £11,500 more than in the corresponding period last year. In the present half-year they had so far done better than in the first half, and up to the latest accounts had an increase of £16,000 in the gross receipts over the corresponding period in 1883.

THE DOUBLING OF THE LINE

between Montreal and Toronto was an important work, and would add to the safety and do away with delays and enable them properly to compete with the Canadian Pacific. It was not their intention, however, to proceed in any way so as to hamper their financial resources to the smallest degree. They hoped to carry on this great work without encumbering the resources of the company. The construction of the Montreal station had been delayed, but the directors were anxious to hurry the work on before winter. The city was now doing what it ought to have done before, namely, making a dyke to keep out the river. Negotiations were proceeding to enable the company to place their rails along the dyke. Last winter was a most extraordinary one, as he had said, and it was, therefore, all the more creditable to their officers that they had been able to reduce the working expenses to 70 per cent.

THE CANADIAN PACIFIC.

The Chairman then referred to the extensions recently made or now in progress by the Canadian Pacific, characterizing as most extraordinary the action of the Canadian Government in subsidizing that company to make a line across the State of Maine. After their past experience, the competition of the Canadian Pacific had no longer any great terrors for them; yet it required constant watchfulness, and was not to be undervalued. The discovery of gas in a heading has interfered with the construction of the St. Clair tunnel. The main tunnel is now about to be commenced. The probable cost will be half a million pounds, but he was confident the tunnel would be a saving and not a burden on the company's resources. The result of an arrangement with the Atcheson, Topeka & Santa Fe Company at Chicago would be that the Grand Trunk would benefit £17,400 yearly, the route to San Francisco being 3,357 miles, compared with 3,538 miles by the Canadian Pacific. The object of the Grand Trunk Act, which the meeting was now asked to confirm, was simply to save £6,000 yearly by purchasing, for redemption, prior securities bearing a higher rate of interest than the 4 per cent. debenture stock. This Act and previous powers for the conversion of securities would enable them to save altogether £115,000 yearly. Although they were going to spend money liberally, he believed he could promise they would have to pay no more interest on preference charges on the 31st of December next than they did on the same date last year. He moved the adoption of the report.

Mr. Robert Young seconded the motion.

Mr. Landon criticized some of the items of the report, which was then unanimously adopted.

Resolutions were afterwards approved authorizing the exercise of the remaining borrowing powers obtained in the Act of 1884.

SHOT AT A CHURCH DOOR.

A Chicago Bank President Fired on by His Stepson—The Wounds Fatal—The Assassin's Motive—A Woman with a Remarkable Career.

A Chicago despatch says: In the throng of people at the church door of one of the most fashionable congregations in Chicago, a gray-haired millionaire bank president was remorselessly shot down yesterday by his stepson, to avenge or shield a woman charged with continued adultery. The woman was Mrs. Meeckie Rawson, wife of the banker shot and mother of the assailant. The banker is Stephen W. Rawson, President of the Union Trust Company, of Chicago. William Lee, aged 17, is the stepson. Banker Rawson, with five bullets in his body and apparently in a dying condition, was hastily picked off the blood-spattered curb and bundled into one of the score of carriages that had been waiting for the wealthy worshippers. Young Lee, with the empty and still smoking revolver in hand, was as hurriedly thrown into a strikingly different conveyance, the waggon of the police patrol. Young Lee had been seen for half an hour previous pacing the sidewalk fronting the Third Presbyterian Church, of which Banker Rawson has long been a leading light, and was still an honored member, notwithstanding that he had been charged by his wife with perjury and other offences. He, on the other hand, alleged that she, although prominent in society and a beautiful woman in appearance, was really a disreputable, blasphemous, devilish tempered adventuress who coveted only his money. For a year or more the two have been fighting each other in the divorce courts, and within a week the banker has filed against her additional charges of adultery. Little attention had been paid to young Lee as he stalked backward and forward past the church entrance. He was lost in the crowd when the congregation began to come out. Mr. Dawson was about to step to his carriage when suddenly came the sharp crack of a revolver, followed by a deep groan. A din of screams began, but subsided almost instantly. Lee was seen to quickly, but coolly, steady his pistol with his left hand, while with his right he again and again pulled the fatal trigger. With a stifled cry "I'm killed" the aged millionaire fell prostrate on the stone flags, upturning his agonized white face at the cold, set countenance of his stepson. Lee, turning to an officer who had just appeared on the scene, hoarsely whispered, "Take me to jail, quick," and it seemed scarcely a moment till the patrol waggon bore him away. When the dying banker reached his home six physicians had been called. They probed for the bullets, and found that all had lodged in the legs or arms, save one that entered near the small of the back, and as nearly as could be judged had plunged through his abdomen. If his life was saved it would be little short of a miracle.

A reporter found Mrs. Rawson at the Continental Hotel, where she occupies apartments, shortly after the tragedy, and upon being asked what she had to say in regard to the affair replied, "I am glad of it. He deserved all he got. I intended to do it myself."

Lee declared he had nothing to say except that he was entirely responsible for what he did. The career of the young man's mother is in many respects remarkable. She has been married several times, was divorced once, and as a department clerk in the Government service at Washington is understood to have been concerned in some decidedly sensational incidents. She first became acquainted with Rawson about five years ago, and their marriage soon followed. Rawson is 65 years old.

WHY AM I A HEATHEN?

The Chinese Lecturer Taxed $50 for Coming to Canada.

A Kingston despatch says: On Saturday, before leaving for New York, Wong Chin Foo, the unconvertible Chinaman, ventilated his grievances against the Canadian Government. It had, through the Customs collector at Suspension Bridge, imposed upon him the tax of $50 provided by the Anti-Chinese Immigration Act passed some time ago. Wong Chin Foo has been about fifteen years a resident of the United States. He claims that for thirteen years he has been an American citizen, being naturalized at Grand Rapids, Mich., in 1874. He had been a frequent visitor to Canada ever since the existence of the Act referred to, and until the present he has not suffered by its enforcement. He says that on arriving at Clifton the other day while on a lecturing tour the Customs officer sized him up and declared that he was dutiable. Wong Chin Foo professed to be ignorant of the law and took the action of the officer as a joke, but the officer was not inclined to be at all funny and intimated that upon the payment of the assessment depended his detention or progress. Now Wong Chin Foo, being quite chatty and possessed of an oily tongue, he set about showing the officer the mistake he had made. The officer was not to be subdued in that way. He had learned that Wong was a Chinaman and that was enough. "I didn't deny," said Wong Chin, "that I had been a Chinaman, but I said I was now an American and claimed the rights and privileges of American citizenship. I made affidavit of the facts before the American Consul. I suggested that the New York World be asked for proof of my identity and all to no effect. I was told to pay the demand or return to New York. I was at first disposed to return, but I had made engagements for two lectures and was bound to fulfil them, and so I was duly appraised, tagged and taxed," showing the receipt for $50. "Yes," he went on, "$50 for one Chinaman weighing less than 100 lbs., and so more than 50c. per lb." Wong Chin said he would lay the case before the American Government when he went home and he looked for the return of the money.

The murderers were fired upon and George Duff, jun., was killed. Jake Coon was captured and lynched. Five of the officers and citizens in the battle were wounded. There are about twenty robbers in the gang. R. M. Duff, George Drake and Frank Shambling are prisoners and await the pleasure of the Vigilance Committee for their disposal. SIR CHARLES TUPPER AND TEMPERANCE.

We have no desire to introduce the question of the political complexion of Temperance reformers in discussing matters pertaining to the great social evil. But when noted Temperance journals, such as the Canada Citizen, are for ever harping upon the subject, and trying to gull the people of this country into the belief that Conservative Temperance workers are extremely few in number, it is high time to come forward and endeavor to nip the polite fiction in the bud. Grip has also fallen into the same error, but then Grip is rather an inconsistent and wayward bird, whose croakings may safely be estimated at so much per line—ever ready to pick up the fat crumbs, whether dropped from Liberal or Tory tables.

Now, as a matter of fact, two of the leading Conservative statesmen of Canada are amongst the most enthusiastic Temperance workers on this continent, viz., Sir Charles Tupper and Hon. Mr. Foster. Then there are scores of M. P's of the same political complexion, who are to be found on the same side; besides thousands and tens of thousands in the more ordinary walks of life. The Citizen barely refers to Sir Charles in this connection, gives Mr. Foster a contemptuous passing notice, looks over the heads of the M. P's, and cooly consigns the masses to—oblivion. We sometimes fear that that self-same Citizen is a political "woif in sheep's clothing."

But Sir Charles Tupper—what of him? Simply this, he is one of the grandest Temperance workers this continent has ever seen. Just read the eloquent outburst, delivered on the hustings, right in the teeth of the enemies of Prohibition and Temperance Reform, and then remember that the speaker is the greatest statesman in America that has taken hold of the drink curse question manfully, fearlessly, honestly, and publicly! Here are Sir Charles' own words to his Cumberland constituents, on the eve of the recent great political struggle—when hundreds of "lesser lights" rendered homage to Bacchus and dishonored their Temperance pledges on the altar of political exigency—here, we say, are Sir Charles' burning, manly, honest utterances:—

"I will tell you what my position is regarding a prohibitary law. I attach vital importance to the great questions I have been discussing, the railway, the fiscal, and the national policies of the Government. They are all of vital consequence to the people of our country: but I attach still greater importance to the restriction of the traffic in intoxicating drinks. (Cheers.)

"Where I had power to prohibit the sale of liquor I used it administratively, and legislatively, and did all that a man could do to carry out the principle. You have the record of my past life as a guarantee of my future course in regard to temperance. In the future, as in the past, I will use all the power I possess, whatever ability God has given me, for the purpose of carrying out, to the best of my ability, the aims and objects of the temperance people of this country. (cheers) Wherever and whenever the friends of prohibition feel that I can promote that great cause I shall be entirely at their service. I say more, that if by resigning my office as Finance Minister and going into opposition, I could give to this country legislation that would prevent the manufacture, importation sale and use of intoxicating drinks, I would not hesitate for a moment. (Cheers.) I would be ready to lay down office, position, anything that the great cause should be successful throughout the Dominion." (Loud applause.)

We have no desire—as we stated before—to introduce politics when discussing questions relating to Temperance reform. We simply wish to show that Conservatives as well as Liberals or Reformers are deeply interested in the question, and prepared to fight shoulder to shoulder with political opponents in the tremendous warfare now being waged against the drinking usages of society. We also desire to show, that it would be infinitely better for the Citizen to eschew politics altogether and stick to Temperance. The field is quite large enough for it and all other journals of a like character; but if it, or they, have a strong hankering after political pasture-fields, let them eschew Temperance and get into the political arena as quickly as possible. It can't serve two masters without getting pretty badly entangled in course of time.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

The Dundalk Herald has a very bashful correspondent out at a place called Kingscote. Here is a sample of his modesty: "Some of the lads say that the Hearld depreciated in value the past two or three weeks, on account, no doubt, of the absence of Scribo's (the cor's) news." Lord help the Herald when "Scribo" shuffles off this mortal coil or stops sending in those news items so interesting to "some of the lads!" There'll be a big literary famine for a dead certainty! Be careful, friend Newell—"aisy now, me bhoy."

Flesherton is just the place to locate a High School. Of course the school we now have is a high one, i.e. it is located on high ground—the schoolhouse we mean; but it's the other kind we allude to. Our town is beautifully situated in the centre of the county, possesses a very healthy climate, has a fine park, beautiful groves, sylvan retreats, splendid public buildings, cultured and refined society, grand natural toboggan slides, superior postal and travelling facilities branching out towards all points of the compass, &c., &c. for a column or more. Nature intended Flesherton to become a county town in the near future, have a High School, County Buildings, and all the rest of it. Neighboring places cannot fail to recognize our superior claims in the direction indicated, and, no doubt, will gracefully acknowledge the same.

Our correspondent cannot make out a sufficiently strong case to warrant us publicly alluding to the individual referred to in these columns a couple of weeks ago, and who was charged with committing certain crimes then enumerated. Although convinced that there is something really serious at the bottom of the charges made against the man, there is not sufficient trustworthy evidence available either to warrant exposure in the interests of the public, or upon which to base a criminal prosecution in the courts. In order to prevent a misapprehension, which seems to have arisen out of the publication of the item, we might say that no person in this community is implicated. Further, for the sake of decency and morality, it could be hoped that the charges were fabrications pure and simple.

The Same With a Difference.

Teacher—Yes, my children, always remember there is no human love equal to a mother's love.

"Very often."

TAMARAC—Is the discovery of a leading physician, and after years of experimenting it is now offered you in a perfected state as a never-failing cure for Coughs, Cold and Throat and Lung complaints.

Notes on the Baptist Convention.

(Specially Contributed for The Advance.)

The Baptist Convention which concluded its sittings last Thursday is said to have been the most successful gathering of its kind that has ever been held during the history of the denomination in Ontario. The Convention opened with an hours devotional exercises which proved to all a refreshing inspiring season. There was no vain display of gifts or attainments, but a continued presentation of prayer by men who were trained and tried in earnest Christian work. The President's address was a complete success, expressing in the clearest, briefest possible way, what it is that constitutes "our mission." As to the ground and attitude taken by Christians known as Baptists, he said:—

"What we have espoused is an aggressive gospel. Ours is a positive faith. It make large demands upon the world's attention. We stand out before the eyes of all men as a peculiar people. We insist upon the absolute sufficiency of the Scriptures in all matter of faith and practice; upon the necessity of a wholly regenerate church membership; upon full liberty of conscience and the right of private judgement; upon the absolute separation of church and state. We deny all priestly authority. We demand implicit obedience to God's commands, both in form and substance. How far-reaching are these essential elements of our faith! How can they be held in a half hearted way! They demand unreserved allegiance."

The Home and Foreign Missionary Societies, both reported cheering progress. The Home Mission, voiced by Rev. A. Grant, spoke of many newly opened doors for Christian effort and of encouraging success attending all that had been attempted. He said: "The great demand everywhere was for men truly consecrated men who fear God and have no other fear." The income of the Foreign Mission was larger than any previous year, four new missions were appointed during the year to go out to India, and on the field itself. Good results have been brought about.

The Grande Signe Mission—a mission to French Canadians—was represented by an accomplished and consecrated Frenchman, who spoke pathetically of the condition of his countrymen, of the power, wealth, and subtelty of the priesthood, and of their various agencies for weeding out the Protestants of the Province of Quebec.

The McMaster University was one of the leading questions and was from the first only viewed in the light of the great commission as recorded in Matthew 28, 18 to 20. For the said University, the late Wm. McMaster bequeathed over $850,000 to provide a permanent endowment. Over four hours were taken up in earnest discussion before it was decided to accept this trust, as so many felt that it would be wrong to take, however great the money value, if it were in any way to turn our thoughts from the main feature of gospel work. The prevailing idea was, we don't want material riches, but spiritual efficiency. Our mission is not so much to promote higher education as to spread a pure Gospel, and the trust could only be accepted in so far as it would help on this work and be a means of promoting the kingdom of God among men. Finally by an unanimous vote the legacy was accepted and preliminary arrangement heartily entered into. Sunday was a day of special delight. Morning and afternoon we worshipped in the beautiful church edifice in Jarvis st., and between the two services we paid a visit to the Methodist Cathedral, the Metropolitan Church, and as the architect, whose guest the writer was, conducted us through that exquisitely beautiful structure, we felt glad that Canada has reared so many monuments of grateful homage to the Author of all her benefits.

In the evening we went to hear Dr. Wild, and were interested in his novel method of teaching and working. Monday morning we visited several places of interest not the least pleasing of which was the Kindergarten, about which so much might be said, and concerning which we heartily wished that Editors and Pastors in small towns might have something of the kind to help them in one important department. Returning again to the session with most favorable impressions of all we had seen especialy of the Lord's day in the city, we penciled the following acorostic which we give more for its literal truthfulnes than for its poetic value:—

To thee fair City, God has given,
Of all the richest gifts of heaven,
Refinement, Art and Science fair,
Objects of interest every where,
Noblest of all is manifest,
Thy reverence for God's day of rest,
On which thou art so richly blest.

FADERINGTON.

BY DEACON SNUKES.

You will not find my Town so named on the map, though it actually exists. I have, for prudential reasons, transposed the name to one which I think more befitting my purpose and the present condition of its surroundings.

Faderington is a one-sided town—that is to say, has but one side, the other being occupied by one of our great lakes. The business centre is is octagonal in form, the Court House in the centre, surrounded by a small park, a broad road with private streets diverging therefrom. Just now an autumnal loveliness is scattered in rich profusion, in the variegated foliage of the trees, which adorn the larger portion of its streets.

On the lakeside, from the path, is obtained a grand stretch of water scenery—the pale blue of the water merging into the deeper shadings of the distant horizon in a magnificent sweep into the impenetrable beyond!

Faderington has been one of the most reputable summer resorts, in the time when visitors took vacations quite naturally; when rest, with moderate exercise—void of intense excitement—was considered its chief requisite. There is a fair proportion of moderately substantial residents, whose chief occupation appears to be divided equally in taking all possible comfort from their present surroundings and in judiciously eking out their means with due regard to their longevity. As a matter of fact Faderington has long been noted as the headquarters of a large variety of extremely sensitive and amiable—old maids. Pardon the abruptness of the confession. Could I but coin a word which would more tenderly give expression to the actual fact, I would gladly avail myself of it—for least of all have I the slightest intention of casting a slur on so honorable a body. However, since the truth is now made public, I am sure that all gentlemen of marriageable proclivities will at once avail themselves of my earnest recommendation, and seek from the midst of so charming a selection, a partner for their joys and a true sympathizer in their sorrows.

There were several interesting features in this excellent body, a few of which were brought prominently under my notice as I sat at dinner engaged—partly in the regulation table duties, and partly in taking stock of my surroundings. Mrs. Smileaby, an attractive elderly lady, sat at the head of the table; at her left side the adorable Miss Jiggilty, the boss milliner, whose slender arms encased in a skin-tight jersey are the wonder of the town. Now, that a party should be so constructed may possibly be accounted for by one of the following reasons:

1st—Either by early misformation or (2nd) an acquired condition, the result of intense activity.

From my own opinion I believe, in this case, it is somewhat of a combination of—both! But to see the way those arms moved in reaching for table requisites, was little short of the miraculous. The curves, the waves, the twisting, the angles, circles and graceful movements were wonderful—not only in their rapidity but in their continuosity also. I can readily understand, that a person for a long series of years engaged in putting the finishing touches to feminine head-gear, this peculiar movement becomes a second nature, and as a remedial measure would respectfully suggest a change in occupation, such as would involve household duties; concentrated in one word—marriage!

There were two other ladies on the right side—Miss Noddington and Miss Vielby—the former so named from the constant nodding of the immensity of plumes which adorned the front part of her hat; and the latter from the thick veil which covered half her face, shading from vulgar gaze her somewhat aquiline nose, her graceful features and other possibilities of more or less importance. Mrs. Smileaby, however, managed to keep up a motherly interest at their table, and, save with a few occasional glances in our direction, their attention was chiefly confined to the duty of the hour.

The walks around Faderington are by no means to be despised. A graceful sward covers part of the roadside in many parts of the town, which forms an agreeable change from the knotty sidewalks. As the shades of evening were approaching a quiet ramble was exceedingly acceptable. Though October, the mildness of the evening was appreciated by the residents, who sat at their windows variously engaged in conversation or in probable meditation of their suggestive environment, as their taste inclined.

The strains of music from an open window drew my attention. I leaned against a maple, whose foliage the breeze was slightly moving, and gave myself to a reverie. A graceful figure sat at the piano in the well-lighted and elegantly furnished room. A white wool wrap was thrown loosely over her shoulders, while her fingers ran over the key board in a dreamy fashion. Her eyes seemed to be scanning some distant object, or possibly her mind was far away. The unconscious melody merged into the minor key, which in its plaintive strains appeared to surge in waves of harmony as if her fingers were the exponents of the soul's musings. Suddenly the tune changed, then in a clear, rich voice, came the words—"'Twas the Last Rose of Summer left Blooming Alone." As the song proceeded, her voice gathered an inspiration of beauty. The song was exceedingly appropriate, for the fading flower, the falling leaf, were all silent yet potent teachers of the truth.

As the song ended, I felt a mournful thankfulness that even Faderington had taught me a practical lesson, as I dashed a tear from my eye and quietly returned to my hotel. D. S.

How Patsy will Arrange it.

"Yes," said Mrs. O'Halloran, "Patsy met wid a bad accident, sure enough. How was it after happenin', ye ask. It was loike this: He was wurrukin', as ye know, on the sewer an' wasn't payin' much attintion to things, an' so happened to have his pick up in the air when the six o'clock whistle blowed, an' av coorse he lets go av it an' looks fer his coat an' the pick come down on his fut! Be gobs it'll not happen so again, for he swears he'll not sthrike a lick wid the pick after a qua-r-r-ter past foive."

An Infant Speculator.

Our little three year old is very fond of oranges. One day when he had eaten a large one he came to mamma and wanted more.

"How many are there in the dish?" asked mamma. He counted them.

"Just three," he said.

"Very well," was the reply, "there is one for papa and one for mamma and one for you. You can have one. He ate it and wanted another.

"How many are left?" said mamma.

"But where is mine?" said the astonished mother. "Oh," he replied quickly, "I've eaten it."

Lesson For Young Writers.

Caller (in newspaper office)- Twenty years ago I wrote a poem.

Yes—Yes.

"I brought it to this office, and you refused to publish it."

"Very likely."

"I remember I mentally put you down then as a confounded idiot who didn't know enough to ache when hurt.

"Naturally."

"I looked that poem over again the other day, and have come to see you about it."

"Aha."

"I have come to say that if I looked as green twenty years ago as that poem proves me to have been, I want to thank you because you didn't cut me up and feed me to the cows. Good day."

The Editor drew a long chalk mark under the table. It was the first case in his experience in which twenty years had begotten sense enough, to understand that it is sometimes necessary to be cruel to be kind.

GOVERNMENT OF IRELAND.

The Mitchellstown Policemen Found Guilty of Murder.

A last (Wednesday) night's London cable says: Telegrams from France report that Lord Salisbury's condition causes anxiety. His rest at Dieppe has improved his health, but he can never be robust. It is stated, on what appears to be only too reliable authority, that His Lordship is suffering from Bright's disease of the kidneys. For years he has been developing the temperament and some of the habits of a valetudinarian. No English statesman ever lived so much apart from his colleagues as Lord Salisbury. His clever wife plays a great part in the political, as well as the social, relation of Lord Salisbury's position. It is believed that her influence prevents Lord Randolph Churchill's readmission to favor.

There is much anxiety among the Government supporters respecting the outcome of the Dublin Castle appeal in the Lord Mayor's case. Should the verdict be supported the defeat in the new law will be so glaring that the Castle will have to adopt one of two courses, either smuggle informers into proscribed meetings, or refuse to put the law into force. When the measure was passed through the Commons the weak point just revealed was discussed, but the Government showed no disposition to realize the expediency of alteration. The rumors of Mr. Balfour's and Lord Ashbourne's resignation in consequence of the failure of the prosecution are untrue.

There is reason for believing that there is no foundation whatever for the report which has been widely circulated that Prof. Goldwin Smith contemplates returning to England with a view to entering the House of Commons. When Mr. Smith went back to Canada recently he told some of his oldest and most intimate friends that he greatly doubted whether he would ever again cross the Atlantic.

At the inquest in the Mitchellstown shooting case to-day attention was drawn to the fact that the policemen charged with the shooting had been removed from the district on the eve of the jury's verdict. The Police Inspector said the men had been removed because their duties in the place had ceased, but they would return if necessary. The Coroner declared that the removal of the police was illegal, improper, and unconstitutional. After all the evidence had been submitted Mr. Harrington asked that a verdict of wilful murder be returned against Head Constable Brownrigg and the five policemen who fired under his general order. Mr. Harrington accused Constable Brownrigg of deliberately planning the murders.

The inquest in the case of John Kinsella, the old man who was shot and killed by emergency men on the estate of Mr. Brooke, at Coolgreany, County Wexford, on September 28th, has resulted in a verdict of murder against Captain Hamilton, the agent of the estate, and the men and bailiffs who were engaged in the affair.

A London cable says: Mr. T. R. Buchanan, member for West Edinburgh (Liberal), hitherto opposed to Mr. Gladstone's Irish policy, has intimated his conversion to Home Rule.

A Dublin cable says: In accordance with the order issued by the Inspector-General of Constables, Inspector Brownrigg and the other constables who were found guilty of murder by the coroner's jury at Mitchellstown have not been arrested. They have, however, been suspended from duty pending the appeal from the verdict of the jury.

Much surprise has been caused by the announcement of the appointment of Mr. Valentine Hinds as a new Land Commissioner. Mr. Hinds is a bailiff on Lord Lansdowne's Luggacurran property. He managed the recent eviction of 80 tenants, Lord Lansdowne on his advice refusing to grant the reduction of 15 per cent. which they demanded.

Mr. E. Walsh, the proprietor of the People, a Nationalist paper published at Wexford, has received six summonses to appear in court for alleged illegal publications relating to the National League.

A Belfast cable says: Mr. Chamberlain, speaking at Bushmills, County Antrim, yesterday, said that it was not the upper classes, but the poorer classes of Ulster that were opposed to the Parnellite proposals. The artisans and farmers did not see any chance of improving their condition under the rule of men like the Home Rule members of Parliament. The poorer classes rightly looked forward with the greatest dread to the changes that would be involved in the creation of a Parliament at Dublin. He admitted that a part of the north of Ireland was strongly in favor of Home Rule, but he was certain that if he could infuse into the people of Donegal the same resolute, law-abiding disposition as that shown by the people of Antrim, the outcry for great constitutional changes would become little heard of.

Mr. Chamberlain, continuing, referred to the persistent silence which Mr. Gladstone had maintained regarding the form of his new Home Rule Bill. The Gladstonians, he said, made a great parade about vague modifications of Mr. Gladstone's original plan, but many earnest Liberals remained totally unable to gather from Mr. Gladstone's utterances what the changes really were. (Cries of "Hear, hear.") If an amended scheme existed, why did not Mr. Gladstone take the nation into his confidence? It was not fair for a leader to claim the absolute trust of his followers, while refusing to give a clear insight into his intentions upon a matter of life or death. Surely upon a question involving the fate of the Empire, Mr. Gladstone might even at this late hour make a clear, definite statement which plain men could understand.

In conclusion, he declared that it was beyond the competency of the Parliament of the United Kingdom to dispose absolutely of the destinies of any part of the Kingdom. Parliament might relieve Ulster of its allegiance and out it adrift from the Empire, but it was not competent to transfer the allegiance of Ulster to a Parliament at Dublin. In counselling Ulster to offer resistance, he did not mean a resort to physical force. He put that aside. (Cries of "You needn't.") It was constitutional resistance he meant. If it were decided ultimately that Home Rule was desirable for the south of Ireland, that would not justify the imposition of Home Rule on Ulster, which under no circumstances would submit to it. (Cries of "Never.") Animated by this spirit, the time would never come when Ulster men would cease to be citizens of the United Kingdom.

THE RUTH HARLOW CASE.

Dr. J. C. Bright Tried For Murder and Acquitted.

A despatch from Sandwich (dated last Wednesday night) says: At the assizes here to-day the whole of the day has been occupied in trying the case of Queen vs. Bright, murder. The prisoner, Dr. J. C. Bright, of Chatham, was charged with committing an abortion upon Ruth Harlow, a girl from Hamilton. Ruth Harlow was seduced, it is alleged, by George P. Holden, a commercial traveller, of Hamilton. The girl went to Chatham, it is said, under the direction of Holden. The Crown endeavored to show an arrangement between the prisoner and Holden, that the prisoner should perform the abortion. Miss Harlow went to an hotel in Chatham. She was there visited by the prisoner, who procured a boarding place for her, where it is alleged the offence was committed. Several medical men were called to show that an abortion had been committed upon the deceased.

The defence rested mainly on attacking the veracity of the witnesses put in the box by the Crown who spoke regarding the prisoner's connection with the offence. Though the defence called a number of medical men, there was a very slight difference between them and the doctors put in the box by the Crown. The prisoner was defended by Mr. E. Meredith, Q. C., Mr. Pegley and Mr. White. Mr. Lister acted for the Crown.

The prisoner is an old medical practitioner, of Chatham, and is a wealthy man. His wife, who was present during the trial, stepped up and kissed her husband when he went into the box for trial. The doctor is a frail man, upwards of 70 years of age.

At 10 p. m. the jury returned with a verdict of not guilty. His Lordship, in discharging the prisoner, remarked that the evidence against him was of such a character that he could not have complained if they had found him guilty. He discharged him with a caution to be careful in the future.

FIRE AMONG THE INSANE.

Cleveland Insane Asylum Scorched by Fire and Six Patients Lose Their Lives.

A last (Wednesday) night's Cleveland despatch says: The horrors of a fierce fire, in the smoke and confusion of which stalked the presence of grim death in his most terrible form, visited the great insane asylum on the southern limits of the city for the second time to-night. It was the occasion of the weekly dance given the more manageable of the patients as a healthy means of recreation. About 250 of them, in charge of their attendants, were enjoying the diversion thus afforded them when the cry of "fire" arose, and flames and smoke poured in upon them with bewildering suddenness. A stampede was the result, and the attendants had scarcely time to realize the situation when the room was filled with leaping fire and dense smoke. As soon as the first excitement had abated the attendants made a courageous rush into the suffocating smoke and rescued all they could of the unfortunates who had been overcome. The bodies of six insane women who had met death by asphyxia and burning were recovered, and three more were found in an injured condition. The fire started at the laundry, a one story building which adjoins the wing in which the chapel is located. The prompt response and active work of the firemen prevented a disastrous spread of the flames. The loss to property will fall below $25,000.

AN EXAMPLE TO THE BOYS.

Trustee and Architect Fight at a School Board Meeting.

A last (Friday) night's Kingston despatch says: Last night's meeting of the Public School Board was one which attached much disgrace to that body. One of the trustees asked the privilege of cross-questioning the architect of the new Central School, and the result was the examination grew so warm that several trustees left the room, when the Chairman declared there was no quorum and dismissed the remaining members. The architect and the trustee who had questioned him went into an adjoining room, where they resumed the discussion. The architect told the trustee he was mixed, when the latter called him a liar. The architect then remarked that if they were outside he would use his fist. Like a flash the trustee let fly his left, and blood came from the architect's nose. The blow was returned, and then the pugilists took hold and wired into each other for several minutes until the other trustees went into the room and separated the combatants and held them till their passions cooled down. The fight created quite a sensation, as both parties are prominent residents. The whole affair rose out of the diameter of a flue.

AN ADOPTED DAUGHTER'S CRIMES.

Smothers a Baby and Sets Fire to a House — Poisons Her Foster Parents' Cow Rather Than Milk Her.

A Manistee, Mich., telegram says: Minnie Demorse, the adopted daughter of James Henderson, was arrested Tuesday for larceny committed several months ago, but the real sensation in the case has just come to light. This spring Mr. Henderson's cow died, and her milk just previous to her death killed nine pigs. The girl confesses she poisoned the cow because she did not want to milk it. Mr. Henderson's house was set on fire five times in one day a few weeks ago, and the girl confesses she did that, too. Mr. Henderson's baby died suddenly, and the girl confesses she smothered it because it cried and she did not want the trouble to care for it. She is 18 years old and was adopted fifteen years ago.

THE CAFFAREL SENSATION.

Strange Story of a Pair of Parisian Adventuresses—General Caffarel's Arrest—Given an Opportunity to Commit Suicide.

A London cable says: The Caffarel-Limouzin case in Paris is a sad scandal. Madame Limouzin is a vulgar adventuress. She is 41 years of age—a little, yellow, wrinkled, limping, humpbacked creature, with small, piercing eyes, extreme volubility of speech and considerable elegance of language. Last year she lived in the Boulevard Beaumarchais with a companion who called herself Comtesse de Boissier, Baronne de Beauregard, or Marquise de Clemenca, and whose real name is Henriette Boissy, a cocotte of the commercial type, who used to keep a house at Paris where you drank tea, played baccaret and placed a louis under a candlestick each time you took the cards. Madame Limouzin also has a husband, an adventurer of smaller calibre.

This trio carried on the business of an "influence agency" for the benefit of persons desiring employment in the Ministries, promotions, Government contracts, etc. Well in view in the drawing-room were visiting cards of eminent political personages, on which were written a few words, cards and writing being forged if necessary. The dupes on entering were struck by this mise en scene and the first interview ended by a deposit destined to grease the palms of the Ministers, Senators, Deputies and other notabilities, with whom Madame Limouzin professed to be on the best of terms. In reality Madame Limouzin and the "Comtesse" passed their time writing politicians—notably M. Thibaudin and General Boulanger—letters containing flattery, threats, calumnies, offers of service and propositions of a most compromising character. Both M. Thibaudin and General Boulanger finally warned the trio, through the police, to cease their manœuvres.

Then Madame Limouzin and the "Comtesse" quarrelled and the former removed to a gorgeous suite of rooms in the Avenue Wagram, where she continued her agency and entered into relations with General Caffarel, an officer who was overwhelmed with debts and had no longer any sense of honor or decency. The "Comtesse," first of all, denounced her former accomplice to the police; then followed complaints from various sources, and at length the police proceeded to watch Madame Limouzin, thinking it was simply a question of one of those innumerable flash agencies which abound in Paris, that paradise of adventurers. The inquiry led further than was expected.

A detective sent to entrap Madame Limouzin was taken by her to the Minister of War and introduced to General Caffarel, to whom the detective handed a sum of money, in return for which, it was understood, he would receive the Cross of the Legion of Honor. This surprising discovery brought matters to a crisis. The Minister of War, in the presence of M. Rouvier, interrogated General Caffarel, who confessed. Time was then implicitly given him to blow his brains out, but he did not have the courage to take advantage of this supreme privilege. He was arrested and is now in prison with Madame Limouzin.

The case will be a formidable washing of dirty linen in the facts and personages involved. Even the son-in-law of President Grevy, M. Daniel Wilson, is involved in many of Madame Limouzin's tried tripotages. With such a case as this before us, shall we say that corruption in the Republic is less interesting than the depravity of the Empire?

A "CAPITAL" BREEZE.

Interesting Letter of One Ottawa Lady to Another.

An Ottawa despatch says: In the Assize Court yesterday, the local cause celebre of Walker vs. Birkett was heard. Both parties are prominently connected in the city. The charge against Mrs. Birkett is of sending letters to Mrs. W. H. Walker with intent to extort money. The prisoner pleaded not guilty. Mr. J. K. Kerr, Q. C., and Hon. R. W. Scott for the Crown; Mr. W. Mosgrove and Mr. T. McVeity for the prisoner. The letter complained of is as follows: "The Lord is the judge of the fatherless and the children." "Tuesday, 26th. Mrs. Walker,—Sister I cannot call you, for you don't deserve that name. Your small pretensions are disgusting, of course, as all sensible people have felt for years in Ottawa, but I must confess that I did not believe you were consummate serpents and thieves until I received your husband's letter. The man or woman who would quietly pick my locks and carry away 25 hundred dollars I feel would be respectable compared to yourself. Now for a little pleasant preaching. 'He that is guilty of breaking the least of these,' viz., the Holy Commandments, 'is guilty of all.' 'A chain is only as strong as the weakest link.' 'Thou shalt not steal.' 'Thou shalt not covet thy neighbor's goods.' Perhaps the angel Gabriel may be bribed to open the heavenly gate, but according to the real regulation order of things it will be impossible. One must not only repent, but make restitution also. I seriously advise your looking up that grand old doctrine. I require five hundred dollars at your hands; if it is not forthcoming in a few days I will give myself the pleasure of treating you to some open letters on the subject, viz., postals.—HENRIETTA M. BIRKETT."

The Loss of the California.

At an investigation into the loss of the propeller California before Capt. Harbottle and W. J. Meneilly, at Toronto yesterday, Chief Engineer Ellis, Second Engineer Mills and Captain Trowell were examined. The only new point of importance brought out was that the steamer had not a full cargo and the officers neglected to put in shifting boards.

Capt. Harbottle expressed himself as not quite satisfied that the most strenuous exertions had been made to save the California, suggesting several things that might have been done; to which Capt. Trowell replied that it was easy enough to plan in an easy chair and carpeted office, but it was a far different matter on a sinking ship tossed by mountainous seas.

Our Toronto correspondent telegraphs to-day: The official inquiry into the loss of the steamer California was resumed this morning before Mr. W. J. Meneilly and Capt. Harbottle. Capt. Trowell detailed the particulars of the disaster much the same as they have already been given in the telegraph despatches. The inquiry was then adjourned indefinitely.

ABOUT THE MANZANILLA.

Particulars of the Wreck—The Captain Saved.

A despatch received Thursday night from Dunkirk, N. Y., says: During the fearful storm on Lake Erie last night the schooner Manzanilla, of Hamilton, Ont., was driven ashore six miles above this city, and has become a total wreck. She was commanded by Capt. Geo. O'Brien, and bound from Cleveland to Toronto with a load of block stone. All the crew were saved. The vessel was built by Jos. Shickluna, of St. Catharines, and owned by R. Williamson, of Hamilton, and J. S. Murphy, timber merchant, of Quebec. The Manzanilla was valued at about $7,000 and is but partially insured.

Another despatch says: The crew left the captain and vessel when the craft was a mile and a half off Brocton, and had great difficulty in getting ashore. They afterwards tried to take the captain off, but the breakers were so wicked and the boat so unserviceable that the perilous undertaking was given up. The crew reported the vessel's port side stove in, and her rigging all gone, and that she is entirely at the mercy of the waves. The Customs authorities made every effort to get a tug to go to the rescue of the captain of the vessel, but all refused. The life saving crew held itself in readiness all day for a tug.

A Buffalo despatch says: No marine disasters of consequence are reported as the result of Wednesday night's gale in this section except the schooner Manzanilla, which was reported ashore last night. The Manzanilla went on between Brocton and Dunkirk, on the southern shore of Lake Erie. A Brocton, N.Y., correspondent sends the following details: The Manzanilla, a three-master, Capt. Geo. O'Brien, of Kingston, master, sprung a leak off Van Buren Point, and was run ashore west of the Point at about 8.30 o'clock yesterday (Thursday) morning. She was bound from Cleveland to Toronto with a cargo of block stone and grindstones. There was a crew of seven men besides the captain. The crew went ashore in a small boat, leaving the captain on the vessel. The boat was smashed by the waves soon after the crew landed. The life-saving stations at Buffalo and Erie were notified by telephone, but failed to respond, and Captain O'Brien remained on the wreck until late in the afternoon, when he was rescued by Sherman Oats and two other men who came from Barcelona in the fishing boat Beecher. The rescuing party were unable to land at Van Buren, and were obliged to bring the exhausted captain to Dunkirk, where they arrived at 8.30 last evening. The vessel is a total wreck. She had an insurance in the Western Assurance, of Toronto, of $4,000. The vessel was built by Shickluna, of St. Catharines, and was one of the fleet owned by Captain James Murray, of St. Catharines, which laid the basis of his fortune before he became a contractor for Government works. She was a mate to the ill-fated Magellan.

THE CAT O'NINE TAILS

Didn't Appear to Hurt Him Very Much.

A last (Thursday) night's Montreal despatch says: For the fourth time in the criminal records of Montreal, the lash was applied to-day at Montreal jail upon the person of a man named Desormiers, who some months ago, while dressed in a priest's garb, committed an indecent assault upon a young girl at St. Martine. Desormiers was tried at the last term of the Court of Queen's Bench and sentenced to one year's imprisonment, with the addition of twenty lashes. To-day Desormiers received ten out of the twenty lashes. The operation took place in the presence of the deputy sheriff and a small knot of spectators. The prisoner was securely tied to a triangle by his arms and legs, his back bared, and a muffler tied around his neck to prevent the lash reaching that portion of his body. The lash was applied by one of the prisoners, and the whole operation only lasted a few minutes. After a few lashes Desormiers was heard to exclaim, "Not so hard!" but no other remarks escaped him, and he took the remainder of his punishment without flinching. The whipping was certainly not very severe in its nature, and did not seem to have much effect upon the prisoner, who, beyond a few bruises on his back, was not much hurt.

Rochefort on the Caffarel Scandal.

A Paris cablegram says: M. Rochefort, editor of the Intransigeant, referring to the Caffarel affair, said: I think the affair was originally got up by the Ministry to injure General Boulanger. They did not succeed, so they tried to ruin the President. When they began they had no idea that such big people would be dragged into the scandal, and now every one is afraid and would give the world to hush it up. In reply to the question as to whether he thought Gen. Boulanger would be injured, he said: No, what has he done? How can a public man help receiving shady people who ask to see him? His position compels him to receive all sorts of people. Why, if you were to go on that principle you would convict Mme. Cornet for letting Marchandon, the murderer, into her house. Upon being asked, what will come of the scandal, he replied: It will cause the defeat of the Ministry. It will not upset M. Grevy. He would simply repudiate the people who have compromised only themselves. As for Mme. Limouzin, take my word for it, she will get off with a fortnight's imprisonment—if she goes to prison at all, which I doubt, but whoever else escapes the Ministry will not.

Anything for a Chance.

HANGED IN EFFIGY.

The Severe Criticism of Cleveland and His Wife Which Led to Trouble in Minneapolis.

A Minneapolis despatch says: The following is from the article in the Tribune on the occasion of the visit of President and Mrs. Cleveland, which has caused a great sensation and indignation among Cleveland's friends: "And it is extremely hard to respect either member of this family now touring for votes. Mrs. Cleveland is a handsome, mature woman, apparently several years older than she is said to be. At least she was old enough to have exercised her own free choice in marrying Grover Cleveland. It is inconceivable that she should have married him except to obtain the position of mistress of the White House. Such a marriage would never have been thought of but for the astonishing political accidents, which, in the course of two or three years, brought Mr. Cleveland out of the obscurity, which is his proper element, to the highest position in the nation.

"It is hard to have respect for a woman who would sell herself to so gross and repulsive a man as Grover Cleveland, and one with a private record so malodorous, for the bauble of a brief social ascendancy. She is now an object of curiosity and remark for gaping crowds, and her photographs are sold almost, if not quite, as freely as Mrs. Langtry's. Such is her reward. If she can secure a re-election for Grover she will have four more years of the gratification which the highest social prominence gives and of the delight of unflagging newspaper notoriety. After that she will simply have to put up with being the wife of as insignificant and obscure a man as an ex-President could possibly be. One cannot help a pang of sympathy for her, but she has chosen her lot deliberately."

About 10 o'clock last night a hundred men and boys, mostly members of an association of the lowest class of the local democracy, known as the Algonquin Club, gathered at a saloon of a rather hard reputation and, after drinking heavily, repaired to a secluded spot in a side street and fired the usual straw man, which had been used on such occasions from time immemorial. The mob was led by Mayor A. A. Ames, who was foremost in the Cleveland reception, and takes no pains to conceal his self-proposed candidacy for the Vice Presidency.

RISKED HIS LIFE FOR $10.

A French Canadian's Feat at the Chaudiere Falls.

An Ottawa despatch says: A remarkable and daring feat was accomplished here yesterday, when a courageous Frenchman threaded his way along the edge of the Chaudiere Falls, passing safely from shore to shore. The man was Francis Potvin, who has worked in the various mills in the summer and the shanties during the winter since he was a boy, and is now a splendid specimen of a French Canadian shanty man. He made a wager with some friends in Hull that he could walk through the big kettle. The wager was taken and the money, about $10 in amount, put up. Potvin, accompanied by a number of friends, proceeded across the large table rocks on the Hull side of the Chaudiere Falls to the brink of the rock over which the water falls. Owing to the phenomenally low water in the river and the addition of the new dam to the former series of dams above the falls, only about four inches of water was passing over the falls, except in one place, near the Ontario shore, where the water was ten inches deep. Potvin, after putting on a pair of raftsmen's boots, well caulked, with the usual sharp nails in the soles, started to walk across the face of the falls. He proceeded very steadily until about three quarters of the way across, when the current became very strong and the water deeper. Steadying himself, he proceeded cautiously, carefully planting one foot on the rocks before lifting the other, and in a few minutes from the time he started climbed up on a pier, below Perley & Pattee's sawmill. The feat was watched by a large number of people, mostly men who were employed in the mill, as it was not generally known that Potvin intended to make the attempt. Notwithstanding the lowness of the water the feat was a dangerous one. Had he missed his footing for a moment he would have been hurled into the cauldron below, with no possible hope of escaping death.

She Saw Through Him.

"Yes," said old Mr. Jones, "the doctors are getting mighty smart nowadays. Why, they've got instruments and things made so that they can see clean through you."

"Humph!" replied old Mrs. Jones, "I don't see anything particularly smart in that. I've been married to you for thirty years, but I saw through you in two weeks after the bridal."

Mr. Jones rubbed his bald head for a moment and thoughtfully resumed his reading.

Handy to Have in the House.

A paste that will hold firmly, and which can be preserved for months in a well stoppered bottle, is made by dissolving a piece of alum the size of a walnut in a pint of boiling water, to which two spoonfuls of flour, made smooth in a little cold water, and a few drops of cloves are afterwards added, the mixture being then boiled.

A MISSING PRETTY GIRL.

Laura Puy, a Former Hamiltonian, Mysteriously Disappears.

Her Mother Fears She is Worse than Dead —She Started for Church, but Never Got There.

The Buffalo News of last (Thursday) night says: Detectives have been working for several days on a strange disappearance in this city. It is the story of a girl, pretty, vivacious, interesting, who suddenly dropped out of the routine of her daily life and left not a trace to show whether she is living or dead.

Laura Puy, two weeks ago last Sunday, started from her parents' home at 100 Swan street to go to Rev. P. G. Cook's church in the Fitch Institute, a block away. "Now, Laura," said her mother, at parting, "be sure to hurry back from church; won't you?"

"Yes, mamma, I will," replied the girl, and that was the last the mother saw of her child. Laura is a medium blonde, with luxuriant, curling, brown hair, which that day was clasped behind with a silver pin holding a white stone shaped like a rose. She has a good complexion, gray eyes, heavy dark brows and lashes, a small, straight nose, medium-sized mouth and full lips. She is straight, well-grown for her age and well-formed. She wore a blue polkadot print dress, blue jersey cap fitting tightly to the head, and a sash of the same material as the dress. A brown jacket, No. 3½ button shoes, black stockings and black mitts completed her costume. Her dress reached scarcely to her shoe tops. She was 13 last birthday, but looks older. The missing girl's dress and appearance are described thus carefully so that if she has been seen her parents may be communicated with.

When Laura did not return after church time her friends became uneasy and one of her younger sisters was sent to the rooms of Mrs. Westfall, on Seneca street, over Tiffany's picture store, to inquire if she had been there. Mrs. Westfall was Laura's most intimate friend. She was not at home, said her husband, a driver for Chas. W. Miller, and he said Laura had not been there. His little daughter corrected him, however, and said Laura had been there that morning. Mr. Westfall said he had got up late and did not know of her being at the house. At 4.15 Miss Grein, Laura's Sunday school teacher, called at Mrs. Puy's house to know why Laura had not been to school. On the previous Friday she had promised to be there. Then another messenger was sent to Westfall's. Mr. Westfall said that his wife was still absent, that she had gone to his cousins and that he had not seen Laura. Mr. Puy afterward called and was told by Mrs. Westfall that Laura was there about 10 o'clock on Sunday morning and had stayed but a few minutes. Mrs. Westfall was emphatic in saying she had not seen her since and that she knew nothing of the girl's whereabouts. Other friends in the city were sent to, but not a trace could be found. The last known of her was when after coming out of Mrs. Westfall's Laura stopped for a moment to speak to Mrs. Bryan, who lives near by. Mrs. Puy had sent Laura to a photographer's on Seneca street for some pictures about 10 that morning, and it was during this walk that she must have gone to Mrs. Westfall's. The next day detectives were put on the case, but so far have not found the girl.

"Laura was an affectionate child," said Mrs. Puy to a News reporter, "and I do not know of any reason why she should go away. I believe she is secreted somewhere in the city. I am sure Mrs. Westfall knows where she is. She has been Laura's evil genius."

Mrs. Puy has five children, all girls. Her husband works for the Benedict Paper Company. The family came here from Hamilton, Ont., ten months ago. The eldest daughter, Aida, has a good position as book-keeper with a Hamilton firm. She has come on to Buffalo to help her parents find her missing sister.

"We knew the Westfalls in Hamilton," went on Mrs. Puy, "and Laura and Mrs. Westfall were always great chums. They came here two years before we did and she persuaded us to let Laura go to live with her on Chestnut street. I believe now that Mrs. Westfall taught Laura to set my authority at defiance. I always had some misgivings, and when I went to take Laura home to send her to school Mrs. Westfall objected and Laura deliberately refused to come. I boxed Laura's ears, and since then Mrs. Westfall has said that I was a cruel mother, and that she had advised Laura to run away from me. I have been told since my child's disappearance that Mrs. Westfall on that Sunday was not at the place where she told her husband she was going. Mrs. Lann, an aunt of Westfall's, went to call on her that Sunday and Westfall said she was at his cousins. 'I will go there,' said Mrs. Lann, but returned shortly and reported that Mrs. Westfall had not been there. When her husband asked her about it that night she said she had gone there, found the cousin away and had spent the day with a dressmaker friend at 74 Seneca street.

"We have found that the cousin was at home all day, that Mrs. Westfall did not call and, what's more, we can't find that she spent the day at 74 Seneca street. It was during this time, when nobody knows where Mrs. Westfall was, that my child disappeared. If she is not trying to hide something, why does she make such statements?"

Mrs. Puy further stated that she had made inquiries of old neighbors of the Westfalls on Chestnut street, and gave some of their statements, adding that she feared her child had been led wrong. "My poor child!" she exclaimed, "I am almost afraid to find her alive."

"Do you know the whereabouts of Laura Puy?" the News man asked Mrs. Westfall.

"I do not."

"When did you see her last?"

"Two weeks ago last Sunday morning. She was at my house for a short time."

"You do not know where she went then?"

"No."

"Was there anybody with her that day?"

"No."

"Did she tell you she was going to run away?"

"No, but I wouldn't blame her if she did run away. Her mother abused her. Once in my house she knocked Laura down and stamped on her. Laura often told me she would run away, but I told her not to. She said she would marry the first one that asked her. Her mother took her home two months ago. When we lived on Chestnut street last winter Mrs. Hughson lived in the front of the house, and some fast young women stayed there. I went out with them once or twice at first, until I found what they were. One of them told Laura one day that she ran away from home when she was 13, and had a good time ever since. I know Laura was greatly taken with her fine clothes and sprightly ways, and she told me she would like to do the same thing."

"Where do you think Laura has gone?"

"I think she has run away and got married. She used to tell me of her lovers."

"Rather young to be a wife, wasn't she?"

"She was a well-grown child. From what she told me several times I think she was older than most girls are at 13."

How to Make a Man Your Enemy.

I have often thought that people hadn't got borrowing down to an exact science when Solomon wrote, and that when Poor Richard said, "He that goes a borrowing goes a sorrowing," he must have meant that one fellow did the borrowing and the lender did the sorrowing. I am older now, my children, than I was when I was younger, and I have learned that there is nothing in the world that will make a man hate you so bitterly as to owe you borrowed money that he cannot pay.

"But why should that make him mad at you?"

A SKETCH

Of a Little Child, an August Rose and an Answered Prayer

The following literary sunbeam is from the pen of Carrie McAyval in Good Cheer:

Flirting with the girls, sir? No, indeed! That's something I never do; and as to that lily of a girl just throwing kisses to me, why, bless you, that's my daughter May. And she's the dearest thing on earth to me.

Something special about her makes me have a different feeling toward her from anybody else I ever knew, and if you'd like, sir, I'll tell you about something that happened when she was a wee baby, twelve years ago.

It happened right along this very road between Newburyport and Byfield, and I was then the engineer instead of conductor, and was younger looking than I am now with this white head of mine.

Only 36 years old, sir, and you see I haven't a black hair in my head. That belongs to my story, too, as you will find. You remember that hill with the cottage at the foot of it, and golden rod and wild clematis growing along the stone wall? That's where I've lived ever since I was married, and it was on that embankment around the bend that the most terrible event of my life occurred.

It was one day in August, in the first of the month, and I will never forget how the sky looked, as deep and blue as my baby's eyes, nor how sweet and still the air was that morning as I walked over to the station. The golden rod and ferns hung heavy with dew, and there were clusters of purple grapes on the vines along the hedge. The roses were unusually late that year, and as the fall came on they were deep crimson instead of pink, as they are earlier in the season. I had one in my buttonhole that morning.

Baby had put it there when she kissed me good-by.

"Pitty 'ose, papa, for 'oo. Dod made it, mamma tell me so. Dod live up in 'ky." My wife was a Christian, and although I did not believe in her religion then, I have learned to put my trust in God since baby lisped to me about the rose that morning.

Every pleasant day when I made my down run at 3 o'clock in the afternoon, my wife and baby used to be sitting out there on the hill and they would wave their hands at me, and the baby would look so sweet and innocent, waving her little fat arm, I used to have a great longing in my heart that no harm should ever come to her; and I was such a strong healthy young fellow I felt that I should be able to protect and guard her always.

Almost 3 o'clock and the old forty-nine was puffing and steaming fit to burst as we neared the bend. I was already looking toward the hill and sure enough there was the baby's white dress; no, I was mistaken; it was only a piece of newspaper. They were not there. Why, I wondered. Perhaps they would be there before I turned the curve. Somehow it seemed to me I never so longed to have them there as I did that day, and I kept anxiously looking until away in the distance on the track I saw something that made every pulse in my body give a great leap and then stand still.

There, just ahead of me, toddling along, with her yellow hair flying and her little arms stretched out to balance herself, was my baby! A moment more and the wheels would be grinding her body and her precious blood would stain the track. I lived ages in that moment of agony. I waved my arms, shouted, rang the bell like a madman, and as I was pulling the rope the rose fell from my buttonhole on to the seat, and baby's words, "Dod made it. Dod live up in 'ky," came to me. For the first time in my life I poured out my soul in prayer. "God save my child." At that moment she stumbled and fell down the grassy embankment. As soon as I could I ran back to find her, and there she sat in the grass, lifting her blue eyes and dimpled mouth to me, and as I hugged her to my heart she lisped:

"I tied to climb on cars, papa, but somebody pushed me over and I fell down here. Don't ky, papa!"

For I was crying and thanking God at the same time, and when I came alongside of the train, carrying baby on my shoulder, all the men threw up their hats and cheered and most of the women were sobbing. That rose is in the locket with one of her baby curls, and I have never failed to pray for her safety and happiness, as well as for many other things since that day. Isn't she a beauty, too? And you can't blame me for liking this time of year best, and for always wearing an August rose whenever my darling girl pins one in my buttonhole, as she did this one two hours ago.

A Forgetful Boy.

Bobby was spending the afternoon at his aunt's, and for some moments had been gazing out of the window in a painfully thoughtful sort of way.

"What makes you so serious, Bobby?" asked his aunt.

"Why, ma told me that I must remember not to ask for anything to eat, and I'm trying to remember it."

Spurgeon's Orthodoxy—The Pope's Jubilee —A Little Mormon's Hymn.

Though Mr. Spurgeon has denied the story of his probable withdrawal if the Baptist Union failed to punish certain heterodox ministers, the Scotsman returns to the charge with the accusation that Mr. Spurgeon changed his mind. It justifies its statement by quotations from Mr. Spurgeon's magazine. The address of the President of the Union was a reply to Mr. Spurgeon. Though no direct notice was taken of Mr. Spurgeon's attitude, his recent writings are the main topics of conversation among ministers.

> What can I need beside?
> I'll strive from every evil
> To keep my heart and tongue,
> I'll be a little Mormon

Old Truths Newly Told.

How many readers of the Canada Presbyterian see the Standard, the new organ of Henry George? Those who do not miss a good deal, whether they sympathize with Henry George's theories or not. In an age, when many shrewd practical men seem drifting away from Christianity altogether, and when the gulf between the rich and the poor seems to be growing more and more impassable, it is refreshing to read such addresses as are weekly reported in that paper—addresses spoken to crowded audiences of workingmen in the city of New York, by such speakers as Dr. Pentecost and the great-hearted Dr. McGlynn—an American Pere Hyacinthe—who has sacrificed his ecclesiastical prospects that he might preach, according to his conscience, the old truths of the Sermon on the Mount. It is this and no wild socialism that he and others are preaching to the crowds Sunday after Sunday, and that the crowds, too, listen to, even as the common people did long ago, when the "Galilean Gospel" was first preached. It is an instance also of the uniting power of the great practical verities of Christianity that Dr. McGlynn has been listened to with earnest and sympathetic attention by an assembly of Methodist ministers, as he explained the platform of the Anti-Poverty Society. Has not the Church allowed questions theoretical too much to interfere with her practical unity? and has she been as fathful to her "message to men of wealth" as she should have been?—Canada Presbyterian.

An Accommodating Miller.

"You complain of having to pay your pastor's salary," said an old miller. "I will pay it for you and you shall not feel it." At the end of the year he brought in a receipt in full for the salary from the pastor, and then he explained: "I did it by taking a little toll when you sent your grain to my mill, and I took so little that none of you felt it. You see how easily the pastor can be paid."—Richmond Religious Herald.

AMONG THE IRISH TENANTS.

A Traveller's Description of Scenes Amid the Starving Poor.

William Hennessy was the only Irish peasant I had met who had no humor in him—or at any rate did not show any. He was horribly in earnest from beginning to end. "Look where he sleeps," he almost screamed; "a place more fit for a brute baste than for a man; there it is, and he and two gossoons (their mother is dead) share it between them." "Gossoons" means "boys," and, striding up to the dark corner where the bed lay, he pulled it roughly about, dragging out the coarse sacks which served as blanket and coverlet, then tossing up the moldy, stale, broken straw. It did not appear to occur to him that in tossing about the things in that manner he was making work for Jas. Walsh when Jas. Walsh returned home at night from the Gombeen man's to his cold-as-death praties. He was, as I have said, horribly in earnest; he was too completely possessed by the idea of the human misery he was depicting in a wild stormy way. "You see that big stone," he said, in a quieter tone, when we went outside. The stone was an enormous boulder, weighing I don't know how many tons, and he told me a story about it. Under that boulder, he said, a noise of hammering had been heard many a time at midnight during a period of forty years. The wise folk about the place said that treasure must be concealed beneath the stone, and that some ancient ghost was notifying the fact to living men; so five of the Corrigeen tenants —William Hennessy among them—resolved to remove the boulder. This they did in the dead of night with the help of a lever. Hennessy was deputed by his four associates to search the hole. He did so, and found a rusty kettle. All this was very superstitious of Hennessy and his friends, but men better educated believe in things as absurd as ghosts and hidden treasures; besides, Hennessy and his friends, in spite of their superstition, are perhaps pretty good judges of the Irish land question

Poor James Walsh's plat of potatoes looked very ragged and scraggy. "The accursed deer!" exclaimed Hennessy again; "the accursed deer!" and he described how they came up at night and in the morning from the beautiful glen opposite and enter the field and garden plots, and how the peasants sit up at night to watch for them, and how very often it seems as if the deer were not coming; the watchers retire to rest, only to find that the deer have committed more ravages in an hour than the sleepers can replace by the wages of a week's toil. All the tenants tell the same story. "Is no allowance made to you in your rent from all that damage?" I ask. "No," is the universal reply.—London Daily News.

Properly Rebuked.

I was told the richest thing about a Minneapolis girl. A certain Swedish baron of fine family and education came to this country and, the old story, found himself obliged to obtain any situation to keep from absolute want, so he entered the clothing store of M—— as clerk. Well, this young lady, hearing he was a noble, must have his autograph, so she came into the store one day and requested it, leaving her album. It puzzled him greatly. Why should she want his autograph, a complete stranger? Suddenly the truth struck him and he wrote his name, and beneath, "Clerk in M——'s store." "O," said he to me, you should have seen her face lengthen, and she said, 'I didn't want that. I wanted your name and your title.' 'There it is,' I answered; 'there's the name and clerk at M——'s is the only title I wear in this country.'"—St. Paul Pioneer Press.

He Stood and He Struck.

A Buffalo man who was recently in England tells the Courier of a remarkable experience he had at a fair in a small village on the outskirts of London. He was walking aimlessly about the grounds when a man walked up quickly and said: "Are you working, or will you stand?" "I'll stand," said the Buffalonian, and he remained where he was for probably fifteen minutes. During that period the stranger came to him three times and handed him money. At last he began to think he had enough of "standing," and struck out for his hotel. Soon after his arrival there he tumbled to the fact that he had been doing "stool-pigeon" work for a gang of pickpockets, who had evidently made a mistake as to his identity, but he cleared about $10 by the contract.

Very Liberally Rewarded!

The engineers of a heavy double-header train saw a child on the track near the village of Rock Glen, N. Y. They whistled for brakes, and when the train was almost upon the child one of the engineers leaped from his locomotive, and, running ahead, caught the infant from the track. As a reward, the mother has recorded the engineer's name in the family bible! Great Scott!

Evangelist Moody, who completed two weeks' work in Montreal last night, expresses himself as highly pleased with the success of his meetings. He will remain in Montreal until Thursday next, and will then go to Minneapolis to preside at the opening of a large Swedish Church in that city which will hold between 4,000 and 5,000 people. This, Mr. Moody says, is the first invitation he has received from the foreign population of America, or he would not think of going so far west at this time.

The Sun.

The sun is a vast body, 1,266,000 times as large and nearly 327,000 times as heavy as the earth. That which we see of it ordinarily is a white hot central mass, which is really only a part of the great globe. Next to this is a beautifully-colored envelope from 5,000 to 10,000 miles in thickness, called the chromosphere, while out side this is a comparatively dense atmosphere, or corona, stretching away for at leat 100,000 miles, while beyond that again there is a further atmosphere consisting to a large extent of hydrogen, the lightest substance known, reaching, it may be, a million miles or more farther into space.

Look at the sun shining brightly above us; it seems a picture of quietude and stately grandeur. In point of fact it is something very different. There is nothing with which man is acquainted that is in such wild confusion as the surface of the sun. Talk of startling volcanic eruptions, earthquakes and storms, the violence of all terrestrial commotions since the world was inhabited would not equal one hour's disturbance on the face of that boiling cauldron we call the sun. A cyclone on the earth's surface that whirls around at the rate of 100 miles an hour is a hurricane carrying all before it; but there are solar whirlwinds and fiery floods that sweep along at 100 miles a second. An eruption of Vesuvius entombs Pompeii; but there are momentary and unceasing eruptions on the sun in which the whole earth would melt with fervent heat and be engulfed, so as to leave not a rack behind except an inappreciable addition to the sun's gaseous atmosphere.

Phenomenal.

"Oh, George," cried young Mrs. Merry, running to meet her husband at the door. "I've something the best to tell you."

"No," said George; "what is it?"

"Why don't you think—the baby can talk! Yes, sir, actually talk! He's said ever and ever so many things. Come right into the nursery and hear him."

George went in.

"Now baby," says mamma persuasively, "Talk some to papa. Say, 'How do you do, papa?'"

"Goo, goo, goo, goo," says baby.

"Hear him!" shrieks mamma, ecstatically. "Wasn't that just as plain as plain could be?"

George says it is, and tries to think so, too.

"Now say, 'I'm glad to see you, papa.'"

"Da, da, boo, bee, bee."

"Did you ever?" cried mamma. "He can say everything! Now you precious little honey bunny boy, say 'are you well, papa?'"

"Boo, ba, de, goo, goo."

"There it is," said mamma. "Did you ever know a child of his age who could really talk as he does? He can just say anything he wants to: can't you, you own dear little darling precious, you?"

Goo, goo, dee, di, fioo."

"Hear that? He says, 'Of course I can,' just as plainly as anybody could say it. Oh George, it really worries me to have him so phenomenally bright. These very brilliant babies nearly always die young."

A Crisp Courtship.

A young man was employed at an office on the Western Union Telegraph Line. In the course of business he ascertained that the person having charge of a station in a small town some 70 miles distant was a young lady and that her name was Sarah. Forthwith, in an interval of leisure, flashed over the wires this message: "My name is Smith. How old are you?"

To which the answer was promptly returned:

"My name is Sarah. None of your business."

The next one ran thus:

"I am not married. What are you worth?"

To which the words came back: "worth a million."

As a climax the youth replied: "Will you marry me?"

The answer was "Yes," and in four months they were married.

On Friday night last three young men got on the roof of Mr. Sproule's store and threw a pail of water over the corner, where a number of boys were playing. One boy was the recipient of this peculiar kind of baptism. Two or three of his comrades ran around to the rear of the building, took away the ladder by which the young men got on the roof, and left the latter to get down as best they could. How they reached the ground, "history does not tell us."

Mr. J. B. Watson, the talented young Canadian orator and humorist, will give his brilliant, instructive and humorous lecture, "Mind Your Own Business, or the Eleventh Commandment," in Watson's Hall, Priceville, on Monday evening next. This lecture is well worth treble the price of admission charged, and was recently delivered in Flesherton with great acceptance. We can heartily recommend Priceville readers of THE ADVANCE and others to attend the lecture in their town on Monday night.

The constant success of The Illustrated London News (American edition) is not by any means a surprise when even the contents of a single week is considered. The supplement alone, giving an excellent colored portrait of Prince Bismark, is a valuable souvenir to possess, while in addition there are pictures of the Nizam of Hyderabad, two pages devoted to illustrations of the state of Ireland, another page of Our Troops in Burmah, one of Border Sketches in Kelso, one of Bristol Cathedral, and a most attractive picture of a little girl and a dog entitled Speak! The reading matter is as interesting and complete as ever, while the price for all is only ten cents. All newsdealers have it, and the New York office is in the Potter Building.

Ye Editor, family, staff, household effects, etc., removed to the new residence on Sydenham street—adjoining the printing office—of which buildings we shall have something to say in a future issue. On the same day Mr. J. Kester removed to the residence of Mr. R. J. Sproule, also on Sydenham street. The day was bright and full of sunshine and everything passed off pleasantly. Mr. Noble Lawrence, our energetic town carter, with the aid of his splendid and well-matched span of heavy draught horses, did the business in fine style.

Mr. Pennington, the well-known life insurance man—General Manager of the Provincial Provident Institution—delivered an interesting and instructive lecture in the Town Hall here on Monday evening, in which the contrast between the "old liners" and the assessment plan was vividly, strikingly and convincingly presented. He spoke very highly of the Ancient Order of United Workmen, of which organization there is a flourishing lodge in this place. The speaker showed that he was thoroughly posted on the great question of life insurance.

At the meeting of the Trustees of the Methodist Church, Flesherton, on Monday evening last, the members of that body were agreeably surprised by the presentation of a handsome silver Communion Service and Baptismal Font—six pieces in all—by Squire Armstrong. It was the wish of the donor that his name should not be publicly mentioned in connection with the matter, but Editors are apt to monopolize items of this kind, "whether or no," and when we accidentally heard of this graceful act of the Squire's, of course we at once dropped it in our "Tit-Bits" drawer, and lo! here it is.

A very interesting meeting was held in the Methodist church here on Monday evening, being called for saying farewell to Mr. R. Gordon and family, who leave here on Wednesday for their future home in Michigan. The church was filled. Rev. W. Ferrier and Rev. W. E. D'Argent gave short addresses, expressing regret at parting with one so much esteemed by all, and bidding him God-speed to his new home; after which Mr. Gordon was presented with a Watch and Mrs. Gordon with a Butter Dish as tokens of esteem from the many friends in this place. Mr. Gordon replied in a very kindly manner, after which mutual farewells were exchanged.

News has just been received of the death in London, England, of J. R. Stirling, the only son of Mr. Jas. Stirling, merchant of this place. The family are plunged in the deepest grief, as they had no knowledge of his illness. Consumption is said to have been the cause of his death.

BETTER THAN A DOG FIGHT.

Eight Lions Engage in a Dreadful Combat in a Cage at Liverpool—All Fearfully Injured—One Killed Outright—A Plucky Trainer.

A London cable says: Early on Tuesday morning there was a fearful and exciting battle in the Jubilee Exhibition at Liverpool. Delmonico, the most plucky tamer of beasts, had been exciting the nerves of the visitors for a long time by trifling in a cage with three big forest lions. Five more lions, of a different kind, but very big also, arrived from Africa that day, and were put at once into the big cage with the three already at home there. They had no training, but Delmonico went in among them and thrilled the crowd that filled the managerie by an unusually sensational performance. When he had done, Mlle. Kora, his partner, went in with the lions and took a little dog. This was repeated four times during the day, and the five new lions were too much stunned by the huge, noisy crowd about them and the repeated visits of the lady, gentleman and dog to think of anything else. Their astonishment had not worn off, and they were still quiet when left alone for the night by the attendants at 10 o'clock.

Shortly after midnight, however, the menagerie was filled with a frightful roaring and snarling, and a servant sleeping on the premises rushed in to find the big iron cage rocking and the eight lions fighting furiously, rolled up into a huge dark ball from which the blood-stained fur was flying in all directions. The huge beasts rolled over and over, dashing madly against the sides of the cage, and biting pieces out of each other with a ferocity that was sickening. All the sights organized to ratify man's fondness for fighting would have seemed the tamest child's play in comparison. After a while it became evident that there were two distinct sides in the battle, and the new arrivals were pitted at unfair odds against the lions who had been in possession. The efforts of the servant to separate them only increased their fury, and at last he rushed off for Delmonico, who was asleep near by in Edge lane. The tamer arrived half clad and found his lions bleeding fearfully but still fighting.

The battle was narrowing down to a duel between two of the biggest lions, which were rapidly biting each other to pieces in the middle of the cage. Occasionally the battle became general, and for a few seconds there would be a wild jumble of snarling lions with a savage crunching of teeth to tell how the flesh was being torn. The appearance of Delmonico with a red hot iron produced an effect, and all but the two chief combatants stopped fighting and crouched sullenly down, licking their bloody wounds and snarling encouragement to the two leaders. On these in their rage hot iron was useless, even when applied to raw flesh. The lions responded to the burning sensation only by tearing away at each other more fiercely.

At last Delmonico, fearing he would lose his two greatest actors, took a resolution which would probably not have occurred to any other man if the existence of the entire animal creation had been threatened. He entered the cage half clad as he was and shut himself in. He next opened a door communicating with a second cage and drove into it like so many sheep the six lions that had been looking on. Meanwhile the other lions were still fighting, although much weaker. Delmonico's attempts to separate them were useless. They paid not the slightest attention to him, and although in their struggles they dashed against him, they were evidently unconscious of his presence. Before the tamer could form any plan to separate them the fight ended of itself. The big forest lion, who had been defending his home against the five strangers, rolled over on his back, growled faintly, and died as the other seized him again by the throat. One of the front legs was gnawed off completely, a hind leg was chewed to a pulp, all of the mane and most of the neck was bitten away and the body was covered with blood, as was the entire cage. There was not on the dead lion any unbitten whole piece of skin large enough to have made a glove. He had fought for his rights just as long as he had been able to work his teeth and claws.

The victor seemed at first inclined to dash at the tamer and at the lions in the neighboring cage, but he changed his mind under Delmonico's eye, and after a weak but triumphant roar over the body of his victim he retired into a corner and moaned over his wounds. Although conqueror he was not to be envied. His mane was gone and his body looked as though an especially wicked harrow had been repeatedly dragged over it. Blood trickled from a hundred ugly wounds, and there is little hope that he will live. Curiously enough not one of the lions had its tail bitten off in the fray, which seems to indicate that some code of honor exists among lions which prevents them from making each other ridiculous, even in the deadliest combat. The other six lions will live, but they are badly bitten. The loss, if the second lion dies, will be about £400. In any case he will always remain a damaged lion.

The Quebec Murder Trial.

A last (Thursday) night's Quebec despatch says: The St. Nicholas poisoning case was somewhat unexpectedly brought to a conclusion at noon to-day. At 10 o'clock, when the court opened, the jury, who had been locked up all night, came in and reported that they could not agree, when the judge ordered them to be locked up again until 2 o'clock. It was said at the time that they were ten for acquittal and two for conviction. At noon they had agreed upon a verdict, and coming into court declared Mrs. Legace "not guilty." The result created quite a sensation. "Thank God I am clear!" ejaculated the accused, and Mr. Lemieux, her attorney, immediately moved for her discharge from custody. "You are liberated," said Judge Johnson, addressing Mrs. Legace. Then turning to the jury he said, "I have nothing to say to you about your verdict. It is you who are responsible. You are now free." Mr. Lemieux, who defended the accused, received, it is said, the largest fee ever paid here in a criminal case. His retainer is said to have been $1,500, with $1,000 extra if his client was acquitted.

The new organ for St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church, London, has arrived, and will probably be opened next Sunday.

WORK AND WAGES.

Grand Chief Engineer Arthur's Address to the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers.

A Chicago despatch says: The Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers met in convention here yesterday. Grand Chief Engineer P. M. Arthur delivered the opening address, in the course of which he said: "Perhaps to some our coming convention will be only a grand meeting of another army of fanatic laborers; but we believe that to most people, and certainly to the reading public, we are known as an organization of honest men, having honest intentions, which we ever have and shall execute in a straightforward, honest manner. We are enemies only to wrong in its various devices and garbs, and political schemes and aspirations have no place nor part in our association. A mighty army of men, representing 365 divisions, has gathered about a nucleus of twelve men who twenty-four years ago assembled in the city of Detroit and started an organization destined to be more than they then knew or dreamed of. To-day we number twenty-five thousand men. Taking all things into consideration, our relations, both to ourselves and with the various rilroads employing members of the brotherhood, are amicable. When we consider the dissatisfaction which is everywhere manifest about us, our few troubles fall into insignificance. The spirit of discontent walks unchallenged from ocean to ocean across our broad continent, whispering greedily into the ears of men, and so the cry is taken up until it becomes a deafening roar. It is but a short stride from the word to the deed, and every day in our papers we may read the result of this discontent. Labor of all kinds, from the most menial to the most skilled, with that cry still ringing in their ears while their judgment sleeps, has risen up and refused to work, preferring no pay to little pay, and with what result? Death, disaster and despair! There have been times and incidents when the strike was the only court of appeal for the workingmen, and the evil lay in the abuse of them. The methods used to bring about a successful termination of strikes, the abuse of property, and even of persons, has brought the very name into disrepute. While the troubles of the laboring man are rapidly becoming mere cant, and sympathy for him is dying out, more and more clearly defined is the line becoming which divides the honest man, satisfied with a just remuneration which he has truly earned, until by his own effort he can rise to a higher position in life, and the loud-voiced bomb thrower who, scarcely able to speak the English language, seeks to win his own comfortable living from those who have worked for it, presuming upon the imagination and arousing false hopes in the hearts of those who are still more ignorant than himself. Among sensible men the day for all this is past. Let 'mercy season justice' and justice be tempered with moderation. A wise arbitration looks to a long result rather than to immediate satisfaction and accomplishes more than intimidations ever can hope to do. Our first father earned his bread by the sweat of his brow, and from that ancient time to this enlightened age there has been discovered no honest way other than this. I congratulate you on the success of the past year, and would admonish you to be ever on the alert for the best interest of the cause which you have espoused."

Delegates are present from all parts of the country and Canada. Mayor Roche welcomed the visitors.

AT HYMEN'S ALTAR.

Romantic Wedding—Falling in Love with a Photograph.

A Paris cablegram says: The marriage of Miss Georgette Dana and M. Phillippe Berard, Secretary of Embassy at the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, took place at the French Protestant Eglise de l'Etoile, on the Avenue de la Grande Armee, to-day. Miss Dana is the daughter of Mr. Wm. P. Dana, the well-known American artist. The bride wore a handsome white satin gown with long train, trimmed with orange buds, and a long veil fastened with orange blossoms. The marriage was quite a romantic one, M. Berard having fallen in love with Miss Dana's portrait long before he met her. Both are well off in their own right, and it is considered on all sides a happy union.

Twenty Lives Saved.

An Antwerp cable says: The barque Bravo, from Charleston, reports that on September 20th, in latitude 38, longitude 49 west, she picked up Captain Cunha, Captain Cunha's wife, two sailors and sixteen passengers of the American schooner Carrie W. Clark. The Clark was bound from Fayal to Boston. She had encountered a hurricane on September 17th, and after terrific laboring, caused by the tremendous sea, a gust of wind struck the vessel and the mainmast went by the board, breaking off thirty feet above the deck. While the captain thought it best to desert the schooner, the crew and passengers to the number of 36 remained aboard, refusing to leave her, depending upon what was left of the mainmast to rig a sail on and bring the vessel into port. The Carrie W. Clark is a two-masted fishing schooner hailing from Provincetown, Mass.

From London This Time.

A London despatch says: London West was startled yesterday by news of the elopement of Miss Vodden, daughter of Mr. William Vodden, who lives near the corner of Dundas and Center streets, and George Moore, who resided on Oak street, and who leaves behind him a wife and five children. About a week ago Miss Vodden announced her intention of visiting a Mrs. Rogers in the country, and on Saturday last started off. The same afternoon Mr. Moore left ostensibly to visit an uncle at Port Stanley. Inquiry, however, reveals the fact that neither Miss Vodden nor Moore have been seen by the parties they were to visit, nor have the pair been heard of since. The lady in the case is said to be about 30 years of age, small, and not over good looking. Mr. Moore was a popular resident of the village and a property holder.

The official press of Germany in repeating its denial of the report that the Czar was to have a meeting with the Emperor William, uses language of plain and almost ostentatious enmity towards Russia.

THE ROTHSCHILD WEDDING.

An Imposing Ceremony—The Dresses of the Fair Bride and Her Attendants.

A Paris cablegram gives the following additional particulars of the great wedding of the week in that city: The wedding at the Jewish Synagogue of Mlle. Aline de Rothschild with M. Albert Edward Sassoon came off at 1 o'clock to-day with great eclat. Shortly before 1 o'clock the bride arrived. Mlle. de Rothschild is a brunette, very tall and finely built, with a thoroughbred patrician presence. She wore a long white satin dress, with flounces of English lace in the form of an apron, trimmed with orange blossoms. Her corsage was straight cut, with four rows of orange blossoms arranged like the braiding of a hussar jacket. Her headdress was a silver Russian diadem, partly covered beneath her long tulle veil.

Ten paces behind the bride walked the Baroness Gustave de Rothschild in peluche infernale, opening on an underdress of rose coral peluche, embroidered in heavy dead gold, with hood to match. Then came the Baroness Nathaniel de Rothschild, in pansy colored plush over panels of pale mauve, trimmed with gold; the Baroness Alphonse, in grayish blue moire antique, with an apron of electric blue, covered with Oriental designs traced in dark blue velvet. The Princess de Sagan appeared in a tight fitting fourreau dress of velvet and damas that clung to her fair form like a glove.

At the moment when the grand rabbi pronounced the last word of his address a group of eight young ladies dashed forth into the middle of the synagogue like a squadron of cavalry, all dressed alike in taille rose. Each wore a diamond brooch with the five arrows of the maison de Rothschild, with pearl and opal doves bearing an olive branch in their mouths—a present from the bride. Besides these young ladies there were fifteen ladies of honor, all with the same coiffure, namely: A delicious little mouse gray felt hat, trimmed with large pink ribbons and pink feathers.

At the moment when the squadron of eight young ladies collected in the centre of the synagogue a large crystal vase was dashed upon the stone floor and scattered into a thousand fragments by the grand rabbi, as indicative of the fragility of all things human.

TERRITORY OF DAKOTA.

The Year's Progress in Population and Wealth.

A Washington despatch says: Mr. Louis K. Church, Governor of Dakota, in his annual report says: "The Territory has had another year of wonderful growth in population and wealth. During the past year 2,067,281 acres of public land have been filed on, and 1,538,672 acres have been acquired by final proof and cash entry. Twenty-three million eight hundred and eleven thousand four hundred and forty-five acres of public land remain unoccupied. The population of the Territory is estimated at 568,477, an increase of about 68,000 during the year. The assessment of property in the Territory amounts to $157,084,365, an increase of nearly $25,000,000 during the year. During the building season of 1885,679 miles of new railroad were constructed, making a total of 4,208."

The report says that the season of 1886 was not altogether favorable to farming interests. The total area in corn, wheat, oats and flax in 1886 amounted to 4,712,764 acres, an increase of about one-third over last year. During the year 1886 there were raised 15,805,000 bushels of corn, 30,704,000 bushels of wheat, 20,651,000 bushels of oats, and 3,844 323 bushels of flax. On January 5th, 1887, the value of live stock in the Territory reached $42,828,338, an increase of nearly $500,000 per year for the last seven years.

A Modern Robinson Crusoe.

A Petoskey (Mich.) despatch says: Captain Bouchard, of the steamer Cummings, brings the following news: Mr. N. Phillips, of Grand Rapids, landed on Hat Island about two weeks ago. He was sailing in a small boat in the neighborhood of the Beavers. While looking over the place, which is uninhabited, he was greatly alarmed to see his craft break loose from its moorings and float out of sight in the direction of Cross village. After remaining on the island four days without food, in a fit of desperation he determined to make a raft and put out into the lake. He hoped some vessel would pick him up. Bits of boards and driftwood formed his materials, and after fastening them together as best he could with switches he launched the raft and floated away from the island. A fisherman named McCauley, of St. James, Beaver Island, happened to sight the raft, and when he reached it Mr. Phillips was nearly dead from hunger and exhaustion. He was taken to St. James and cared for. His boat was washed ashore at Cross village.

A Methodist Minister in Court.

A last (Friday) night's London (Ont.) despatch says: Rev. Wm. Chapman, for 25 years a Methodist minister, was charged at the Police Court to-day with violating the Medical Act. The principal evidence against defendant was that of Wesley Webb, who was appointed by the Medical Council to act as detective in such cases. He saw Mr. Chapman's circular, and went to his place and had some talk about a lump on his leg, which Mr. Chapman agreed to treat for $6. Afterwards he arranged to bring his wife, who had a lump behind her ear, for treatment. Mrs. Webb went there with her husband, and Mr. Chapman, after looking at the lumps, said his specific would cure it. He would give her a tonic to take and some liniment or salve to apply, charging for the latter and for the cure $2. She got a small bottle, paying 25 cents for it, and never went back again. The point was whether Mr. Chapman's dealing with Mrs. Webb constituted the practice of medicine. The Magistrate dismissed both cases.

The Rahway Murder Mystery.

LONDON'S UNEMPLOYED

Crowd Into Westminster Abbey and Jeer and Interrupt the Canon While Preaching.

A last (Sunday) night's London cable says: Several thousand of the unemployed, with a red flag at their head, marched in procession this afternoon from Trafalgar Square to Westminster Abbey, and although no invitation had been extended, 1,200 of the crowd were admitted. The flag was left in charge of the vergers. Inside the Abbey many of the unexpected visitors remained covered and indulged in whistling, while others mounted the pedestals of the various statues or mingled with the decent people present, who mostly left the building. The crowd, as a rule, chewed tobacco and expectorated everywhere regardless of the surroundings, until the first lesson was announced, when the reader was loudly jeered, completely drowning his voice. The second lesson was similarly received. Canon Prothero then preached a sermon, taking for his text Romans xii. 6. In his discourse he argued that the punishment of the lawbreaker was necessary for the good of the community. This was received with cries of "Oh, oh!" and "Bosh." The preacher earnestly appealed for order, and exhorted his hearers to try and uproot evil and plant good instead. "That's what we are going to do," was shouted, and received with cries of "Hear, hear," and cheers. Canon Prothero now threw his notes aside and addressed himself directly to the roughs. He said, "Legislation could alone provide a remedy for hunger and suffering, but everybody could express sympathy." (Loud laughter, followed by a voice "that's all we shall get.") Canon Prothero continued, "Charitable agencies might do much." (A voice, "We don't want charity, we want work.") The rev. gentleman enlisted the attention of the mob when he advocated State assistance in times of distress. At the close of his remarks the mob hissed and marched out of the Abbey, cordially cheered by their comrades in waiting outside. The whole crowd then proceeded, shouting and hooting, to Trafalgar Square, where the leaders denounced the Church and police. Several arrests were made of brawling persons and thieves.

GUILTY OF MANSLAUGHTER.

A Quarrel About a Yoke of Steers Results Fatally.

A Brockville despatch says: John Morris, a farmer, was tried before Judge O'Connor yesterday at the Brockville Assizes, charged with the murder of another farmer named Henry Doal. D. B. Maclennan, Q.C., of Cornwall, was for the Crown, and M. Saunders, of Kemptville, for the prisoner. Morris rented from Doal a house and some land in the 10th concession of Augusta. On the 12th of last August Doal went to Morris' house and got into a dispute with him about a yoke of oxen which both were claiming. A man named Thomas Streight was present, also Margaret Morris, aged 14, a daughter of the prisoner. The altercation was followed by a scuffle in which Doal was fatally stabbed, and he died the next day at noon. Doal's account of the affair, as given in his dying declaration sworn to before a magistrate, was as follows: "A difficulty arose between John Morris and myself about a yoke of steers that Morris had got from me to break. We had some words and Morris drew his whipstock to strike me with it. I caught hold of the whipstock and took it from him. Then Morris drew out his knife and I struck him on the arm with the whipstock. Then Morris stabbed me in the left breast or the left lung. It was a long dirk-knife that he stabbed me with." The evidence showed that the actual stabbing was witnessed only by Margaret Morris, as Streight left before the fight commenced. Mr. Saunders contended that the wound was inflicted in self-defence, and to support this called the daughter, who swore that Doal struck her father three or four times with the whipstock before the stab was given. Malcolm Boyd testified that Doal told him he expected a fight. After a brief absence the jury found the prisoner guilty of manslaughter.

WITHOUT A DOLLAR.

Sad Change in the Fortunes of One of Millionaire Mackay's Partner's.

A Kansas City despatch says: J. F. McKnight, a stranded California millionaire, appeared before the Mayor of St. Joseph, Mo., yesterday, and after representing that he had not a dollar in the world, begged a railroad pass to Kansas City, which was given him and he left for New York city, where he says he has relatives who will care for him this winter. McKnight was a partner of the millionaire Mackay in California for several years, was Mayor of Oakland and one of the most prominent men on the Pacific coast. He was a personal friend of the elder Bennett in New York when the latter had his office on Nassau street, and was Jay Gould's friend when Gould was brought into prominence by Jim Fisk. He had met and been on intimate terms with all the great men of his day, and had interesting anecdotes concerning them all. He lost his millions a short time ago, but was cheerful, although he had not a dollar. He says that he will return to California next year and build up another fortune. His clothes were seedy, and for dinner he had only a bun and a slice of cheese that cost him five cents. All his personal effects were tied up in a big red handkerchief. After he had finished his sandwich he lighted an old black pipe and seemed to enjoy it. In his downfall he retains his polished manner and is still in conversation and deportment the same elegant gentleman he was when he could draw his check for ten millions.

On 20th September last a plank was laid across the M. C. R. track one and one-half miles east of Waterford. It was supposed to be the work of train-wreckers, and since that time notices have been frequently posted up in the neighborhood warning people from travelling on the M. C. R. trains. The company now offer $500 reward for the conviction of parties concerned in the outrage.

IN THE FAR WEST.

A Hamilton Traveller at an Assiniboia Fair.

WONDERS OF PRAIRIE PRODUCTION.

SIR,—Moosomin is beautifully situated on the line of the Canadian Pacific. Although five years ago the site where now the town stands was part of the great uncultivated prairie, it has during this brief period steadily grown until now it contains good wide streets, several comfortable churches, a public school which is being enlarged and many good private dwellings. It has recently been made the military station of the Province of Assiniboia. It is also a fine distributing centre for the Moose Mountain district. This trade having grown extensively, Mr. R. D. McNaughton has been compelled to erect a fine stone warehouse, which is an ornament to the town, and a monument to the energy and enterprise of this worthy citizen. The hotel accommodation might have been suitable as a sheltering place for a stray traveller or the noble red man amid the wild storms which used to sweep over this open prairie in days gone, but civilization demands something more modern. There is a large Ogilvie grain elevator, with a storing capacity of 45,000 bushels. It was our good fortune to visit Moosomin during the annual fair, to which representatives of the Canadian press had been invited by W. D. Perley, M.P. for East Assiniboia. During the morning we —I say we, because I had to press very hard to procure a room in the Queen's Hotel, and therefore might be considered a fair representative of the press—were driven upwards of twenty miles over the prairie to see two farms and examine the splendid results of the most marvellous crop of wheat, barley and vegetables this Province has ever produced. Mr. Bobier owns 700 acres, and has 170 acres under cultivation. We saw some five sheaves of wheat which the owner assured us had been produced from one grain of Red Fyfe in two years. From here we drove on to see the farm owned by Mr. Neff, which consists of 5,000 acres, with 750 acres under cultivation. It is estimated that the average yield of both these farms will be thirty-five bushels of wheat to the acre, and the samples we send will show the quality of the grain.

If the Canada Pacific consult their own and the farmers' interests they will so modify their rates as to encourage larger cultivation of land now waiting to surprise its owners and the east with an average yield without a parallel, except in the Province of Manitoba. These farmers deserve every encouragement and consideration which the Canada Pacific can give, for they have risked all and lost much during the past few years, but 1887 has convinced them that this country has a future sufficiently tempting to the most timid agriculturist who is willing to work. Russian wheat has been tried, but given equal advantage the Red Fyfe has nothing to fear. The afternoon was spent visiting the exhibition, which did credit to all interested in getting it up. Mr. Crisp had a fine collection of grain and vegetables, and well deserved the several first prizes awarded him. Mr. Neff came to the front with fine samples of Red Fyfe, while Mr. Babie carried off the palm for barley, every grain of which was perfect for germination. There were also some sample kegs of excellent butter and cheese and a very good collection of fancy needle work.

The Agricultural Society gave a banquet in the evening, and the good things were duly appreciated. The "after dinner" speeches showed that the eastern press generally has very much underrated the possibilities of this country. With a little more attention given to mixed farming the farmer can secure a better competence with the same outlay than he can either in Ontario or Quebec. S. HUXLEY.

A Baby Among the Strong-Minded.

The Vermont W. C. T. U., at its thirteenth annual meeting, witnessed a pretty incident. Mrs. Phœbe Stone Beeman came into the meeting while the votes were taking, with her 16-months-old baby. Every mother of them welcomed the baby, little Lelia Stone Beeman. An escort was sent. The baby was brought to the platform. She looked smilingly over the Convention. Miss Willard took her in her arms, and moved that "the white-ribbon baby be made a delegate to this Convention." She passed to Mrs. Greene's arms, who said: "My department of kindergarten has received a baptism." Forthwith they elected Mrs. Beeman Secretary. The Jersey Come to Stay.

I expressed some weeks ago my fondness for the jersey, and my hope that all persons of the worthy sex who know that they have fine figures, or fear that they are too lumpy for gracefulness, will go on patronizing it. I am glad to find that the Grand Duchess Vladimir thinks as I do. Her feeling on the subject is that the jersey is the highest effort of the dressmaking art. She has it thin, and she has it thick, with a plushy inside; she has it high, and she has it low. Of the low kind I have this week been shown a specimen. It is in salmon silk. The upper edge is trimmed with a ruche of raveled silk set on an elastic band, which is fastened on at short distances. Nothing can be softer or more fluffy. One would think that with the first zephyr the whole thing would fly off like thistle-down, which in texture it resembles. There are no sleeves, but the ruche forms a shoulder band, and a pair of downy tassels falls from the middle of this part. The meagre-chested should not wear the low jersey; but the plump, or too plump, should adopt and cling to it obstinately. What, you see, is so objectionable to modest persons in a ball-room, is not the stripping of busts, but the forcing up of roundness toward the neck. That frontier line which Miss Rose Cleveland spoke of in her letter about low-cut waists, and which, unfortunately, she did not define, is displaced in the sense of upheaval. This is done not by the corset if it be all well made, but by the corsage. A jersey, low or high, forces nothing, and lends itself to every undulation. For this reason the stout and unstatue-like should wear it both in and out of the ball-room.—London Truth.

The Fashionable Girl's New Walk.

The new walk is neither graceful nor pretty. It is a kind of a waddle. The would-be fashionable young lady now walks as if she had no joints nor firmness to her. Every part of her anatomy seems to shake and wiggle as she goes. She comes down hard first on one foot and then on the other, seeming to rest her body alternately on each of her nether limbs. Her cheeks wobble, and so do her arms. I don't know any better way to describe it than to say she waddles like a fat duck. I don't know who is the originator of this fashion, but it is evidently going to be the thing this winter. All the girls put it on with their fall bonnets, and all over the streets you can see the little dears trying their best to be ungraceful in their efforts to be up to the latest "fad."—*N. Y. Finery Harmful to Children.

Children are overloaded with finery, destroying utterly their childish charm and grace; for they are either pertly conscious of "my best clothes" or they are rendered miserable by the necessity of so comporting themselves as not to rumple, tear or soil their fripperies—this being, with some mothers, the unpardonable sin.

New French Fancies in Feminine Attire.

Mrs. Crawford writes from Paris to London Truth as follows: "The ladies' tailors are all busy at costumes de chasse, by which they don't exclusively mean riding habits. Mobilization and autumn manœuvres being on their brain, the costumes have a military savor. Wraps to be worn in going to or returning thence are like hussars' jackets, but of soft flannel. The body of the shooting costume is a la fantassin and the skirt a la cantiniere. Dull colors are used, unless just in the facings. A show of bright red or blue would frighten the birds, who are apt to fly off whenever they see blues, purples or strong greens. Russets are the hues least alarming to the denizens of the forest. But they are not military. However, the ladies' tailors seem to think that they ought to be. The grays and browns and unbleached flax, and, indeed, neutral hues and coleurs rompues in general, have had their day, and a revival is showing itself of the bright, decided tones which were in favor up to 1870. Attempts are being made to adopt the swallow-tailed coat, waistcoat and shirt front to the feminine attire. Those who go in for this adaptation must drop the bustle. Now, I don't object to the bustle being shed; but what I tremble at is the probable lengthening of the skirt. Dress a lay figure with a gentleman's evening coat and short petticoat, and it will at once set you laughing. You will either have to reduce the swallow-tail to the "postilion" size or let down the skirt. The hat to harmonize with this style of garment—and play-goers may rejoice thereat—is to be a crush one, either low and flat, like a sailor's, or three-cornered and feathered, like a French General's. This headgear will, at the theatre, take the place of a fan. It won't last, but don't be surprised if it's the rage for a few seasons.

Revival of the Reticule.

It is understood that opera-glass bags and the dainty little plush pockets for handkerchiefs that our belles have for the past year been wont to carry about with them are to be superseded this season by the regular old-fashioned reticules that our grandmothers used to delight in. And, indeed, this fashion will certainly prove a charming one in many ways. A fashionable woman nowadays is obliged to take so many indispensable articles about with her that it is absolutely necessary to have some convenient receptacle in which to stow them, so that they shall be near at hand. Ordinary dress pockets are becoming almost obsolete, principally because modistes will persist in putting them in such out-of-the-way places that it is impossible to gain access to them. Everybody will surely welcome our grandmothers' reticules as a pleasing change. Of course, one must possess as many reticules as gowns, satin and silk ones to match evening toilets, and others of more sober cast for shopping purposes. They may be ornamented with lace and flowers or fur and feathers, and they may contain anything, from a batiste handkerchief to the latest design in enamel bonbon boxes. At any rate, every woman of taste will admit, that, from an æsthetic point of view, any kind of reticule—even one of the plainest pattern—will be preferable to those monstrosities in leather called shopping bags, and which are to be placed in the same category as ulsters and rubber cloaks. —Washington Post.

Fashion Notes.

School dresses for girls are made with a belted waist gathered to a yoke and a full gathered skirt. Serge, homespun, cheviots or gay plaid woollens are used for these dresses.

Coats for girls are made of rough-finished check goods having the Newmarket pleats, a belt clasped with metal clasps and a silk-lined hood. These are made either long or short and have also metal clasps at the throat. A new fancy for trimming for girls' coats, and even for the entire garment, is astrakhan cloth of rich dark red. When the entire jacket is made of this cloth, which almost perfectly imitates the real article, it is cut in plain jacket shape, with black frogs buttoning it down the front and trimming the sleeves.

Dresses for girls from 7 to 10 will show the nautical designs that have been so popular for the past two or three seasons Children of that age will wear pea-jackets and kilt skirts of serge trimmed with wid Hercules braid.

There will be an effort made to revive a modification of the Highland costumes for little boys as a relief from the long regime of the sailor. The pretty plaid velvets being introduced this season have given the idea impetus and one or two very pretty ones have been made. One of them has a kilt of grey velvet plaided in fine lines of red, buttoned upon a white shirt waist. A coat and waistcoat of gray cloth form the upper part of the dress; a red scarf is knotted under a wide white collar, plaid stockings, a little fillibeg and a Glengarry cap complete the costume.

The wide felt hats still popular for every-day wear for children are trimmed with voluminous bunches of ribbons of all shades. Frequently single quills are stuck through these ribbon clusters and sometimes two or three of them. Little close bonnets, without strings of course, and with a decided poke, are worn for dress occasions. These are trimmed with thick folds and poufs of velvet, with breasts of birds or little thick clusters of ostrich feathers. Some of these little bonnets are trimmed with unlimited yards of the narrowest width of point-edged ribbon made into pompons.

A supposed murder came to light at Quebec yesterday. Joseph Bourbeau, a boatman, at 6.30 yesterday morning, discovered the dead body of Thomas Moran, 45 years of age, lying on its face on a rock under the slip of the wharf in front of the city from which sail the steamers of the Saguenay line. L. M. Chase, of Boston, found a pear tree in his garden which the mice had girdled by eating the bark of the trunk, and it was dying. Mr. Chase planted four small trees around this tree and close to it, cut off the tops, pointed the ends, and, making incisions in the bark, bent the small trees and grafted them above the dead trunk. They all grew, and the tree draws its nourishment from the small ones and "still lives," for a bushel of nice pears has just been taken from it.

ONTARIO BUTTER CREAMERIES.

Price Realized for Milk When Made into Butter.

Last spring I addressed a couple of letters to the public press upon this subject, with a desire to call the attention of farmers and the public to the work the Ontario Creameries Association had in hand, and hoping thereby to incite some interest in the matter, not only among the farmers, but also those who handled the butter as middlemen, as well as the consuming public.

With the scarcity of butter that is likely to prevail in Ontario this winter, it is a great pity that we had not ten times the number of creameries that now exist. Again and again it has been stated in the public press that the butter of Ontario, judged as a whole, is a blot upon the fair name of the agriculturists of Canada. It has been justly claimed that in the production of cereals and stock Ontario enjoys a reputation second to no other country in the world; but in the quality of her butter, the majority of "stuff" put upon the market is a disgrace to the Province and to those who produce it. The butter producer, in common with the public, hold in detestation the

but did they ever consider that the responsibility of enabling oleomargarine to obtain such a foothold in other countries rests with them? At the Fat Stock Show of Chicago I have tasted oleomargarine which was in every way infinitely superior in appearance and flavor to three-fourths of the butter that can be bought on our markets and at our grocery stores. "How, then, are the public and the butter-maker responsible for its introduction?" Had the butter-maker produced a better article than he has been in the habit of doing, no chance would have existed for the introduction of a spurious article to replace a genuine one; but when the spurious article was, to all appearances and taste, superior to the genuine, a ready opportunity was given for the spurious to obtain a foothold. The public, too, I contend, are to blame—the rural storekeeper in that he pays the same price for a poor article as he does for a really superior one, if the makers both happen to be customers; and the public in that they will not pay a sufficient advanced price for a really A 1 butter. In other words—neither the storekeeper nor the public are prepared to pay for butter on its merits. I have had a little experience, through our dairies, in dealings with the public in this matter, and, though time and a "stiff back" have educated many of our patrons to pay us a living price for a really good article, it has required both to bring them to that stage. When more than 30 cents per pound is asked for butter the good and careful housewife raises her hands in horror at such "extravagance;" yet she would consider that 30 cents per quart for good cream was cheap. She may be surprised when I tell her that by her paying 40 cents per pound for butter the butter-maker does not realize as much out of his cream as when he is paid 30 cents for his quart of cream. It is a good gallon of cream that yields three pounds of butter, which will cost at least 15 cents to make and market. Selling cream at 30 cents a quart yields $1.20 per gallon, but made into butter, and selling as such even at 40 cents, it only realizes $1.05 (after deducting the 15 cents for making). For this reason, any one who is so situated that he can sell his cream as such will always prefer to do so rather than convert it into butter. Again, twenty-five pounds to thirty pounds of ordinary milk are required to one pound of butter; twenty-five pounds of milk equal ten quarts. When delivered at your door at 6 cents a quart—or 60 cents for the amount required to make a pound of butter—you do not think it out of the way to pay this price; yet butter at 60 cents a pound would be an unheard of extravagance. The average price received by butter-makers for a really good article will not exceed 20 cents per pound. As it requires ten quarts of milk to one pound of butter, the farmer at this price is receiving but

TWO CENTS A QUART FOR HIS MILK.

I repeat, it is constantly asserted that both the quantity and quality of butter produced in Canada are not what they should be, and wonder is expressed that Ontario does not take a more prominent position as a butter-making country. Farmers and farmers' wives are not singular when they seek to produce that which is most profitable, and though a return in butter of even 2 cents per quart for milk on the farm may appear to be a very small price, yet in these days of small margins of profit in farming it is a living one. Let the public display more willingness to pay a better price for a really superior article, and thereby give to the farmer's wife the incentive of a profitable industry as a stimulus to increase not only the quality but the quantity of butter produced on the farm, and I feel assured a great step will be taken towards helping on the butter industry of this country. I have known farmers' wives who, producing a really gilt-edge butter, owing to an felt that the extra pains necessary in the care of the utensils, milk, cream and preparation and marketing of the butter, was not sufficiently appreciated when they sought to dispose of it.

I give these figures to show how comparatively poorly paid is the milk producer who converts his milk into butter, and that before Ontario can hope to take a rank as a great butter-producing country the farmers have not only to be educated in the art of butter-making, but the consumer must also incite them to the production of what they seek by purchasing good butter on its merits, and paying such a price therefor as means a fair profit to the producer.

Some interesting law suits are probable between the Bruce County Council and the sureties of the Treasurer. The point involved appears to be how much the former defaulting Treasurer was short and the period of time when the defalcation took place. A joint meeting of the parties interested will take place on November 9th, when the situation will be discussed.

ALLEGED COAL FAMINE.

Circulars from the Delaware, Lackawana & W. R. R., Delaware & Hudson, Lehigh Valley & Pennsylvania Central Coal Companies have been received by all the local dealers to-day from headquarters, cancelling all existing contracts and withdrawing recent circular quotations. Copies of the same circular have been issued to every dealer in Canada and the United States simultaneously. In Montreal and Toronto stocks are fast running out, and little or no shipments are being made, pending the action of the New York coal barons. Ottawa dealers have a moderate supply of their winter stock in store and but twelve cars of nut are now on track here. It is likely there will be an immediate advance of 50 cents or $1 per ton throughout both countries. Ottawa dealers are short about 10,000 tons to complete orders already booked and for winter trade. The immediate causes of the famine are strikes in the coal regions, limited output, and increased consumption over that of last year.—Ottawa Journal.

Anti-Poverty Society.

As a result of the New York Anti-Poverty movement, branch societies have been formed in many places in the United States. The parent society has a by-law providing that twenty members of the society residing in any town or district outside of New York City may form a branch by adopting the constitution and agreeing to affiliate with the parent society. The condition of affiliation shall be the payment to the parent society of a fee of 25 cents for each member admitted to the branch, in consideration of which the parent society shall furnish for each branch member a certificate of membership bearing the autograph signature of the President and Vice-President. It is recommended that the initiation fee of branch members be the same as that of members of the parent society, viz.: $1. The following is the constitution: The time having come for an active warfare against conditions that, in spite of the advance in the powers of production, condemn so many to degrading poverty, and foster vice, crime and greed, the Anti-Poverty Society has been formed. The object of the society is to spread, by such peaceable and lawful means as may be found most desirable and efficient, a knowledge of the truth that God has made ample provision for the needs of all men during their residence upon earth, and that involuntary poverty is the result of the human laws that allow individuals to claim as private property that which the Creator has provided for the use of all.

Overfeeding Infants.

Over one-half of the mothers of children are unable to nourish them naturally, and a great number of the deaths of infants are caused by actual starvation. On the other hand, many deaths of infants are the result of overfeeding. I recollect, in illustration, a story told by Marion Harland of some foundling or orphan asylum which she knew. The mortality there worried the two attending physicians greatly, and they came to the conclusion that the babies were being fed too much. So they issued orders to the nurse to feed each child but once in every three hours, and resolved to try that experiment for a month. At the end of that time they were delighted with the result. The deaths had decreased, and the surviving children all looked rosy-cheeked and vastly more healthy than they had a few weeks before. They were exchanging congratulations, when one of the nurses came to them with an inquiry as to a modification of the rule with a very sick child. Speaking with her about the case they learned with astonishment that the good health of the infants of the institution had followed a misunderstanding of the doctors' directions by the nurses, who, instead of feeding their charges once every three hours, had fed them only three times a day. I have no doubt as to the truth of this, and the moral of the story at least is worth the attention of mothers.

A Liberal Auditor.

We heard the other day of a young minister who was "taken down" very handsomely by a bright little girl. He had been called upon quite unexpectedly to address a Sunday School, and to give himself time to collect his thoughts he asked a question.

"Children," said he, "what shall I speak about?"

A little girl on the front seat who had herself committed to memory several declamations, held up her hand and in a shrill voice asked:

"What do you know?"—Baptist Weekly.

Marriage of a Missionary.

Rev. Alexander McLachlan, who was recently appointed by a special American Board of Foreign Missions to co-operate with Rev. H. S. Jenanyan, of Tarsus, Asia Minor, in establishing at the latter place an institute for training native mission workers, was married in Toronto on Thursday to Miss Lizzie Stephens. The newly married couple will leave for New York in a few days, where they will be joined by Mrs. Jenanyan, and proceed to the birthplace of the great apostle in Armenia.

Mr. Henry Pritchett, of London, who was accidentally shot in the head with a toy pistol on Friday, is still alive and doing well. By an operation the splinters of bone have been removed and also a small shaving from the bullet, which is still embedded in the man's brain. No specially dangerous symptoms have so far been developed, and the medical men say that the chances are slightly in favor of the patient's recovery. A singular circumstance is the fact that until the surgical operation was performed Mr. Pritchett never lost consciousness.

Could I Say Thy Will be Done?

If the angel Death should come,
And enter my door to-night,
And, bending above my baby,
Look into her eyes so bright;
If he should press his fingers
Down on her little breast,
And say to the heart, Be silent,
Forever and ever at rest,
Could I kneel down and say,
"Thy will be done," oh, Lord, alway?

If, when the evening breezes
Sweep over the waving wheat,
I knew they had stirred the grasses
That covered my baby's feet,
How would their softest music
Lengthen into a moan!
In the twilight as it deepened,
How could I here alone
Kneel, and truthfully say,
"Thy will be done," always, always?

Mothers bereaved, to-day,
How can you bear the sight
Of beautiful lips grown pallid,
And cheeks that are waxen white?
How can you let the fingers
Slip from your loving hold?
How can you see dear baby
Pass from your sheltering fold?
Can you kneel down and say,
"Thy will be done," to-day?

I think I could hardly bear
To put my baby away;
To know that my care was over,
And she only beautiful clay.
Maybe, to the heart so stricken,
Is given a strength divine;
But often I sit and wonder,
If trial like this were mine,
Would I have strength to say,
"Thy will be done," always, always?

The final curtain fell on the first performance of "The Mousetrap" at Wallack's Theatre last Tuesday night in dead silence. The play is well written, but unpleasant in subject and treatment. A woman tries to poison her husband, is frequently prevented by a good old doctor, and finally poisons herself.

Minnie Palmer has made a pronounced hit in New York in her new piece, "The Ring and the Keeper," and "My Sweetheart." THE TRUTH.

Concerning Events Connected with the Flesherton Post-Office Burglary.

At the time of the Post-Office burglary here, some few weeks ago, certain rumors were floating around and certain statements were made, which were far from being creditable to all the parties concerned. So long as things were confined to a few people, it would not have differed very materially from ordinary gossip; but when the facts in the case were deliberately misrepresented to the Editor of this paper—thereby placing Mr. R. Trimble, merchant of this town, in a ridiculous position, and a position he was very far from being entitled to—then it became a serious matter.

Before proceeding further, we wish it distinctly understood, that we had not the slightest intention of injuring Mr. Trimble in any way by the publication of the item specially alluding to him. It was given us as an incident connected with the burglary and as such we published it pure and simple. We also wish to state, that it has ever been our aim to do strict justice to every man referred to in these columns, whether friend or foe. We have never departed from this rule in the past, and we will adhere to it in the future.

As matters were, therefore, misrepresented to us in the matter alluded to, we take this opportunity of giving Mr. Trimble's own version, in order that any rumors or statements in reference to the position that gentleman took in connection therewith may be corrected and even-handed justice done to all concerned. An ADVANCE reporter interviewed Mr. Trimble on Monday and the following is the substance of Mr. T's remarks. If we make any error in reporting, we hope Mr. Trimble will kindly correct us so that it may be set right in our next week's issue. Mr. Trimble said:—

"When the explosion occurred I was in bed. I immediately sprang out and opened the door leading out to the balcony. I fancied I saw the flash of a light in a certain part of Mr. R. J. Sproule's store, as though a lamp were burning. At first thought I imagined Mr. Sproule might have started a gang of men to work preparing the store for Mr. T. Bates, who was expected—at that time—shortly to take possession. Just then the front door opened and a tall, stout man walked out. I thought nothing of this, until he began very cautiously to move, in a listening attitude, towards the corner of Collingwood and Sydenham streets, when my suspicions were aroused. I went back and told my wife that I believed burglars were at work in Sproule's store, and I was going down to see if something couldn't be done to effect their capture. Hastily putting on a few clothes I descended the stairs and proceeded by way of woodshed to the rear of my store. I examined the door to see if it had been tampered with, but it was alright. I then cautiously walked along the platform and peered around the corner of my store. It was not cowardice on my part to do this. I was totally unarmed and singlehanded at that. I proceeded cautiously, simply because I did not wish to alarm the burglars, it being my intention to arouse detective VanDusen as speedily as possible and endeavor to effect the capture of the housebreakers—although, sir, professional burglars is the proper name to apply to them. Well, when I looked around the corner, I had a better view of the outside burglar, and distinctly observed a revolver glittering in the rays of the moon and firmly grasped in his right hand. His face, I also observed, was covered by a dark mask, completely concealing his features. I then returned and aroused Thos. Hollinger, one of my clerks, and despatched him by a short cut in the rear of the lots and buildings facing Toronto street to alarm detective VanDusen, as alluded to. He did so at once. I then passed up the walk between my store and dwelling house to the gate, upon reaching which I perceived the outside burglar had disappeared. At that moment two men came out of Munshaw's Hotel and started across the street in the direction of Sproule's store. I went in the same direction and discovered them to be Mr. Will Johnston and Deputy Sheriff Moore, who both acknowledged having seen the burglar outside, revolver in hand. Deputy Sheriff Moore had a revolver and while watching the burglar was in a quandary whether to shoot or not. He whistled, however, which scared the rascals and they made off. Mr. Sproule was aroused, but in getting ready for pursuit, and in one way and another, half an hour of valuable time was lost, which gave the burglars a good start and as you are aware they eventually eluded their pursuers—who were hot after them—and are still at large."

"Now, sir," said Mr. Trimble, "these are all the facts in the affair in so far as I was concerned, and I leave it to any honorable man whether the course I pursued justified the falsehoods published in the ADVANCE item, and which were manufactured out of whole cloth by your informants, whoever they were. I did everything possible under the circumstances to thwart the burglars. Nobody but a fool would have run up to a desperate professional burglar armed to the teeth, unless they were similarly armed. I was totally unarmed. Was it cowardice to act as I did?"

The reporter replied most emphatically that any sensible person would have acted exactly as Mr. Trimble had done.

"Now, what I blame you for," continued Mr. Trimble, "was that you did not come to me and get the full particulars as I have now given them to you. Then there could have been no mistake in the matter."

The reporter acknowledged that he now perceived it would have been better, but that then he had been assured by no less than three persons that the information furnished was correct, and consequently did not deem it necessary to call on any one else for particulars.

This ended the interview.

The only thing we blame Mr. Trimble for, was that he did not correct the erroneous statements contained in the item complained of the week following its publication. However, better late than never, and we now willingly and gladly give Mr. Trimble's own statements, which we hope will be satisfactory to that gentleman—whom we really esteem as an excellent citizen—and convince the public that THE ADVANCE is always willing to accord justice to everybody, regardless of race, creed or complexion.

If so send at once and get a bottle of "Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup" for Children Teething. Its value is incalculable. It will relieve the poor little sufferer immediately. Depend upon it, mothers; there is no mistake about it. "Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup" for children teething is pleasant to the taste and is the prescription of one of the oldest and best female physicians and nurses in the United States, and is for sale by all druggists throughout the world. Mr. Watson is a Canadian by birth and education and has very few peers in the lecture field of this country. His humor is irresistably funny, without vulgarity, and is spiced with many beautiful and common sense remarks. To-morrow (Friday) evening the people of this town and neighborhood will have an opportunity of hearing him deliver his brilliant lecture, "Pluck, Patience and Perseverance," in the Town Hall. There will be no charge at the door. After the lecture a collection will be taken up. Those dissatisfied will neither be asked or required to contribute. Nothing could be fairer than this.

Prohibition as a principle is now, we are glad to say, larger than any political party. It will crystallize soon. The party which carries it, it will carry, and the party against whom it arrays itself will be ground to powder; and it will be no great loss.—Northwestern Christian Advocate.

The Man For The Work.

A lawyer had a great reputation for collecting bad debts. It was to this lawyer that little Bob Finchley repaired when he was requested to run quick for a doctor, as a neighbor's child had swallowed a coin.

"Bother the doctor!" cried Bob; "run for Lawyer Johnston; he'll get the money out of him quicker than a dozen doctors."

A Popular Weekly.

The Detroit Commercial Advertiser is one of the few old established weeklies that is constantly adding to the value of its columns. Taken in connection with our own paper, our readers would find about every possible requirement in the way of current reading.

The first page has a column or so of first-class poetry and about six columns of well selected matter, mostly of a humorous character.

Page two is the story page, and in the issue of November 4 a continued story opened, and in point of real interest is said to outrival any previous serial. Its announced title is One Woman's Malice.

Pages four and five are the editorial and news pages and give everything of interest in the world's doings for the week, while the editorial columns show a fair and independent treatment of subjects.

Page six treats of Matters of Interest more especially of the new thought of the day on matters religious, social and political. This is a new department recently opened and has proven very popular with readers.

Page seven gives the weeks' market quotations and must be invaluable to the farmer, producer, merchant and business man generally.

Page eight is the farmerstead page and gives a vast deal of practical information on agriculture, poultry, etc.

Well-selected or original poetry appears on the second, third, sixth and eighth pages, as well as the first, and lovers of verse will find all they desire in each week's issue of the Detroit Commercial Advertiser, which, by the way, was established in 1861.

The publishers offer a special inducement for subscribers, in their Twenty-fifth Annual Premiums, January 25th, consisting of $25,000 among 100,000 subscribers, and also offer other privileges to subscribers, all of which can be learned by sending for a free sample copy. Why his Pa Couldn't Fill the Bag

We were paying a visit to a friend of mine the other day and the small boy of the family was as usual, showing off.

He had wrought the cat to a high state of frenzy: he had worried the canary bird until it looked like a a fretful porcupine on a small scale: he had tumbled his little brother upside down until the latter was red in the face, and it was impossible to tell which end was which end when a new idea struck him.

He produced a lot of paper bags, blew into them, one by one, until they looked as if the bags were blowing him up, and then he would crush them, producing a sound like the bursting of a dynamite factory.

"That's a great boy," said his father, proudly, and we thought so, too, and wished for a five minutes' executive session with him in the woodshed or cellar with nobody there to see.

"You blow one, papa," urged the boy, after a while.

The papa took one and began to blow into it. His cheeks filled out and his eyes bulged, but he couln't fill the bag.

The boy laughed.

Finally, unsuccessful, he threw the bag away and sat down exhausted.

"I know why you couldn't fill the bag, papa."

"Why my son," gasped papa.

"Becos I filled it full of pin holes, and you was tryin' to blow the room full of wind."

I don't know what we'll do, Jim; the rain's a coming fast,
I haven't got no money, and it's twelve o'clock and past.
Let's sit down in a doorway, the first as we can see,
We can maybe get to sleep there, if the "copper" let us be.

Here, come a little closer, Jim, you're youngest, d'ye see,
And the rain won't get so near you if you shelter behind me;
Put the matches in that corner, lad, and then they won't get wet,
There might be some cove come along as wants to buy one yet.

Does the rain come nigh you there, Jim? It doesn't? That's all right.
I wish we had a crust of bread to eat this cold, wet night;
I don't care much about myself, but I must keep you alive,
And if I can go without at ten, you can't at only five.

D'ye see that star up there, Jim, a-shining in the sky?
I wonder what the people does as lives up there so high
D'ye think our mother went up there to live inside a star?
I wish we could go too, lad, but it looks so far.

I'm afraid we'll not get there, Jim; but there, we scarcely know!
Tom, what lived in Seven Dials, died not very long ago,
And he said, when he was dying, that he saw a place all light,
And heard 'em singing, and saw folks all dressed in snowy white.

Do you feel the cold a deal, Jim? your hands are just like lead,
And stiff—why Jim! poor little Jim—ah, what!—he isn't dead?
And his soul's gone flying upward to the star-light far away.

The Sad Fate of Counting Nick.

Have you ever heard the terrible tale
Of Nicholas Perkins Poppingale
Who counted himself to death?
He began by counting railroad ties,
And then he fell to counting flies,
I'm sure it isn't any surprise
That he finally lost his breath.

A promising boy was little Nick,
But the counting fever made him sick:
I've heard of it before.
When he took a step he counted that,
He counted the purring of the cat,
And counted the inches measured flat
Of everything he saw.

When he tried to play he had to stop,
For he couldn't keep up the count, and hop
As fast as other boys.
It's hard to run and count your strides,
And count the other boys' besides;
And counting the pickets on sleigh-rides
Robs sleighing of its joys.

At every meal he counted each bite,
Which sadly impaired his appetite
And made him very thin.
He counted each cry the baby gave,
When he went to sail, he counted each wave,
He counted the snores of his brother Dave
And the hairs on his grandma's chin.

It's a pitiful tale and yet it's true;
And that counting boy was always blue,
I never saw him smile
It's all very well to count your cash,
But counting the winks of a friend's eyelash
Or the number of bites in a plate of hash
Is really not worth while.

SIR HUGH'S LOVES.

Fluff did not wait for his answer; she chattered on very much at her ease.

"Mother and Fern only think I am taking a walk, but I always meant to come and see grandpapa on my birthday. I should think he ought to be very glad to see me; and if he is not," here her lip quivered a little, "I should tell him he is very naughty to live in this beautiful house while poor mother is so poor, and goes out teaching." But, as she spoke, the door had opened softly, and a tall grey-haired man, with a thin erect figure, walked slowly into the room, leaning on Erle's arm, while Percy followed him.

Fluff gave a little exclamation at the sight of the two young men, and then ran towards Mr. Huntingdon, her broad-brimmed hat falling on her neck, and her dark eyes all aglow with excitement.

"I have come to see you, grandpapa," she said, holding out her hand with the air of a little princess; and then, as he did not take it, she continued rather piteously, "please, dear grandpapa, don't be angry with me, for I have come all this way of my own accord, and I am so tired and hungry."

If a thunderbolt had fallen in the midst of that stately room it could not have created a greater sensation.

Erle flushed and looked uncomfortable, a dark frown crossed her brother's face; Mr. Huntingdon's was inscrutable as usual, only a grey tint seemed to spread over his features, and there was a slight trembling in the hand that held Erle's arm.

Fluff looked from one to the other, and then she touched Erle coaxingly.

"Do ask grandpapa to be kind to me, Mr. Erle," she pleaded. "Percy is always cross, but you have been so good to me and Fern." But a stern voice interrupted her.

"Do you know this child, Erle? she seems to recognize you."

"Yes, sir," stammered Erle, losing color now as fast as he had gained it; his embarrassment was not lessened by the look on Percy's face. I have seen her when I have been with Percy. She is Florence Trafford, Mrs. Trafford's youngest child, and I expect what she says is quite true, and that she has come of her own accord, though I have no idea how she found her way here."

"How should you, Mr. Erle," returned Fluff, nestling up to her favorite, "when I never told you a word about it, or any of them either? why, bless me, the stupidest of all those stupid owls in the Zoological Gardens, that we laughed at so much, knew more about it than you did. Oh, you need not frown, Percy, you do not come half so often to see poor mother as Mr. Erle does, and he is far kinder to Fern."

"I think you had better hold your tongue, Fluff," replied her brother; but he evidently enjoyed the sight of Erle's discomfiture. "I don't see why you are to be troubled with this sort of scene," he continued, addressing Mr. Huntingdon, who was eyeing Fluff gloomily all this time. "If you wish it I will ring for Roger to take her home."

"No, no, let her be for a moment," he replied, quickly; and Fluff who had looked terrified at Percy's proposition, came closer and rubbed her curls delightedly against his coatsleeve.

"That's right, grandpapa. I have not spoken to you yet, have I? and I have so much to say, I was that little baby you know whom mother carried through the snow that night. "Yes," as Mr. Huntingdon shuddered, "I heard mother tell Fern all about it one night when they thought I was asleep—only I got sleepy and lost half; but I said to myself, 'I shall go and tell grandpapa that poor mother is very miserable and unhappy, and that he must come and take care of her.'"

"There, there, you have said your lesson very prettily," observed Mr. Huntingdon with a sneer. "Children are apt parrots;" but Erle saw that his sneer was forced, and that he sat down like an old man, and he said, earnestly:

"Oh, sir, do not think so badly of your daughter. She has not sent the child on this errand. I would stake my life on it."

"And how long have you taken upon yourself to defend my daughter, Mrs. Trafford?" asked his uncle coldly. Erle almost repented of his generous impluse when he heard that hard relentless voice. They had not noticed their visitor, and Raby, at the other end of the great room, lost much of what was passing, he was so absorbed with his own bitter disappointment. As Erle was silent a moment, Mr. Huntingdon repeated his question.

"Since he knew I had a pretty sister," replied Percy, carelessly.

Erle turned round and their eyes met, but Percy's fell before that glance of utter contempt; Mr. Huntingdon intercepted the look between the young men.

"I was not speaking to you, Percy," he observed, curtly; "I should have thought it was your place to take your mother's part, but you choose to be silent. Well, it is no affair of mine. Erle, will you be good enough to answer me a question or two, and then I will trouble you to send the child home. How often have you visited at my daughter's house?"

"I can hardly answer that question, sir; I have been several times."

"Did Percy take you?"

"In the first instance, yes; but I have been there alone too," for Erle's truthful nature scorned subterfuge. The crisis he had dreaded had come on him at last; but Percy should not see that he was afraid. He might be weak and vacillating, but he was a gentleman, and a lie was abhorrent to him. Percy's innuendo might work deadly mischief, but all the same he would not shelter himself behind a falsehood.

Mr. Huntingdon's hard look involuntarily softened. This show of manliness on his nephew's part pleased him.

"Of course you went there knowing that I should disapprove of such visits. Tell me, is this Fern of whom my grandson speaks so very attractive?"

"She is very pretty."

"That is all I want to know. Now will you order the carriage to take the child home? No, stop, I think Rodger had better fetch a cab." But at this point Fluff began to cry.

"Oh, I am so tired and hungry," she sobbed, "and all those dreadful bones in my legs, and the crier not come yet. What is the good of a grandpapa if he has no cakes and things, and on my birthday too!"

Mr. Huntingdon smiled grimly.

"Very well, order the child some refreshment, Erle. After all she is but a starved bit of a thing; see she has what children like best. Percy, come with me a moment, I want to speak to you."

"Oh, thank you, grandpapa'" exclaimed Fluff, cheering up at this; and as the door closed on Mr. Huntingdon, Erle knelt down by the child, and wiped the tears from the tired dirty little face that had brought such trouble to him.

And the heart of Fluff was glad within her, for they brought her fruit and cakes and sweet wine on a gold salver, so that she feasted like a king's daughter, or like the Princess Dove herself; and Erle sat by and watched her all the time, though he looked rather grave and unhappy, Fluff thought.

Both of them were rather startled when Mr. Ferrers groped his way towards them. He had been hidden by the curtain, and Erle had not noticed him.

"Mr. Erle, if you will allow me, I should like to take the child home."

"Of course," rousing himself, and looking a little bewildered, "we were both to have gone this evening. I had ordered the brougham, but I am afraid now that I must ask you to excuse me. There are circumstances—and," here Erle paused and bit his lip.

"There is no need for you to go," returned Raby, sorrowfully; "the bird has flown. This child," putting his hand lightly on Fluff's curly head, "told me before you came in that Crystal had gone to America—she started this morning."

"To America?" exclaimed Erle, in an incredulous voice.

"Yes, but she has told me no particulars. It is hard, very hard, is it not? I find one does not get used to disappointment. It is a heavy blow to my faith. I thought that to night we should certainly have met."

"I am awfully sorry, Mr. Ferrers, I am indeed. I wish I could have come with you."

"You could not help me. I will take the child home, and talk to those kind friends who have sheltered Crystal; at least I shall hear about her and know her future movements."

"I think I hear the cab, Mr. Ferrers, and Fluff is fast asleep."

"We will not wake her, poor little thing," returned Raby, lifting her up as he spoke. Fluff grunted contentedly as her head dropped on his broad shoulder. Erle watched them as Roger guided them to the cab. How he longed to accompany them. The next moment he turned with a start, as his uncle's slow footstep paused beside him.

"Erle," he said, "look at this," and he held out a costly ring, a half hoop of diamonds. "I have heard all I wish from Percy. His sense of honor is none of the finest, but he is useful to me. You and I need not heat ourselves in a perfectly useless discussion. Miss Selby has a right to expect this ring. You are treating her very shabbily, Erle. Come to me to-morrow and tell me you have placed it on her finger."

"And if I refuse?" Erle's pale lips could hardly frame the question.

Mr. Huntingdon smiled ironically.

"I do not think you will refuse, Erle. You are too much a gentleman to treat a woman badly. All the world is saying you and Miss Selby are engaged. You can hardly allow a girl to be talked about."

"But if I prefer another?" stammered Erle.

"Tut, tut, boy, you will soon get over your fancy," returned Mr. Huntingdon, impatiently. "Most young men have half-a-dozen flirtations before they settle down. I suppose I need not tell you that I strictly prohibit any visits to Mrs. Trafford for the future. If you infringe this rule it will be at your own risk;" and then he continued more earnestly—"Erle, I am determined you shall not disappoint me. You are my adopted son, and, I trust, my future heir. I have a right to count on your obedience. Come to me to-morrow, and tell me you and Miss Selby are engaged, and all will be well between us." Then, pressing his shoulder gently, and in a voice no one had heard since his daughter's loss—"I am an old man, and my life has not been a happy one. Do not let me feel that you have disappointed me too."

CHAPTER XXVIII.

"I WANT HIM SO."

No shade has come between
Thee and the sun;
Like some long childish dream
Thy life has run;
But now the stream has reached
A dark deep sea,
And sorrow, dim and crowned,
Is waiting thee.

Adelaide Anne Proctor.

Fluff woke up before they reached their destination, very much refreshed by her brief nap. When the cab stopped before the side door of Mrs. Watkins', and she caught sight of Fern standing on the threshold, as though she had been waiting there some time, she gave a little cry, and literally jumped into her sister's arms.

"Oh, Fluff, Fluff! what does this mean?" exclaimed poor Fern, who had passed a most miserable afternoon, picturing Fluff being borne in a policeman's arms to the nearest hospital; but Fluff silenced her by an embrace so vehement that it nearly produced strangulation.

"It is all right, Fern, so don't scold me. Grandpapa was not so very angry—at least, only just at first; but he sent me in the beautifullest supper, such nice things on a big gold plate—really gold you know, like Princess Dove's; and Mr. Erle was there, and Percy—and oh! I forgot the poor man in the cab, who is blind—quite blind, but he is very nice too."

"Will you let me explain about your little sister, Miss Trafford," said Raby in his pleasant voice; and Fern, turning in some surprise, saw a very tall man in clerical dress standing beside her, as she afterwards expressed it to her mother, "with the very nicest face she had ever seen." "I do not know if you have ever heard my name; I am Mr. Ferrers, and your friend Miss Davenport, as she calls herself, is my sister's cousin."

"Oh yes, I know," and Fern's voice grew pitiful all at once; "and you have come just as Crystal has left us; did Florence tell you? Oh, I am so sorry, so very sorry."

"Yes, the child told me; but there is much that I want to ask you. May I come in? the cab will wait for me." And then, as Fern guided him up the narrow staircase she told him that her mother was out—an evening class had detained her; and she had been thankful that this had been the case, and that she should have been spared the anxiety about Fluff. Mrs. Watkins' boy was scouring the neighborhood, making inquiries of every one he met; and she had made up her mind to send for her mother when the cab drove up.

"And she really found her way to Belgrave House," asked Fern, in a voice between laughing and crying; "oh, what will mother say," and she listened with eagerness to Mr. Ferrers account of how the child had accosted him, and of her meeting with Mr. Huntingdon.

Raby himself had been much mystified he had known nothing of his host's past history; he had thought that the child was only paying an impromptu visit until she mentioned her name. Erle had told him that Mrs. Trafford was Mr. Huntingdon's daughter, and that he had never seen her since her marriage. This clue guided him to the meaning of the sternness in Mr. Huntingdon's voice; but he had hardly understood in what way Erle was implicated, or why the child should receive so little notice from her brother. When Raby had finished his account, which was annotated in a rambling and far from lucid manner by Fluff, Fern sent the child away to change her frock and make herself tidy, and whispered in her ear that she might stay with Mrs. Watkins for a little; and when Fluff had left them she began to speak of Crystal, and to answer the many questions he put to her without stint or reserve; she even told that Crystal had left them on account of Percy's mad infatuation.

"It was very wrong of Percy to take advantage of her unprotected situation, and I am sure she went to put a stop to it, and because it was so awkward for us. Crystal is not like other girls—she does not care for admiration; people turn round and look after her in the street because she is so beautiful, but she never seems to notice it."

"No; you are right," he returned, with evident emotion. As Fern spoke, a scene rose to his memory—a fresh young voice behind his chair seemed to whisper in his ear, "Oh king, live for ever!" and there she stood, his dark-eyed Esther in her girlish loveliness, her white neck and arms gleaming through lace, a ruby pendant on the slender round throat, the small head looking so queenly with its coils of smooth black hair; and he had turned coldly from her, and she never knew that his was the soul of a lover. "No; you are right," he answered, gently; "she was as guileless and innocent as a child."

Fern looked at him wistfully; all her heart seemed to go out to this sad, noble-looking man. Crystal had not said too much in his praise; but he looked older than she had imagined—for pain and the knowledge of his shorn and wasted powers had aged him, and there was certainly no youth in his aspect.

"Oh," she said, eagerly, for she longed to say something that would comfort him, "I think sometimes that there is no one so good as Crystal—we have all grown to love her so. She has such high-spirited, troublesome pupils; but she is so patient with them. When they are ill, she nurses them, and she has more influence over them than the mother; and she is always so kind and thoughtful, and no one ever sees her cross. She is angry with Percy sometimes; but then he deserves it; and she will not take any pleasure, but all she thinks about is to do little kindnesses for people; and though she is so unhappy that she has grown quite thin from fretting, she tries not to let us see it."

"Has she told you about herself?" he asked, in a very low voice.

"Yes, and it is that that makes her so unhappy. Oh, she told me all about it, and I thought she would never, never stop crying—it preys upon her mind, and her remorse will not let her be happy; she seems to dread even forgiveness. 'I go back to him when I have blighted his life, and darkened his days?' oh! you should have heard the despair in her voice when she said that, Mr. Ferrers," and here Fern's sweet tones trembled. "Mother and I sometimes think it will kill her in time, unless she has help and comfort."

"Do not fear, Miss Trafford, she shall have both soon; it will not be long before I find her."

"But she is in America—at least she is on her way there."

"There are other steamers than the one in which she has crossed," returned Raby, with a smile. "I suppose she means to write to you?"

"Oh yes, she will write from every place—she has promised me long letters, and of course Mrs. Norton will hear from Miss Campion; do you really mean to follow her, Mr. Ferrers?"

"Yes, to the world's end if it be necessary. I have a strong will, and even blindness will not hinder me. Tell me how did she seem last night; did she leave cheerfully?"

"Well, no, Crystal puzzled us last night," returned Fern, quickly; she went out to bid good-bye to her pupils, and Percy waylaid her as usual, but she got rid of him somehow but she was out a long time, and she would not give us any reason; but when she came back her eyes were swollen, and she had a dreadful headache, and yet she said Percy had nothing to do with it."

A sudden, wild idea flashed into Raby's mind. "How was she dressed, Miss Trafford—I mean what colored gown did she wear?"

Fern seemed surprised at the question. "Oh, her old brown gown—she was all in brown, I think;" but she did not understand why Mr. Ferrers seemed so strangely agitated at her answer.

"The tall young lady in brown, who seemed to notice you wanted help;" he remembered the words of Miss Merriman. Good Heavens! it must have been she; it must have been her little hand that guided him so gently; oh, his miserable blindness. Of course she had seen this Percy Trafford, and he had told her all about the guest they expected, and she had come to the station just to see him once again.

But he would not speak of this to Fern; his darling's secret should be kept by him; he would hide these sweet proofs of her love and devotion in his own breast. Fern wondered why the miserable harassed look left his face. He looked quite young—a different man—as he bade her good-bye; his shoulders were no longer stooping, his head was erect.

"Good-bye, Miss Trafford," he said. "I shall come and see you and your mother again before I leave. I shall go back to Sandycliffe next week, and set my house in order, and talk to my sister. I do not doubt for a moment that she will offer to accompany me. I shall not come back until I bring Crystal with me." And Fern quite believed him.

There were restless sleepers that night in Belgrave House. Raby was revolving his plans and wondering what Margaret would say; and on the other side of the wall Erle tossed wakeful and wretched, knowing that his fate was sealed, and that Evelyn Selby and not Fern Trafford was to be his future wife. And now, as he lay in the darkness, he told himself that in spite of her goodness and beauty he could never love her as he loved Fern. He knew at the moment he asked her to marry him, and when she put her hand in his and told him frankly that he had long won her heart.

"You are too much a gentleman to treat a woman badly," Mr. Huntingdon had said to him well knowing the softness of Erle's nature; and yet, was he not treating Fern badly?

He had thought over it all until his head was dizzy; but his conscience had told him that his sin against Fern had been light in comparison with that against Evelyn. What were those few evenings in Beulah Place compared to the hours he had passed in Evelyn's society?

He had been in Lady Ma travers train for months; he had suffered her to treat him as a son of the house. He had ridden with Evelyn in the Row: she had been his favorite partner in the ballroom. When they had gone to the opera, Erle had been their escort. It was perfectly true, as Mr. Huntingdon said, that she had a right to expect an offer from him; their names had long been coupled together, and Erle's weakness and love of pretty faces had drawn the net round him. And there were other considerations that moved him—his dread of poverty; the luxurious habits that had become a second nature; and, above all, reluctance to disappoint the old man who, in his own way, had been good to him. Erle knew that in spite of his hardness and severity his uncle clung to him as the Benjamin of his old age.

No, he could not help himself, he thought, bitterly. And yet how dreary the prospect seemed. He had given up the first young love of his life; and now the barren splendors of Belgrave House seemed to oppress him—the walls closed round him like the walls of a prison.

And yet other men would envy him, and wonder at his luck. Evelyn had many admirers—many a one nobly born and nobly gifted would grudge him his prize; though he knew, and hated himself for the knowledge, that they envied him in vain.

Erle found it difficult to play his part well; but his young fiancee was too unsuspecting in her happiness to guess at her lover's secret trouble. His slight gravity spoke well for him, she thought; most likely a greater sense of the responsibility oppressed him. She was too much in love herself to notice how often he relapsed into silence.

Every one thought him a most devoted lover; he was always at his post—always ready to escort them to picture galleries and flower shows, or to stand sentinel at the back of Lady Maltravers' box. His uncle's generosity enabled him to load his betrothed with gifts. Evelyn used to remonstrate with him for his lavishness, not knowing that Mr. Huntingdon had prompted the gift.

"Of course I love you to bring me things," she would say, looking up in his face with her clear candid eyes; "but indeed, dear Erle, I do not need so many proofs of your affection."

"I feel as though I should never do enough for you, Eva," he answered, hurriedly; "you must not refuse to let me give you things. I am always thinking how I am to please you;" and as he clasped the diamond bracelet on the slender wrist, he suddenly remembered what a pretty hand Fern had, so white and dimpled, and a vivid longing came over him, turning him nearly sick with pain, to see that sweet face again, and to hear from those frank beautiful lips that she was glad to see him; but he never yielded to the temptation.

On the contrary, he had put all such visits out of his power; for he had written to Mrs. Trafford within a few days of his engagement, telling her that his uncle had interdicted them, and that he dare not risk his displeasure, deeply as he regretted such a break in their intercourse; and he told her that he and Miss Selby were engaged and would probably be married in the autumn: and then he sent his kind remembrances to her daughter.

Mrs. Trafford thought it a very manly and straightforward letter. He had not acted so very badly after all, she thought; her father's strong will had evidently coerced him, and she knew how strong that will could be. He had meant no harm; he had only said pleasant things because it was his nature to say them; if only it had not gone very deep with Fern.

"I have had a letter from Mr. Erle, my darling," she said, quietly, as she noticed that the girl had turned a little paler, as though she had recognized the handwriting; but she had not spoken, only bent lower over her work.

Lively Canadian Horses.

An English paper gives the following account of an occurrence mentioned in our special cables: On Wednesday afternoon an extraordinary scene occurred at Woolwich. Between 30 and 40 Canadian horses arrived at the T Pier, Royal Arsenal, in the steamship Thorndale, from Montreal, to be broken in for military purposes. They had been a fortnight on board in stable fittings, and the scene on arrival at the arsenal being evidently different to anything they had previously experienced they became frightened and uncontrollable. Forty horse artillerymen had been sent down from the barracks for the purpose of leading them to the remount establishment, Woolwich Common, but they could do nothing with them. One of the animals jumped overboard from the vessel and alighted on the pier, causing a panic to seize the whole herd. The infuriated animals broke loose and galloped about the arsenal in the wildest manner. They were ultimately driven to the main gates, where they were stopped. Another attempt was made to capture them; but they kicked and resisted with all their strength, and the attempt had to be abandoned. Passing through the arsenal gates the horses rushed into the streets, where it was feared they would create a general panic. With some determination and presence of mind, the artillerymen made an attempt, which happily succeeded, to turn the affrighted animals into the road leading towards the barracks, and thus confined them to one thoroughfare, limiting the terror of the foot passengers to the one street. On reaching Woolwich common (a square mile of grass land) they were allowed to gallop, and they gradually tamed down. A sufficient force of artillerymen turned out, and they were ultimately secured and taken to the Remount, from whence they will in the course of a few weeks be turned out perfectly docile and tractable.

Good Cause for Alarm.

Occasionally the servant has really reason to find fault. A man appeared at an intelligence office the other day and engaged a girl for general housework. "Have you any children?" asked the maid before she closed the bargain. "Only a few," he replied, and she took this to mean two or three. She arrived at the house just at breakfast time the next morning and was surprised to see nine little ones filing into the dining-room. "Are there any more?" she gasped. "Well, yes," answered the proud father, "there are the twins, who cannot walk yet, and the baby." The girl did not stop to unpack her trunk.

Disestablishment in Wales.

Church disestablishment in Wales is foreseen by many of the strong friends of the Establishment. Bishop Brumby told the Church conference a few days ago that he could see the wave of disestablishment coming nearer and nearer to the shore, and he added, "If the Church has maintained her hold on only 25 per cent. of the population she has no claim to 75 per cent. of the endowments." This sentiment was not applauded.

Mr. Sampson Concluded to Go.

"If I were to tell you, Miss Smith," he said, in a low, earnest tone, "that I am about to start on a long journey, even across the sea, and that it may be months, and possibly years, ere I return, what would you say?"

If the girl drooped it wasn't perceptible. "I would say, Mr. Sampson," she replied, "Ta, ta."—Harper's Bazar.

A GERMAN steamship recently took to Colon from Africa 700 Liberians, men of gigantic stature and powerful physique. They were half naked, carried queer-looking bundles upon their shoulders and spoke a language which no one else on the Isthmus understood. It is said that 1,500 more will follow, and that these men will work on the Panama Canal.

Rural Canadian: A young and enterprising Canadian, Mr. H. M. Mathewson, who has been carrying on farming operations in Dakota for the past two or three years, states a fact which friends and opponents of freer trade relations with the United States may be invited to make a note of. He has a flock of Shropshire grades, and he sold their clip of wool this year at a village market for 19½ cents per poud. The price paid for the same grade of wool in Toronto was only 14½ cents per pound. The United States duty on such wool is 10 cents per pound. Would the Ontario farmer or any other Ontario man be the worse or better off could an extra 10 cents per pound be procured for our Ontario wools?

MRS. CLEVELAND is winning laurels as a wire-puller, but her "wire-pulling," as it is called, seems to be only the instinctive kindliness of heart that impels her to endeavor to make every one comfortable. A recent incident shows this characteristic: An old man at the St. Louis Fair asked to be introduced to Mrs. Cleveland, as he believed he was related to her. He was presented. "So you are a connection of mine," she said sweetly. "There was an Elisha Folsom some where back four or five generations who was a great-great-grandfather of mine, and, I think, of yours,' the old man answered bashfully. "Now, let me see," she said; "pray, sit down. There was an Elisha Folsom who married ——." The pretty little woman rattled off the names of her relatives, and glibly showed him that of course they were relatives. Five minutes after the old gentleman was relating the incident to everybody. She won him for life.

THE Sultan of Morocco, who was recently reported dead, seems to be alive and kicking. A recent cablegram says he is now engaged in carrying out an original device for preserving discipline in his harem. Having received a bicycle as a present, and being deterred by the appreciation of his own dignity from attempting to conquer it, he used it as an instrument of torture, or a sort of coercion machine, for the unruly among his better halves. A bad wife, if a friend of the Sultan may be believed, is mounted on the machine and condemned to endure from five to twenty-five falls, according to the gravity of the offence. To see such a punishment would be worth travelling miles through the desert, when one considers the helpless rage of a plump lady, transferred from a cushion in the harem to the leather seat of a bicycle, her costume so ill-adapted to such sport, and a picturesque background of the Moorish police force and the black old Sultan laughing until his sides ache at the result of his own cleverness.

HAPPENING to want a place to strike a parlor match to light a gas-stove, says a writer in the Chicago Journal of Commerce, I struck the match upon the stove over the gas. The gas ignited, but the match did not. I laid the match aside, and as the gas-burner was wanted I used the same match until I have lighted it twenty-three times, and the match is apparently as good as ever. Cannot some one invent an improved lighter from this suggestion?

FURTHER investigation shows the New York Post that there are thirty-five widows of revolutionary soldiers still drawing pensions, some of them less than 80, in good health and likely to be alive in 1900. It therefore regards it as probable that the United States Government will still be paying pensions in the year 2,000 on account of the war of the rebellion. The marriage of a young woman to an old soldier may come to be regarded as one of the most profitable investments possible.

ASHEVILLE is the only place in North Carolina where the President and his party will stop. Asheville is in Buncombe county. This county was named after Col. A. Buncombe, of Buncombe Hall, near Edenton, who came of a fine old English family. He raised, equipped and led a regiment in the Revolutionary war. Fifty years ago the representative from that county in the State Legislature made a florid speech on a local issue which he innocently explained was especially intended for Buncombe. Thus originated an expression which has now a permanent place in the language.

COL. E. B. DICKENSON, President of the New York State Stenographers' Association, regards Phillips Brooks as the fastest speaker in this country, if not in the world. No one stenographer can report him accurately, and the only way he can be reported with any degree of satisfaction is by two experts who compare their notes after they have written them out. Mr. Beecher, he says, was an easy man to report. He considers ordinary speakers who haven't any idea in their heads and yet think they must speak as giving the hardest work to stenographers.

THE Prince of Wales, when he took his morning draughts at the Homburg Springs, dazzled beholders with an amazing costume. It was made apparently out of a snuff-colored blanket, delicately set off by a red silk handkerchief tied around his neck so as to show above the collar a "thin red line." This striking costume was based on tan leather shoes and crowned by a light gray felt Tyrolean hat. A white Pomeranian dog followed at his heels. His invariable salutation to his feminine acquaintances was: "Are you drinking the watahs this morning."

GOVERNOR OGLESBY, of Illinois, who is just now being watched with particular attention to see what he will do in the case of the Chicago Anarchists, was born in Kentucky in 1824. He began his career as a carpenter at $1.50 a day. He received less than a regular course of common school education, yet after he had worked for some time at the bench he made a strike for the bar. After practising law for a while he fought in the Mexican war, and was one of the California gold diggers of '49. When he came back from digging gold he entered the political arena, and has been three times elected Governor of Illinois.

THE Indian prince, the Thakore Sahib, who recently visited Hamilton and other leading points in Canada, on his departure from here recently, was questioned concerning his impressions of the country. Among other things he said: "I think your women are superior to your men. They are handsomer, better dressed, better conversationalists and apparently better educated; but your men, I believe, are the hardest working and most energetic in the world." The Thakore Sahib may have a hard name, but he evidently has a level head.

IN consequence of the many requests made to Mr. Gladstone for chips from trees felled by him, the following circular has been prepared and is forwarded to applicants: "In reply to your letter to Mr. Gladstone I have to say that, in consequence of the number of similar requests, it has been found necessary to make in all cases a uniform charge for the wood referred to, namely, 1s. 6d. for a small log, or 3s. per cubic foot, exclusive of all railway carriage. Applications should be made to the Bailiff, Estate Office, Hawarden, near Chester, who will attend to any orders as far as he may have the requisite material at hand." It may be explained that the proceeds from the sale of these mementoes go to a fund for the repairs of Episcopal Churches, in which the Liberal leader takes an interest.

IN a recent able address, Sir William Vernon Harcourt remarked that the men who had the best opportunity to judge of the difficulties of ruling Ireland were all in favor of granting Irishmen the right to govern themselves in local matters. He put the case in these telling words: "Why, at present how many men who have been Lord-Lieutenants of Ireland are Home Rulers? Far the greater majority. You will find Lord Kimberley, Lord Spencer, Lord Aberdeen—(cheers)—and I think I may add to them the Tory Lord Carnarvon. (Hear, hear.) How many Secretaries for Ireland who have been responsible for the government of Ireland are Home Rulers? There is Sir George Trevelyan—(cheers)—there is Mr. Campbell-Bannerman and there is Mr. John Morley. (Cheers.) These men, having observed the condition of Ireland, have come to the conclusion, the only possible conclusion, that in a free country you can only govern the people by their own consent."

She Got the Cloak.

When Mr. Montgomery came home the other night he found Mrs. Montgomery weeping. Great, salty tears chased one another down her fair cheek.

"What is the matter, dear?" he asked, as he placed a new clove in his mouth and prepared to kiss her.

"Oh, everything is the matter," she sobbed as she placed one arm about his neck and laid her head down on his shoulder. "I want to die."

"Oh no, you don't, dear," he remonstrated. "Tell me what is the matter. Now do."

"Fergy," she questioned, "do you love me as much as you did when you married me?"

"Why, of course I do. What put such a question in your head?"

"Are you sure that you do?"

"What do you mean, Ellen? You know that I love you as much as I ever did, and more if anything."

"Don't be silly, Fergy. How am I to know it? The minister was here to-day and said that a loving husband was continually showing his devotion for his wife. He always bought her everything that she wanted and did everything that she asked him to do."

"Yes. What are you driving at?"

"It pained me when I heard that, and I have been crying all day."

"Have I been unkind to you?"

"No-o-o, but then the minister went from here over to that hateful Mrs. Brown's, and I just know that he said the same thing to her."

"Well, what of it?"

"Nothing; only Mrs. Brown is going to have a new sealskin cloak, and she will go around and tell what the minister said. Then she will tell how much her husband loves her and hint that you and I are going to separate."

Mr. Montgomery ordered the new cloak the next morning, and incidentally put out a story about the minister having lost a great many friends, and that he had better look for a different field.—Minneapolis Journal.

Geo. Whitfield, the youthful prisoner at present confined in the jail, has an awful record of crime already against him. Although he is not yet 17 years of age, still he has been charged with various offences over a score of times. Of this number he has been convicted and sent to jail and Central Prison ten times. The offences and the years are as follows: In 1883, committed for horse-stealing; for larceny in 1884, for larceny in 1885, for trespass in 1885, for vagrancy in 1886, for larceny in 1886, for doing grievous and bodily harm in 1886, and for vagrancy and larceny in 1887. For this latter conviction he put in the time at Cayuga jail; for all the previous convictions, either in jail here or Central Prison. Ten convictions from 13 to 17 years of age, a period of four years, is an awful record for one so young.—Brantford Telegram.

GLADYS' CHOICE.

BY FLORENCE GERTRUDE RUTHVEN.

CHAPTER I.

"Remember, to-night you shape your own future."

Mr. Ainsley, a tall, fine-looking man, in the prime of life, addressed these words to his daughter.

Gladys Ainsley was 17 years of age, rather short of stature, but she carried herself with a certain dignity that became her well. She owned a pair of hazel eyes that peeped merrily from beneath her long lashes. The golden-brown hair fell in little waves on her low, broad brow, and the ruby lips, perhaps a trifle too full, formed a pretty little pout. The aristocratic little nose was elevated in the air as her father repeated the words, "Remember, to-night you shape your own future."

"Now, I don't want any of your nonsense," said Mr. Ainsley angrily. The girl's face fell immediately.

"Yes, yes, I know, I understand," faltered Gladys, "but I love Guy Norwood."

"Pooh, love! some ridiculous fancy you have got into your silly little head," said her father. Gladys drew herself up to her full height and her eyes flashed, but she said nothing. "Getting spunky, eh," said Mr. Ainsley, half aside. "Now, I must be off. One last warning, you are aware that Cyril Vane has asked my permission to pay his addresses to you, I gave my consent; when he proposes to-night you accept him. This is Tuesday evening; I am going to town. I will not return till Thursday evening." Kissing Gladys he left the room. She gave a sigh of relief, and, walking slowly down the handsomely furnished drawing-room, she stood before a mirror and surveyed herself from head to foot. She wore a white dress of soft material, which fell in graceful folds around her dainty little figure; at her throat was fastened a cluster of pale pink rosebuds; she wore no other ornament. After surveying a few minutes, she turned away and paced restlessly up and down the room, murmuring to herself, "Oh! Guy, Guy."

Mr. Ainsley was a wealthy merchant, Guy Norwood a clerk in his office, Cyril Vane a wealthy young man who lived on his means. At last Gladys, feeling fatigued from walking so much, sank down on an ottoman. In a few minutes the footman announced Mr. Vane. Gladys went forward to meet him with a charming smile. In the course of the evening Mr. Vane proposed to her. Gladys asked a few minutes to consider his proposal. It was granted immediately. She arose and went to the library. Sinking down on an easy chair and resting her head on her little jewelled hands, she wondered what her father would say if she refused Cyril Vane, and for a moment she wavered, but the image of handsome Guy Norwood arose in her mind's eye, and she remembered that to-morrow night she was to give him an answer; and she wondered how he would feel if she told him she was engaged to Mr. Vane. Why, he might possibly commit suicide. Men had done such foolish things, all for the sake of the women they loved. Oh! no, no, she could never give him up; and then, like a true woman, she felt sorry when she thought of the pain she would cause Mr. Vane. Rising, she returned to her anxiously waiting lover, and told him gently but firmly that she loved another and, knowing that, she could never become his wife. He asked her if she was quite sure that she would never change her mind? Gladys told him her mind was quite made up. He caught her little hand in his, and pressing it passionately to her lips bade her good-bye for ever.

CHAPTER II.

The next evening, at the appointed hour, Gladys walked slowly down the garden path, and Guy Norwood, standing under an immense fir tree, thought he had never gazed on a more beautiful picture. Gladys was looking charming in a pale, blue silk, cut low at the throat, and the moon's rays shining down on her, showed to perfection the dazzling fairness of her skin.

"Good evening, Miss Ainsley; I will not detain you many minutes. Your friend (a mere slip of the tongue) your lover, Mr. Vane, would grow impatient if you remained away longer."

Gladys looked at him with eyes of mild surprise, and thought: here is a nice state of affairs. This poor man, for whom she had thrown over a wealthy one, and for whose sake she intended to brave her father's anger, was insinuating that she was a heartless coquette. But she immediately recovered herself, and shrugging her shapely shoulders, said, "You must be laboring under a strange delusion, Mr. Norwood; I don't see how that could possibly be, as Mr. Vane left home last evening not to return for years. I refused his proposal of marriage."

Mr. Norwood looked at her keenly a moment, and then cried impulsively, "Forgive me, my beautiful Gladys, I have wronged you."

"I have a mind not to," she said, looking at him coquettishly from beneath her long lashes. Guy stepped forward, and, drawing her to his breast, called her his dear little wife, while Gladys hid her happy, blushing face on his shoulder.

"What will my father say; you know you are so poor?" murmured Gladys at last.

Guy burst into a merry laugh. "I am not poor at all. I have been playing a part. You remember Elmwood, a mile from here, the noble-looking old castle that you have so often wished yourself mistress of?"

"Yes" answered Gladys in surprise.

"Well, I'm master of Elmwood. When I returned from my travels on the Continent I had a great desire to go into an office. If I had allowed the public to know who I was, they would have thought me crazy to do such a thing with my means. I had changed a great deal in my travels, and taking precaution to avoid old acquaintances, people passed me by unrecognized. I took a situation in your father's office, and as a matter of course fell in love with you the first time I saw you. Thinking to try your affection, I led you to believe that I was plain Guy Norwood with only my salary to live on; the rest you know. Do you think your father will say very much more?" asked Guy with a smile.

"I should think not," almost gasped Gladys.

When Mr. Ainsley returned on Thursday evening and went into the drawing-room he was greatly astonished to see Mr. Norwood sitting beside his daughter, instead of Mr. Vane as he had expected. But when he heard the story, he made no objections, as Gladys had prophesied, but blessed them both, and calling them his children, soon left them, muttering to himself, "It was the queerest piece of business he ever heard of," and retired, while the two young people made love in the drawing-room.

Being entirely vegetable, they operate without disturbance to the system, diet, or occupation. Put up in glass vials, hermetically sealed. Always fresh and reliable. As a laxative, alterative, or purgative, these little Pellets give the most perfect satisfaction.

SICK HEADACHE,

Bilious Headache, Dizziness, Constipation, Indigestion, Bilious Attacks, and all derangements of the stomach and bowels, are promptly relieved and permanently cured by the use of Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Purgative Pellets. In explanation of the remedial power of these Pellets over so great a variety of diseases, it may truthfully be said that their action upon the system is universal, not a gland or tissue escaping their sanative influence. Sold by druggists, 25 cents a vial. Manufactured at the Chemical Laboratory of WORLD'S DISPENSARY MEDICAL ASSOCIATION, Buffalo, N. Y.

$500 REWARD

is offered by the manufacturers of Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy, for a case of Chronic Nasal Catarrh which they cannot cure.

SYMPTOMS OF CATARRH.—Dull, heavy headache, obstruction of the nasal passages, discharges falling from the head into the throat, sometimes profuse, watery, and acrid, at others, thick, tenacious, mucous, purulent, bloody and putrid; the eyes are weak, watery, and inflamed; there is ringing in the ears, deafness, hacking or coughing to clear the throat, expectoration of offensive matter, together with scabs from ulcers; the voice is changed and has a nasal twang; the breath is offensive; smell and taste are impaired; there is a sensation of dizziness, with mental depression, a hacking cough and general debility. Only a few of the above-named symptoms are likely to be present in any one case. Thousands of cases annually, without manifesting half of the above symptoms, result in consumption, and end in the grave. No disease is so common, more deceptive and dangerous, or less understood by physicians.

By its mild, soothing, and healing properties, Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy cures the worst cases of Catarrh, "cold in the head," Coryza, and Catarrhal Headache.

Sold by druggists everywhere; 50 cents.

"Untold Agony from Catarrh."

Prof. W. HAUSNER, the famous mesmerist, of Ithaca, N. Y., writes: "Some ten years ago I suffered untold agony from chronic nasal catarrh. My family physician gave me up as incurable, and said I must die. My case was such a bad one, that every day, towards sunset, my voice would become so hoarse I could barely speak above a whisper. In the morning my coughing and clearing of my throat would almost strangle me. By the use of Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy, in three months, I was a well man, and the cure has been permanent."

"Constantly Hawking and Spitting."

THOMAS J. RUSHING, Esq., 2902 Pine Street, St. Louis, Mo., writes: "I was a great sufferer from catarrh for three years. At times I could hardly breathe, and was constantly hawking and spitting, and for the last eight months could not breathe through the nostrils. I thought nothing could be done for me. Luckily, I was advised to try Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy, and I am now a well man. I believe it to be the only sure remedy for catarrh now manufactured, and one has only to give it a fair trial to experience astounding results and a permanent cure."

Three Bottles Cure Catarrh.

ELI ROBBINS, Runyan P. O., Columbia Co., Pa., says: "My daughter had catarrh when she was five years old, very badly. I saw Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy advertised, and procured a bottle for her, and soon saw that it helped her; a third bottle effected a permanent cure. She is now eighteen years old and sound and hearty."

County News.

The new county bridge at Heathcote has been completed.

W. J. Morrison, of Orangeville, was fined $50 for violation of the Scott Act.

The Salvation Army barracks at Thornbury was destroyed by fire week before last.

Last week Thos. Woodyard, of Dundalk, stabbed James Irwin through the hand. The former has been arrested.

An eight year old son of Alex. McLeod, of Melancthon, near Corbetton, while swinging on a door, fell off and broke his leg one day last week.

A Shelburne schoolboy was run over by a horse and rig driven by a reckless Jehu one day last week. The little fellow was not seriously injured.

Mr. Blaney McGuire—once interested in the Dufferin Post, and now of Toronto—was married to Miss Jennie Henry, of Orangeville, on Thursday week.

Two Dundalk hunters came suddenly upon a family of bears while out hunting one day recently. They fired one shot and then climbed a tree—to make some astronomical observations probably!

Two Orangeville cows have instituted a sort of a "reign of terror" in that place by breaking into gardens, destroying trees, shrubs, &c. Nothing can keep them out short of a stable or a forty feet stone wall.

We are glad to learn that Mr. Kaufman's child, whose disappearance from its home at Dunkeld, we announced last week, was found alive and well the day after it was missed. The little creature was out during the whole of a very cold night, and was found about five miles from home.—Walkerton Herald.

The Grand Trunk freight shed was entered a few nights ago and a small quantity of apples and buscuits carried off. The next night a freight car door was forced and some raisins and canned salmon stolen. No clue has yet been obtained to the perpetrators.—Durham Chronicle.

On Wednesday of last week Mr. and Mrs. John Esplin, of Proton, father and mother of Mrs. Robt. Little, of Mt. Forest,, saw the 54th anniversary of their marriage. Mr. Esplin was 23 years of age when married 54 years ago and his wife 18. Few couples have been spared to each other as long as Mr. and Mrs. Esplin—Representative.

A sand pit on Mr. Doukes' farm in Amaranth township caved in on Monday week, burying a man named John Milligan beneath the debris—nearly three feet. When rescued it was thought he was dead, but he recovered consciousness. He is so terribly bruised and injured internally that fears are entertained as to his ultimate recovery.

Monday last as Mr. Frank Huggins, a young man who has been living in Shelburne for some time past, was working at a building of Mr. A. B. Noble's, he sustained serious injuries to one of his eyes. He was starting a nail with a hammer, and the nail bounced and pierced his left eye. We regret to have to state that Mr. Huggin's will in all probability lose the sight of that organ.—Shelburne Economist.

Those who live fourteen weeks longer will have the privilege which will never occur to them again, viz.: of writing one figure three times in the date of their letters. It will be one hundred and eleven year before it will occur again.—Chesley Enterprise. Stuff, Bro. Robb! They'll write "one figure three times in the date of their letters" the 8th and 18th of each and every month in the year of grace 1888. And that one figure will be written four times instead of three, as stated.

Last Friday while Mr. James Gibson of the 7th line Euphrasia was digging for himself a well, the bucket became detached from the rope and fell a distance of 30 feet striking him on the head breaking his skull and causing instant death. Mr. Gibson was about 40 years of age and leaves a wife and family to mourn his sudden demise. They have the profound sympathy of the whole neighborhood in their severe affliction.—Markdale Standard.

She Felt for Fido.

A lady who owns a dog and, incidentally, a little girl, heard a commotion in the adjoining room.

Upon investigation she discovered that the commotion came largely from the dog.

"You naughty child!" she said, are you trying to burn Fido, that you hold his head so near the grate?"

"No, mamma," replied the little girl; "I'm only trying to warm his nose."

The Towers of Silence.

Afar in the realm of India
  The Towers of Silence stand,
These tall and stately towers—
  In the heart of that mystic land.
And oft, with a prayer the Hindoo,
  When day has left the sky,
Goes up to the Towers of Silence
  Where the dead of India lie.

My heart has its towers of silence,
  To the world unseen, unknown,
And often, weary and broken,
  I visit them all alone.
The portals, noiselessly swinging,
  I pass with a solemn tread,
And deep in the gloomy towers
  I wander among the dead.

Into my towers of silence,
  Enters no worldly care:
Over the altar a censer
  Swings in the listless air,
The place is hushed and holy,
  The moment calm and sweet,
And no one hears in my towers
  The patter of busy feet.

By the Indian's tower of Silence
  The Ganges slowly flows,
With a murmur dull and dreary
  Which only the Hindoo knows.
I read in the volumes mystic
  How prays he at his shrine,
Till I feel that the prayer of the Hindoo
  Is nearly akin to mine.

He prays to gods of the rivers,
  To gods of the moon and sun:
He beareth his heart to a thousand,
  And I bear mine to One!
He asks for a strength that saveth
  When fierce temptations try:
He comes from the towers of Silence
  Strengthened, and so do I.

O wonderful towers of Silence!
  O mystical land afar,
Where the prayer of the kneeling Hindoo
  Floats up to the brightest star!
There falls on our towers of silence,
  A light that is all divine,
And thy voice comes over the waters,
  O dark-skinned brother of mine!

—[T. C. Harbaugh.

Those Spicy Breezes.

At the theater.

Mr. Younghusband (after the third pilgrimage)—"I always feel so much better after going out to get the air between the acts. I can always get off some clever things when I come back. Don't you notice I'm a trifle spicer?"

Mrs. Younghusband—"Yes, dear; I thought it was your breath."

The Human Form Divine.

The proportions of the human figure are six times the length of the feet. Whether the form is slender or plump, the rule holds good; any deviation from it is a departure from the highest beauty in proportion. The Greeks made all their statues according to this rule. The face, from the highest point of the forehead, where the hair begins, to the chin, is one-tenth of the whole stature. The hand, from the wrist to the middle finger, is the same. From the top of the chest to the highest point of the forehead, is a seventh. If the face, from the roots of the hair to the chin, be divided into 3 equal parts, the first determines the place where the eyebrows meet, and the second the place of the nostrils. The hight, from the feet to the top of the head, is the distance from the extremity of the fingers when the arms are extended.

We had the pleasure of meeting two genial travellers on Monday last, viz., Mr. Ives and Mr. Petrie, of Toronto. These gentlemen, like most of their fraternity are sociable, intelligent, well read and excellent conversationalists. Call again, gentlemen.

A large crowd of buyers and sellers gathered into our town on Monday and quite a number of the bovine family changed hands. Our Township Fathers assembled in the Hall, on same day, for the transaction of business; a report of their proceedings appears elsewhere in these columns.

In justice to those ratepayers, who have dug the drain along the base of Flesher's Park, our Township Council should see to it that the trench is continued on to the Boyne. Otherwise the drain in question will discharge its contents into the hollow close beside Sydenham street, thereby creating a public nuisance. Surely there are enough nuisances without adding to the number. We were certainly under the impression that our Council intended to assist in the matter.

It has been noticed that the topmost twig of every uninjured hemlock points to the east, three fourths of the moss on trees grows on the north side and the heaviest boughs of spruce are on the south side of the tree. Any person can find the different parts of the compass by following these signs.

A certain person put a counterfeit twenty-five cent piece in for collection on the occasion of Mr. J. B. Watson's lecture Friday night last. Mr. Watson desires us to say that he does not like to deprive the poor fellow of his bad money and therefore asks him to kindly call at THE ADVANCE office when ye Editor will return it.

The firm of M. Richardson & Co. is noted far and wide for its straightforward dealings with the public, extending over a period of some twenty years. At present their mammoth store in this town is fully stocked for the fall and winter trade, and their customers observe that the prices are very reasonable, and the quality of goods bought invariably turns out as represented.

The Markdale School Board has engaged a new staff of Teachers for the 1st and 2nd forms of their public schools for next year, without notifying those at present holding those positions. The Standard comments very severely on the course pursued by the Board, which is seemingly justified by circumstances. But, no doubt, we shall hear the other side of the affair shortly, when, it is to be hoped, it will not look so bad as it does now.

Mr. Watson's lecture in the Town Hall Friday evening was a grand effort. "Pluck, Patience and Perseverance" proved even more fairthful and interesting than "Mind Your Own Business," which is saying a good deal. Those who have heard the talented young orator cannot but anticipate a brilliant and useful career for him. Of course there will be detractors—there always have been—for no man (or woman) can hope to achieve success, or reach the better land, on "flowery beds of ease."

The illustrations of The Illustrated London News (American editon) for November 5th, present as usual instruction as well as entertainment, and cover the customary broad range of this long established and widely known publication. They are indicated by the following titles: Sketches of the Bulgarian Elections, The Disputes Between Fishermen at Plymouth, State of Ireland, The Late Mrs. Craik, H. M. S. Wasp, Sketches on the River Congo, Sketches at the Cat Show, Crystal Palace, The Late Lady Brassey, Grand Dunbar at Mandalay, In the Semois Valley, Ardennes, A Tame Lion, Algiers, and the Kali Ghaut, Calcutta. Reading matter in abundance is also provided, while now it is becoming quite generally known that newsdealers everywhere sell the paper for ten cents. Subscriptions can be sent direct to the New York office, which is in the Potter building.

MUNICIPAL MATTERS!

Mr. Purdy a Probable Candidate for the Reeveship!

Quite a ripple has been caused by the announcement, that Mr. Purdy, the well-known Station Postmaster, will be a candidate for the Reeveship of Artemesia at the approaching January elections. We did not know what truth there might be in the rumor, but when Mr. Purdy called at our office yesterday morning and made a formal announcement of the fact, all doubt was set at rest.

Mr. Purdy bases his claims to the position on the fact that he has been thirty-six years a resident of the County and has passed through all the trials and vicissitudes incident to pioneer life. He has also cleared one hundred acres of land in the County, which is another of his claims. He maintains that public men should possess an abundance of "mother wit." This is another. He says he occupies a perfectly independent position, politically and otherwise. Another. He does not say why the ratepayers should displace such a reputable County Councillor and Municipal legislator as our present esteemed Reeve, Dr. Christoe, but will probably explain himself later on in his "Address to the Electors of Artemesia!"

TAMARAC.—Tamarac Elixir is a preparation containing great curative properties for Coughs, Colds, Influenza and Throat and Lung Complaints.

FLESHERTON STATION.

Entertainment in the New Schoolhouse on Tuesday Night.

A very enjoyable evening was spent by those who attended the entertainment held at the Station Tuesday evening, in connection with the opening of the neat and well situated new Public Schoolhouse out there. Before eight o'clock the building was packed to overflowing. Mr. Wm. Hogg occupied the chair—and in our humble opinion Mr. H. was just the right man in the right place.

The first part of the program was devoted to juvenile talent. It proved delightfully interesting and recalled to some present reminiscences of boyhood days. The children recited and sang in a very creditable manner indeed, showing quite conclusively that substantial progress—educationally speaking—has been made since the quite recent formation of the School Section; also reflecting the highest credit on the efficient and popular Teacher, Miss Hopkins. It was also noticeable that the musical education of the children had not been neglected—on the contrary, the various solos, duets, glees, instrumental selections, &c. evinced juvenile musical culture of no mean order. After all, what is more pleasant than the clear, musical voices of children in song, recitation or dialogue!

Next came the heavier artillery, by which we mean the more adult talent. In this part no less than four clergymen of different denominations delivered themselves of brief but pointed and thoughtful addresses—practical and edifying. The gentlemen were Rev. Mr. Edgelow, Church of England minister, Rev. A. Wilson, Presbyterian minister, Rev. J. W. Shilton, B. A., Methodist minister, and Rev. T. Watson, Baptist minister. Mr. W. Irwin, Principal of Flesherton Public Schools, delivered an excellent address, in which our educational system was referred to in glowing terms. Mr. R. McGill, the genial C.P.R. agent, congratulated the section on the grand success which had attended its efforts in promoting educational interests. Messrs. Wadsworth, White and Phillips gave humorous readings in good style. Mr. Wilson and Mr. Ashdown sang humorous and pathetic songs. Miss Hopkins recited a beautiful piece in her usual faultless manner. Miss Robinson and Miss Hogg gave several chaste instrumental selections, which were charmingly rendered. Our old friend, Mr. Cæsar, of the C.P.R., Markdale, possesses a beautiful and cultured voice, and the duet and solos by himself and Miss Ford—also of Markdale—were among the features of the evening's entertainment. Mr. Cæsar is a capital soloist and the wonder to us is that he is not oftener heard in this locality. His pieces showed a refined taste in the selection and marked ability in the rendering thereof. Even his humorous pieces are marked by an absolute absence of that vulgarity so common in selections of that nature. Miss Ford possesses a voice of much compass and power, under perfect control, and her selections gave evidence of culture and refinement. Mr. Thos. Granger made a very short speech but it was full of good humor and common sense.

RELIABLE TESTIMONY.—Mr. John R. Wright, respresenting Messrs. Evans, Sons & Mason, wholesale druggists, Montreal, says—Nasal Balm cured me of a long standing case of Catarrh after many other remedies failing.

W. H. FLESHER.

Flesherton, May 20th, 1887.

Measure for Measure.

They were speaking of mouths, of sizes and shapes,
Which vary from Venus' to one like an ape's;
Of mouths that are feminine, dainty and rosy,
Refreshing and sweet like the morning-dewed posy;
Of masculine mouths, that nature's so good
To provide with a hirsute awning or hood,
Which conceals from the fair one a mouth superfine,
As her drapery hideth the form that's divine.
"I think, Mr. Slim," said Josephine Banter,
"Though your mouth is less obvious than a decanter,
Being shaded profusely with hair on your lip—
It excels the decanter's, for it catches the drip—
I think, Mr. Slim—excuse my remarks—
That men hide their mouths, because, like a shark's,
They're so awfully large they would put you to shame,
Or frighten the ladies, perhaps, with the same.'

"Miss Josephine Banter," quoth Slim, with a sly
And mischievous beam in his twinkling eye,
"There is in all nature—human, at least,
A morbid desire, each moment increased,
To unravel the secrets hidden from view;
And I strongly suspect the same, miss, of you."
"Mr Slim, I declare! You men are provoking!"
"How so?" inquired Slim, with mirthfulness choking.
"You would fain have me think that your mouth is as small
As—mine is for instance." "Ha, ha! Not at all!"
The lady with arch naivete replied,
Though it challenged the smile she endeavored to hide.
"Well, Miss Josephine, since you would banter me so,
I'll suggest that we settle the thing at a blow;
Or by one sweet measure, ascertain whether Yours is the smaller by putting them together."

SIR HUGH'S LOVES.

"Yes, mother," in a low voice; "and I suppose he has told you the news."

"What news, my pet?"

"That he and Miss Selby are engaged. Oh yes, I knew it directly I saw the letter. It is good of him to tell us so soon. I am glad; you must tell him we are glad, mother."

"Will that be the truth, Fern?" looking at her doubtfully.

"One ought to be glad whenone's friends are happy," was the unsteady answer. "If he loves her, of course he must want to marry her. Crystal says she is very handsome and looks so nice. You must write a very pretty letter to him, mother, and say all sorts of kind things. And it is for us to be glad that he has got his wish, for I think he has not looked quite happy lately." And Fern folded up her work in her old business-like manner, and then went about the room putting little touches here and there; and if she were a little pale, the dusk soon hid it. Mrs. Trafford had no fault to find with her daughter that evening; nevertheless she did not feel easy; she thought girlish pride was bidding her conceal the wound, and that in reality her child was unhappy.

If any one had asked Fern what were her feelings when she saw that letter in her mother's hands she would have answered most truly that she did not know. When a long-dreaded trouble that one knows to be inevitable at last reaches one, the mind seems to collapse and become utterly blank; there is a painless void, into which the mental vision refuses to look. Presently—there is plenty of time; life is over long for suffering—we will sit down for a little while by the side of the abyss which has just swallowed up our dearest hopes.

Numbness, which was in reality death in life, blunted Fern's feelings as she worked and talked, and fulfilled her little duties. When she went up to her room, and looked at Crystal's empty bed, she thought the room had never looked so desolate. She undressed slowly, with long pauses, during which she tried to find out what had happened to her; but no real consciousness came until she laid her head on the pillow and tried to sleep, and then found her thoughts active. And the darkness seemed to take her into its black arms, and there seemed no rest anywhere. They were all over—those beautiful dreams that had glorified her life. No bright-faced young prince would ride out of the mist and carry her away; there would be no more kind looks full of deep wonderful meanings for her to remember over her work; in the morning she would not wake and say, "Perhaps he will come to-day;" no footstep would make her heart beat more quickly; that springy tread would never sound on the stairs again. He was gone out of her life, this friend of hers, with his merry laugh, and his boyish ways, and that pleasant sympathy that was always ready for her.

Fern had never imagined that such sad possibilities could wither up the sweet bloom of youthful promise; she had never felt really miserable except when her father died, and then she had been only a child. She wondered in a dreary, incredulous way if this was all life meant to bring her—every day a little teaching, a little work, quiet evenings with her mother, long streets that seem to lead nowhere; no meadows; no flowers; no pretty things except in the shop windows; would she still live over Mrs. Watkins' when she was an old woman?

"Are you awake still, my darling?" asked her mother, tenderly. Some instinctive sympathy had led her to her child's door, and she had heard that impatient little speech. "What is the matter, dearest; you will tell your mother, will you not?"

"Oh, mother, why have you come? I never meant you to know. But here she broke down, and clasped her mother's neck convulsively. "I am glad—I will be glad that he is happy; but oh, mother, I want him so—I want him so." And then Mrs. Trafford knew that the wound was deep—very deep indeed.

CHAPTER XXIX.

A GLIMPSE OF THE DARK VALLEY.

Not alone unkindness
Rends a woman's heart;
Oft through subtler piercings
Wives and mothers die.

Though the cord of silver
Never feel a strain;
Though the golden language
Cease not where ye dwell,
Yet remaineth something
Which, with its own pain,
Breaks the finer bosom
Whence true love doth well.

O this life how pleasant
To be loved and love,
Yet should love's hope wither
Then to die were well.

Philip Stanhope Worsley.

Every one noticed at the Hall that Lady Redmond was sadly altered in those days—every one but one, and that was her husband.

Had Sir Hugh's indifference made him blind? for he completely ignored the idea of any change in her. She was pale and thin—very thin, they told him. Hugh said he supposed it was only natural; and when they spoke of her broken rest and failing appetite, he said that was natural too.

They must take better care of her, and not let her do so much. That was his sole remark; and then, when she came into the room a few minutes afterwards to bathe his aching head, and read him to sleep, or to sit fanning the teasing flies from him for the hour together, Hugh never seemed to notice the languid step, or the pale tired face out of which the lovely color had faded.

His Wee Wifie was such a dear, quiet little nurse, he said, and with that scant meed of praise Fay was supposed to be satisfied.

But she knew now that all his gentle looks and words were given her out of sheer pity, or in colder kindness, and shrank from his caresses as much as she had once sought them; and often, as she spoke to him, the shamed conscious color rose suddenly to her fair face, and broken breaths so impeded her utterance that her only safety was in silence. Scarcely more than a child in years, yet Fay bore her martyrdom nobly. Unloved, unhelped, she girded on her heavy cross and carried it from day to day with a resignation and courage that was truly womanly; and hiding all her wrongs and her sorrows from him, only strove with her meek young ways to win him yet.

But as time went on her love and her suffering increased, and the distance widened miserably between them.

Sometimes when her trouble was very heavy upon her—when Hugh had been more than usually restless, and had spoken irritably and sharply to her—she would break down utterly, and nestle her face against his in a moment's forgetfulness, and cry softly.

Then Hugh would wonder at her, and stroke her hair, and tell her that she had grown nervous by staying at home so much; and then he would lecture her a little in a grand martial way about taking more care of herself, until she dried her eyes, and asked him to forgive her for being so foolish; and so the pent-up pain that was within her found no outlet at all.

"Oh, if he will not love me—if he will not try to love me, I must die," cried the poor child to herself; and then she would creep away with a heart-broken look on her face and sob herself to sleep.

Ah, that was a bitter time to Fay; but she bore it patiently, not knowing that the days that were to follow should be still more full of bitterness than this.

Sir Hugh was getting better now—from the hour he had seen Margaret there had been no relapse; but he was struggling through his convalescence with a restless impatience that was very trying to all who came in contact with him.

He was longing for more freedom and change of air. He should never grow strong until he went away, he told Fay; and then she understood that he meant to leave her. But the knowledge gave her no fresh pain. She had suffered so much that even he could not hurt her more, she thought. She only said to him once in her shy way, "You will be at home in time, Hugh; you will not leave me to go through it all alone?" And he had promised faithfully that he would come back in plenty of time.

And the next morning she found him dressed earlier than usual and standing by the window of the library, and exclaimed at the improvement; and Hugh, moving still languidly, bade her see how well he could walk. "I have been three times round the room and once down the corridor," he said, with a smile at his own boasting. "To-morrow I shall go out in the garden, and the next day I shall have a drive."

And a week after that, as they were standing together on the terrace, looking towards the lake and the water lilies, Hugh, leaning on the coping, with a brighter look than usual on his wan face, spoke cheerfully about the arrangements for the next day's journey.

He was far from well, she told him, sadly, and she hoped Saville would take great care of him; and he must still follow Dr. Martin's prescriptions, and that was all she said that night.

But the next day, when the servants were putting the portmanteaus on the carriage, and Hugh went into the blue room to bid her good-bye, all Fay's courage forsook her, and she said, piteously, "Oh, Hugh, are you really going to leave me? Oh, Hugh, Hugh!" And, as the sense of her loneliness rushed over her, she clung to him in a perfect anguish of weeping. Sir Hugh's brow grew dark; he hated scenes and especially such scenes as these. In his weakness he felt unable to cope with them, or to understand them.

"Fay," he said, remonstrating with her, "this is very foolish," and Fay knew by his voice how vexed he was; but she was past minding it now. In her young way she was tasting the bitterness of death. "My dear," he continued, as he unloosened her hands from their passionate grasp, and held them firmly in his, "do you know what a silly child you are?" and then he relented at his own words, she was such a child. "I told you before that I should never be well until I went away, but you evidently did not believe me. Now I cannot leave you like this, for if you cry so you will make yourself ill; therefore, if you will not let me go quietly, I cannot go at all."

"No, no," she sobbed; "don't be so angry with me, Hugh, for I cannot bear it."

"Well, will you promise me to be a brave little woman and not fret after me when I am gone?" he went on more gently. "It is only six weeks, you know, Fay, and I have promised to be back in time."

"Yes, yes, I know you will," she answered, "and I will be good—indeed I will, Hugh; only tell me you are not angry with me before you go, and call me your Wee Wifie as you used when you first brought me home; and she held up her wet face to him as though she were a child wanting to be kissed and forgiven.

"You foolish birdie," he said, laughing, but he kissed her more fondly than he had done yet. "There, you will take care of yourself, my own Wee Wifie, will you not, and write long letters to me, and tell me how you are getting on?"

"Yes, Hugh," she replied, quietly; and then he put her down from his arms. She had taken the flower from his button-hole, and stood fondling it long after he had driven off.

"Had you not better lie down, my lady?" Mrs. Heron said to her a little while afterwards, when she found her still standing in the middle of the room; and she took hold of her gently, for she did not like the look in my lady's eyes at all; and then she laid her down on the couch, and never left her until she had fallen asleep, like a child, for very trouble.

And then she went down and spoke out her mind to Janet; and the substance of her speech might be gathered from the concluding sentence.

"And I am sorry to say it, Janet, of any one to whom I am beholden for the bread I eat, and whom I have known since he was a baby; but in spite of his bonnie looks and pleasant ways, Sir Hugh is terribly selfish; and I call it a sin and a shame for any man to leave a sweet young creature like that at such a time. What can he expect if she goes on fretting herself to death in this way?"

Fay could not tell why she felt so strangely weak the next day when she woke up, and Mrs. Heron could not tell either. She did not fret; she did not even seem unhappy; she was too tired for anything of that sort, she said to herself; but day after day she lay alone in her little room with closed eyes and listless hands; while Nero lay at her feet wondering why his little mistress was so lazy, and why she wasted these lovely summer mornings indoors instead of running races with him and Pierre.

No, she was not ill, she assured them, when Mrs. Heron and the faithful Janet came to look after her, and to coax her with all kinds of dainties; she was only so tired, and would they not talk to her, for she felt as though she could never sleep enough; and would some one tell Sir Hugh so when they wrote to him, for he would get no long letters from her now—she had tried to write, but her hand was too weak to hold the pen. But for all that she would not own she was ill; it was only the heat that made her so lazy, she said again and again. No, they must only tell Sir Hugh that she was very tired.

But when a few more days had passed, Mrs. Heron thought she had been tired long enough, and sent for Dr. Martin.

He looked very grave when he saw her, and Fay smiled to herself, for she said, "The time is very near now, and then he thinks that I shall die."

But Margaret's reproachful speech came back to her—"Would you wish to die without winning your husband's love?" and to the alarm of the good housekeeper she suddenly became hysterical and begged her to send for Sir Hugh.

But her piteous request was forgotten for a time, for before night her life was in danger.

Hour after hour the desolate young creature looked death in the face and found him terrible, and called out in her agony that she was afraid to die unless Hugh would hold her hand; and for many a long day after that Fay did not see her baby boy, for the least excitement would kill her, the doctor said, and her only chance was perfect quiet.

And the urgent letters that were sent did not reach Sir Hugh for a long time, for he was wandering about Switzerland. He had carelessly altered his route, and had forgotten to tell Fay so.

But on his homeward route, which was not until the six weeks were past, he found a budget awaiting him at Interlachen.

Hugh was deeply shocked when he heard of his wife's danger, and blamed himself for his selfishness in leaving her.

The trip had refreshed him, but the idea of returning home was still irksome to him. He had enjoyed his freedom from domestic restraint; and he planned a longer route that should end in the Pyramids, when Fay was strong and well again. It would not matter then; but he was a brute, he confessed, to have left her just at that time. Then he added in self-extenuation that he was not quite himself.

And one lovely summer morning, when Fay lay like a broken lily on her pillow, and looked languidly out upon the world and life, they brought her baby to her and laid it in her weak arms; and Fay gazed wonderingly into a dimpled tiny face and blue-grey eyes that seemed to her the counterpart of Hugh's eyes; and then, as she felt the soft breathing of the warm nestling thing against her shoulder, and saw the crumpled hand on her breast, a new, strange flood of happiness came into her starved heart.

"Hugh's little boy," she whispered, and a tender look shone in her eyes; and then she added, "he will love me for my baby's sake."

And she was very happy in her belief.

As long as they would let her, she lay cradling her boy in her feeble arms and whispering to him about his father; and when night came she would lie awake happily trying to hear baby's soft breathing in the bassinet beside her, and if he woke and cried, she would ask the nurse to lay him beside her.

"He will not cry when he is with his mother," she would say, with maternal pride. "He is always so good with me; indeed, I never knew such a good baby," which was not wonderful, considering her experience had been confined to Catharine's baby at the lodge. And if the nurse humored her, Fay would cover the little downy head with noiseless kisses, and tell him not to cry, for father was coming home to love them and take care of them both.

"You will love me now; yes, I know you will, Hugh," she would murmur softly when the baby was slumbering peacefully in his blankets again, and nurse had begged Lady Redmond not to think any more about Master Baby, but to go to sleep. And as she obediently closed her eyes, the happy tears would steal through her eyelids.

Poor innocent child! when she had first discovered that Hugh did not love her, her despair had nearly cost her her life; but no sooner was her baby brought to her than hope revived, for from the depths of her sanguine heart she believed that by her boy's help she should win his love; not knowing in her ignorance that Hugh might possibly care nothing for the son though he desired the heir, and that baby charms that had been so potent with her should possess no magic for him.

CHAPTER XXX.

"IT IS ALL OVER, BABY."

Sleep and rest, sleep and rest,
Father will come to thee soon;
Rest, on mother's breast,
Father will come to thee soon;
Father will come to his babe in the nest,
Silver sails all out of the west
Under the silver moon:
Sleep my little one, sleep, my pretty one, sleep.

Tennyson.

It was on a hot thundery July afternoon that Sir Hugh entered Redmond Hall, weary and heated and dusty, and thoroughly ashamed of himself.

There are some men who hate to be reminded of their own shortcomings—who are too proud and impatient to endure self-humiliation, and who would rather go through fire and water than own themselves in the wrong. Sir Hugh was one of these. Despite his moral weakness, he was a Redmond all over, and had a spice of the arrogance that had belonged to them in old feudal days, when they had ruled their vassals most tyrannically. And especially did he hate to be reminded by word or deed that his conduct had not been faultless; his conscience made him uncomfortable enough, for he was really kind-hearted in spite of his selfishness; so it did not improve matters when Mrs. Heron met him in the hall, and, quite forgetting her usual stately manners, suddenly burst out, while her tearful eyes gave emphasis to her words:

"Oh, Sir Hugh, I am grateful and thankful to see you again, for we thought my lady would have died in her trouble; for, bless her dear heart, she fretted herself cruelly when you left her, and more's the pity!"

The housekeeper had meant no reproach to her master, but Sir Hugh's uneasy conscience took alarm.

"Thank you, Mrs. Heron," with icy politeness, "I am deeply indebted to you for reminding me of my shortcomings. Ellerton, be good enough to tell Lady Redmond's nurse that I am here, and that I wish to see my wife at once;" and he passed on in a very bad humor indeed, leaving Mrs. Heron thoroughly crest-fallen by her master's unexpected sarcasm.

Ellerton was an old servant, and he ventured to remonstrate before carrying out this order.

"Will you not get rid of a little of the dust of your journey, Sir Hugh, and have some refreshment before you go up to my lady?"

"You have my orders, Ellerton," returned his master, curtly; and he ascended the staircase with the frown still heavy on his face.

He did not like to feel ashamed of himself, and this was his mode of showing it.

Fay lay on a couch in her bedroom looking very lovely, in her white tea-gown trimmed with lace, with her brown hair hanging in long plaits, and a little rose-leaf color tinting her cheeks. She was listening with a beating heart for the well-known footsteps; as they sounded at last in the corridor and she heard his voice speaking to Ellerton, she sat up, flushed and trembling, and under the soft shawl something that lay hidden stirred uneasily as she moved.

"You must not excite yourself, my lady," observed the nurse, anxiously; but she might as well have spoken to the wind, for Fay seemed to have forgotten her presence.

"Oh, Hugh, my darling husband!" she exclaimed, as the door opened; and the tender rose flush deepened in her cheeks as she stretched out her hand to him with her old smile.

Hugh stooped over the couch and kissed her, and then sat down with rather a dissatisfied expression on his face; he thought they had made a fuss to frighten him and bring him home—she did not look so very ill after all.

"I could not come to meet you, love," she said, with a little clasp of his hand, and she kissed it in her old way, and laid it against her face.

"My dear Fay," he remonstrated, and bit his lip. "Nurse, you can trust your patient in my care. I will ring for you in a little while." Then, as the door closed behind her, he said in a vexed tone, "Fay, why are you so childish? you know that I object to demonstration before the servants, and have told you so, and yet you never seem to remember; do try to be a little more dignified, my dear, and wait till we are alone." And this to her who had come back to him through "The Valley of the Shadow of Death," bringing his boy with her!

Fay became very white, and drew her hand away. "You do not seem to remember how very ill I have been," she faltered. And then the baby's blind wandering touches over her breast soothed her.

Hugh grew a little remorseful.

"My dear, I assure you I have not forgotten it; I was very grieved to hear it, and to know that you should have been alone in your trouble; but was it my fault, Fay? Did you keep your promise to me not to fret yourself ill when I was gone?"

"I kept my promise," she replied, quietly; "the fretting and the mischief were done before. We will not talk about my illness; it is too bad even to think of it. Have you nothing else to say to me, Hugh? Do you not wish to see our boy?"

Hugh started, conscience-stricken—he had forgotten his child altogether; and then he laughed off his confusion.

"Our boy! what an important Wee Wifie. Yes, show him to me by all means. Do you mean you have got him under that shawl?"

"Yes; is he not good?" returned Fay, proudly; she had forgotten Hugh's coldness now, as she drew back the flimsy covering and showed him the tiny fair face within her arms. "There, is he not a beauty? Nurse says she has never seen a finer baby boy for his size. He is small now, but he will grow; he has such long feet and hands that, she assures me, he will be a tall man. Mrs. Heron says he is a thorough Redmond. Look at his hair like floss silk, only finer; and he has your forehead, dear, and your eyes. Oh, he will be just like his father, the darling!"

"Will he?" returned Hugh, dubiously, and he touched him rather awkwardly—he had never noticed a baby closely before, and he was not much impressed with his son's appearance; there was such a redness, he thought, and no features to be called features, and he had such a ridiculous button of a mouth. "Do you really call him a fine baby, Fay?"

"Fine! I should think so; the smallness does not matter a bit. You will be a big man some time, my beauty, for you are the very image of your father."

Crude Oil in Brickmaking.

Crude oil has been applied as fuel by Messrs. P. L. Sword & Son, Cleveland, at their Bessemer avenue brickworks, and with such excellent results that they have already contracted for a one-hundredth-barrel tank to supply their works. The arches in the monster kiln, containing some 250,000 bricks, are heated by twenty-four burners. The oil flow is regulated by an ordinary stop-cock, and at the point of ignition is met by a steam blast, supplied by the boiler that furnishes power for the brickmaking machines. Simple pipe burners are used with good results. Instead of having to heat the brick seven days, as with coal or wood, four days' burning with oil makes a far better quality of material. When the oil is ever so economically fed there is a surplus of heat. Within fifty minutes of starting the fires the water-smoke was started out of the brick. There isn't a cold spot in the kiln. The arches are evenly heated, and one man attends to the firing and regulating of the oil flow where three stokers were formerly employed. The firm is about to start off another mammoth kiln built on the Morrison plan, and supplied with eight burners in place of twenty-four, one burner heating three arches. By an ingenious contrivance the flame is directed against a bridge wall, when it is distributed with equal force into the three arches.

Odd Things in Turkey.

In many villages the young men buy a wife for $50 or $100, for which they get in debt, and in order to pay it they are obliged to leave home and go to Constantinople and work from three to five years. Not unfrequently they never get out of debt. In Constantinople and Smyrna the case is quite different. There parents are generally obliged to give a house, a good round sum of money, or set a young man up in business in order to induce him to take their daughter off their hands. We also meet with some very queer names in this country. I will give you a few specimens, with their translations into English: Mr. Paniryermagin, Mr. Son-of-won't-eat-cheese; Mr. Varyermagin, Mr. Son-of-won't-eat-what-there-is; Mr. Kooroobalukgian, Mr. Son-of-dry-fish-dealer; Mr. Genishian, Mr. Son-of-the-work-of-the-devil; Mr. Luyabotmas, Mr. Son-of-won't-sink-in-the-water; Mr. Koozookebobian, Mr. Son-of-roast-lamb. It is very common to call a man by the name of his trade, or that of his father, as John Son-of-a-merchant, Samuel Son-of-a-teacher, Alexander Son-of-a-slipper-maker. Miriam Papazoloo means Mary Daughter-of-the-son-of-a-priest.—Lewiston (Me.) Journal.

Tenpennyworth of Glory.

There is a movement in England for an increase of the pension of John Divane, the private soldier who won the Victoria Cross by leading the way to the capture of the Cashmere Gate at the storming of Delhi. He lost a leg on that occasion. "There was," he says, "a hitch and then a call for 'Who'll storm the battery?' And the bhoys said, 'Johnny, you go on and we'll be afther ye.' And I said, 'Come on, bhoys, death or glory!' And we went on, and presently I fell down, and when I came to meself I found my leg gone, and I said: 'Never mind, John Divane, my bhoy, here's a shilling a day for ye for life.' And when I heard the list of pinsions read out and heard I'd only tinpince a day I croid." Divane did not get the "death" he challenged, but the tenpennyworth per day of "glory" which he did get does not seem much of a reward for the man who started the turning point of the capture of Delhi, and therefore of the suppression of the mutiny. He is now 64 years old, and gets a living by peddling fish in a donkey-cart at Penzance.—Ex.

Among the Mexican Tailors.

"Here I bring you a piece of cloth for a pair of pantaloons," says a customer.

The tailor measures it. "It is not enough."

The customer gathers up the cloth and carries it to another tailor.

"Is there enough of this piece to make me a pair of pantaloons?"

"Yes, sir; day after to-morrow I will send them to you by my son."

The boy comes with the pantaloons two days later. The customer notes that the youth is wearing a jacket made of the same piece of cloth.

"Boy, how is this that the other tailor said that there was not enough cloth for a pair of pantaloons, and your father has not only made my pantaloons but also a jacket for you out of the piece?"

"Sir, the son of the other tailor is a much bigger boy than I am."

A Model Husband.

Model Husband (boastfully)—Yes, gentlemen, I've been married ten years and never spent a night away from home ye:

Doubting Thomas—Large and interesting family, eh?"

"Only three of us."

"Have one child, eh?"

"No, the other is my wife's mother."

The Tailor's Suggestion.

"I see you're printing a good deal about the correct thing in fall styles," said a tailor to an editor.

"Yes, sir."

"Well, while you're going in on that tack suppose you print something about the correct thing in settlement of bills."

The sixth annual Canadian Shipping List was issued yesterday by the Marine Department. Among other valuable statistics, it shows that Canada is the fourth maritime State in the world.

Dr. Bell, who has been up north of the Ottawa, describes the country beyond Lake Temiscamingue as the roughest he has ever seen. This is the territory claimed by Mr. Mercier for Quebec.

The dead body of R. Collison, Secretary of a Conservative Building Society at Hull, has been found floating in the Humber. His books show defalcations to the amount of £20,000.

WHAT'S THE TIME O'DAY ?

Lecture by Rev. Dr. Parker on "Clocks and Watches"

Rev. Dr. Parker, of the City Temple, London, England, lectured in Knox Church, Hamilton, to a large audience, representing almost every denomination and class of people of the city. His lecture was unique, solid and practical, and his style wholly his own, yet not so uncommon as to be in marked contrast with that of other lecturers. Dr. Parker is a short, chunky man, with a very intelligent-looking face and a large head, which looks larger under a crop of thick, wavy hair. He has just enough of the English accent to betray his nationality, even if his general appearance did not give it away. He has a fine command of language, his sentences being beautifully rounded and finished. He says a good deal and implies more, his gesticulations being full of dramatic force and carrying more suggestions with them than his lips give utterance to. He was introduced without ceremony by Rev. Mungo Fraser last night and said:

Once, in speaking to John B. Gough, I asked him what sort of lecture I should deliver in coming to this country, and he said, "No matter how fascinating, a lecturer will have no lasting reputation unless there be a high moral tone and purpose in the lecture." I thought a fairer tribute could not be paid to transatlantic intelligence. I have not come to this country to speak simply to its frivolity. My purpose is a moral purpose, therefore I do not feel out of place in the pulpit to discuss upon the subject of "Clocks and Watches." I know no more than the most ignorant person present about clocks and watches. I know nothing of their mechanism, yet how full of suggestions they are. They do more than tick—they overflow with all sorts of wise teachings. Can a man make anything without putting something of himself into it? How much of the man is there in the horse which he grooms and drives? How much of the man is there in the eagle—none. So it is with watches and clocks—there is so much of the man in them. I look at the watch and see three workers. The second-hand working hard for its bread; surely it deserves whatever it may need. Then here is this long, slim, thin one, like a fastened down young lady. There seems to be no motion to it, or very little; then here is the short, thick hand. The first is always going, the second moves with a languid motion, but the third is absolutely no use at all. So a man might say, to look at the watch, but you could take off the second hand and not miss it, and the languid moving one, but if you touch the apparently motionless one you cannot tell the time. So it is with society. Here is a man always on the alert. You can't find him napping. He is a man of detail. He says he can't have anything to do with sleepy people. Then you have the class who like to do things quietly, who don't like so much fuss, and then you have the slow going ones—slow going as a Scotchman; but if you disturb the slow going ones, where are you? We have people whom we describe as old fogies. They want to take time to consider and will give you an answer day after to-morrow. They may be old fogies but they are the men who keep society healthy. You see them in the church. When you want to call a minister the young people will say one will do if he is young enough, and can speak 150 miles an hour without saying anything. Probably the young folks' fire will be caught by the older ones, but the old fogies will consider and take time—but when they have decided upon a person they will stick to him. So in life we need all sorts. We must wait for some, and always remember that the slow may be the sure; that that which appears to be nothing may be the most important, while that which makes a great show may be of least utility. Come to a chronometer store. What a din, 100 different styles and sizes of watches all striking twelve. So it is in politics, in the ministry and in all classes of life, there are different styles, and we need them all, so long as they tell the right tale. If the clocks are all telling the same tale at 12 o'clock I will be satisfied. I wish people would pay more attention to the message and less to style. In the church we have innumerable pedantic critics all talking of style and forgetting the message. A rich man dies and the time has come for reading the will. The old fogy lawyer adjusts his spectacles and slowly reads John Henry Thompson, $10,000; Sarah, $15,000; Henry Wilkinson, $20,000; and the people interested say, "I don't like that lawyer's style." Do they? Well, no! they don't care about his grunty rhetoric, they want to hear about the dollars—they want the message. So ought we to be in all great matters. Never mind the style, but get at the purpose. But that round clock there, I didn't hear you strike at all. "Oh, no, I don't strike. I am not one of your vulgar clocks: if people want to know the time they must look at me. I am not one of those professing clocks." A man buys that clock and sets him up. The long winter nights come and the man lies awake. He wonders what time it is and wishes his clock struck. He gets up, knocks over a chair and finds only one match is in the case and the sulphur end is off that one. Then he knocks over a vase and resolves to buy a striking clock. So with men. There are those who make no professions. They have no religion, no politics, no ideas. They never say anything. You must look at them to see what o'clock it is; but sometimes it is dark, and then you can't see the face. Oh, for a strong, resonant voice in the time of national darkness! Germany had her striking clock in Luther, and England has in Gladstone. (This sentiment was applauded to the echo.) We want men who can strike at the right time. There are sometimes corruptions and evils, and we need men who can speak out and say, No! in God's name, that's wrong. There is no meanness equal to the meanness that will accept all the privileges of Christianity, and will not venture out to church on a foggy Sunday night, but will allow wrong and oppression to go by default to judgment. Every watch and clock has its place, and if men could learn that we would have more contentment in society than we have, and men would be praising the Lord instead of envying one another. Every man cannot be a Cæsar. Cæsar was more than all Cæsar's legends. We must have eloquent and learned men to fill St. Paul's, but we must also have the shepherd to reveal the kingdom of God to the tear-filled eye. We must have the mother who is Jesus in the family and the father and the little child. They all constitute the ministry of manhood. Why should we envy what our neighbor has? He is our brother. I would like to write a "Hamlet" and "Othello," and even a work as insignificant as "Paradise Lost." I will tell you why I don't. I am not too proud. I could lay aside my pride; the only reason why I don't is that I can't. It is not my place. Then there is one great big clock by which the dealer sets all the others. It is the regulator. The sun regulates the regulator and God regulates the sun. Are there no regulators in society in Hamilton—men who are looked up to as patterns? No clock can be put right by the hands and no man can be made clean by washing his hands. You must make the clock right within. It takes 3,200 operations to make a common watch. Which one of the operations made the watch? No one. Who can tell how many operations it takes to make a man? Was it the environments, or the father so wise, or the mother so good, or the companions so well chosen? Which one? No one. It was the father, the mother, the journalist, the pastor, the school teacher—all. Discipline and sorrow have had their part. Nine o'clock Tuesday night here is about 2 o'clock Wednesday morning in London. So right here may be wrong somewhere else. Therefore let every one see that he is right in his place. The lecturer closed after referring to Gladstone as a regulator and stating that he had suggested as a title for a future lecture, "Gladstone—the man, his opponents and his allies." The sentiment expressed and the suggestion made were received most heartily.

EYES LOST IN CAVERNS.

Animal Life Underground Marked by the Fading Away of Visual Organs.

There is a manifest tendency of all gayly colored forms to lose their hues in the caverns and to become of an even color. This may be explained by the simple absence of sunshine, and on it no conclusions can be based. The changes of the structural parts are of more importance; these, as might be expected, relate mainly to the organs of sense. The eyes show an evident tendency in all the groups to fade away. In the characteristic cavern-fishes they have entirely disappeared, the whole structure which serves for vision being no longer produced. In the crayfishes we may observe a certain gradation. Some species which abound in caverns are provided with eyes; others have them present, but so imperfect that they cannot serve as visual organs; yet others want them altogether. One species of pseudo-scorpion, as shown by Prof. Hagan, has in the outer world four eyes, while in the caves it has been found with two eyes and others in an entirely eyeless condition. Some cavern-beetles have the males with eyes, while the females are quite without them. As a whole, the cavern-forms exhibit a singular tendency of the visual organs, not only to lose their functions, but also to disappear as body-parts. At the same time there is an equal, or even more general, development of the antennæ and other organs of touch; these parts become considerably lengthened and apparently of greater sensitiveness, a change which is of manifest advantage to the individual.—Scribner's Magazine.

Miss Phelps' Inspiration.

The announcement of Miss Phelps' new "Gate" story, entitled "The Gates Between," recalls the remark of a prominent Kansas City lady who was driving with some guests along the Hesperus Road this summer, between Magnolia and Gloucester, Mass. As a curve of the beautiful driveway disclosed the narrow "Neck" stretching out to sea, the Western woman turned to her companion, saying: "We drove out on the Neck last week when we went to Manchester-by-the-Sea, and had a view of Elizabeth Stuart Phelps' summer home. After that visit I understand why she's always writing about gates. Why, there is nothing else as noticeable. They thrust themselves across the road at every turn without the shadow of an excuse; but not one of the six was ajar. And warnings were posted at every one against leaving it ajar 'under extreme penalty of the law.'"—From Portfolio of the American Magazine for November.

What the Clergyman Does.

"What do they do when they install a minister?" inquired a small boy. "Do they put him in a stall and feed him?" "Not a bit of it," said his father; "they harness him to a church and expect him to draw it alone."

The majority report of the Utah Commission gives a very intelligible idea of the actual strength of Mormonism. The population of the territory is about 200,000, a gain of nearly 60,000 since 1880, and the property is assessed at a valuation of $35,665,802. The Mormon population is 132,297, with 34,431 church dignitaries, but the Mormon Church in the various territories number 162,383, with 46,639 children under 8 years of age. The strength of the non-Mormon element in the territory is about 55,000, with 62 churches of different denominations, employing 230 teachers and having in their schools 6,668 pupils. Since the passage of the Edmunds law in 1882, 541 persons have been indicted for unlawful cohabitation, and 289 have been convicted, while fourteen have been convicted for polygamy, and many fled to escape arrest. The majority of the Commissioners regard the recent movement to obtain statehood for the territory through the adoption of a constitution in which non-Mormons had no part as a mere effort to free the Church from the control of Government and to give the leaders a freer hand. On the other hand, the minority of the Commission believe that the large class of monogamous Mormons have become convinced that their interests require the abolition of polygamy, and that with its suppression their religious faith will no longer militate against them.

The Moscow Gazette demands a neutrality agreement touching Gibraltar similar to the Suez Canal agreement. The paper says it believes if all the powers interested should insist on such an agreement England would yield.

CURRENT TOPICS.

Walter Besant's effort to raise $200,00 to build a Dickens Memorial in London brings to mind the fact that the great novelist in his will emphatically disapproved of any such act on the part of his admirers. He believed, and rightly, that his works were a sufficient monument to his memory.

The London Echo notes the introduction in English markets of a new fiber, which is so fine and durable that a new fabric made from it is expected shortly to drive silk almost entirely out of the market. The fiber is in the shape of a pine-apple leaf, and the new fabric has received the name of "pina cloth."

The late Mr. David Kennedy, the Scottish vocalist, was an ardent Liberal. When he was in Egypt he wrote: "When this country is governed by liberty as now by despotism, it will be the garden of the Lord. My curse on all forms of tyranny, and our Government on the side of tyranny! But not for long—not for long. Heaven be on the Gladstone side."

Rev. W. Elliot, Vicar of Aston, Birmingham, is trying to collect his tithes from his parishioners by legal proceedings. One man who had lived for twenty-five years on his property without healing of tithes had a levy put on, and in another case a distraint for £3 was put on the Smallheath Liberal Club, but the chairman defied the bailiffs and the warrant was not enforced.

Apropos of the fact that it took eighty soldiers and 150 policemen recently to evict one Irish tenant, the Pall Mall Gazette offers the Government the following problem in simple proportion: "If it takes 230 armed men to reduce one Irish patriot to the submission that you call union, how many armed men will it take to reduce the whole Irish people and thus complete Mr. Balfour's promised task of uniting the United Kingdom?"

Educators in America who have recently been engaged in discussion concerning the teaching of the dead languages will be interested to know that an influential committee, representing all the colleges, has decided to adopt the continental pronunciation of Latin at Cambridge University. Whether Oxford will follow this example remains to be seen, but, if it does not, teachers preparing pupils will find themselves in a quandary.

Orchards generally produce full crops only every other year. This is because the full crop of one year so exhausts the fruit-producing qualities of the soil that it is not able to produce a full crop the next year. Give it a good supply of the proper kind of manure and thus make up for the loss of the fruit-producing qualities of the soil, and you may expect good crops every year, provided you treat your trees properly in other respects.

Mrs. Forbes, the wife of Mr. Forbes, the well-known naturalist and explorer, who a year or two ago published an account of his scientific researches in the Eastern Archipelago, has written a narrative of her adventures while she accompanied her husband in his travels. Mrs. Forbes' experiences in the East were in some respects unique. She lived for a few weeks absolutely alone in the mountains of Timor, and was the first European woman who visited Papua. The book is dedicated to the Countess of Aberdeen.

Sir Charles and Lady Dilke have had a jolly time in Constantinople. The Sultan was extremely cordial to them, and they were received by the Patriarch of the Greek Church and by the seven Archbishops in Synod assembled. A Turkish translation of Lady Dilke's "The Shrine of Death" is being made. The noted couple went from Turkey to Greece, and are now on their way to London. They have won a good deal of popularity wherever they have stopped for any length of time.

There has been a royal committee appointed to investigate the Hessian fly ravages in the United Kingdom, twenty counties in England and ten in Scotland having been visited by this insect. It is difficult to estimate the damage, some placing it at two bushels per acre. In Fife there are complaints of losses of three to ten bushels per acre. The treatment in Russia and in the United States has been inquired into, and corn merchants are requested to be on the alert. The general conclusion of the commission favors the dissemination of all information possible, trusting to the vigilance of the British farmer.

The process of welding invented by Mr. De Banardoz, of Russia, is now applied industrially by the society for the electrical working of metals. The pieces to be welded are placed upon a cast iron plate supported by an insulated table and connected with the negative pole of a source of electricity. The positive pole communicates with an electric carbon inserted in an insulating handle. On drawing the point of the carbon along the edge of the metal to be welded the operator closes the circuit. He has then merely to raise the point slightly to produce a voltaic arc whose high temperature melts the two pieces of metal and causes them to unite.

"She who sweeps a room," says Good Housekeeping, "makes the action no less fine by the wearing of a pair of old kid gloves during the process, and the same is true of blacking a stove, cleaning kerosene lamps, and many other household duties that fall to mothers and daughters in homes where no servant is kept. 'Mother thinks it so silly,' said a young girl, blushing with shame on being found sweeping in gloves. But why not as well wear gloves to protect the hand as a sweeping cap to protect the hair? The occasional washing of the hands with corn meal and borax soap in tepid water helps to keep them soft and smooth, and glycerine, mixed with lemon juice, is excellent to apply at night."

"There is no longer," says a German paper, "any sword making industry in Damascus. What was once known as the sword trade now occupies itself with converting the blades of old saws and pieces of ordinary iron into daggers, cheap swords and rifles of Solingen and Birmingham make are also bought up, finished and decorated in Oriental style, and then put upon the market as weapons of Arabian and Damascene origin. The famous gold and silver work which once gave this district a reputation throughout the world has fallen into decay. Fine goldsmith's work is no longer asked for, and all that Europe seems to require are cheap specimens of filagree work, such as bracelets, brooches and armlets."

A correspondent of Chambers' Journal alleges that recently in Melbourne, with his wife and two children, aged 2 and 4, he went to see the animals in the Royal Park, and that four wolves sleeping in a cage paid no attention to himself and his wife and the eldest child, but the moment the younger one toddled up they sprang to their feet and made for the corner of the cage nearest to her, where they stood against the bars, pushed their paws through, barked constantly and seemed wild to get at her, not viciously, however, but as a dog might have run to play with her. When the child spoke their efforts were redoubled. On a subsequent visit the same thing occurred. From which the correspondent concludes that wolves have a strong maternal instinct and love children.

At the forestry congress in Springfield Ill., last month a Chicago manufacturer of farm waggons said that a waggon had been made of twenty different kinds of timber, all of which was grown from seed planted within forty years. It was by no means necessary to use so many different kinds of wood, as the entire running gear could have come from one log of honey locust eighteen inches in diameter. The waggons which the speaker himself ordinarily made required five kinds of wood, oak, hickory, ash, tulip (which he called whitewood) and pine. The pine, however, was used only because it was cheap, as ash was just as light and more enduring for the same purpose. He maintained that, although forty years was a good while to wait for the return on an investment, the money put into forest planting was prudently used, as a growing forest, which was increasing in value every year, was as marketable as any other property. Moreover, many of the branches trimmed off as the trees grew could be used, as well as the saplings removed in the thinning out process.

Dr. W. A. Hammond, the distinguishe New York medical expert, lecturing on "the use and the abuse of the brain," the other evening said: "Anxiety causes more brain disorders than any other agency I know of unless it be love. It is well for us to know that the emotions cause more unhappiness and crime than any other function of the brain. Human beings are governed by their emotions, and it is well that they should be, though it is the emotions that wear away the brain, and not honest intellectual work. Very few people suffer from intellectual work, and if my memory serves me I do not recollect ever having a mathematician for a patient. It is not intellectual work that causes nervous dyspepsia, but the emotions, such as anxiety, fear, sorrow and love. I consider that eight hours are sufficient for a man to use his brain, because if he exceeds that time he becomes nervous and fretful, and an exhausted brain is an irritable brain. You may not feel the evil effects of the stress of brain work at the time but you will sooner or later, when it will be too late. The men that work at night with their brain are the ones that expose themselves to danger and death which will surely come unless the great strain on the mind is lightened.

Beauty Without Paint.

"What makes my skin so dark and muddy?
My cheeks were once so smooth and ruddy!
I use the best cosmetics made,
Is what a lovely maiden said.

"That's not the cure, my charming Miss,"
The doctor said: "remember this
If you your skin would keep from taint,
Discard the powder and the paint.

"The proper thing for all such ills
Is this," remarked the man of pills
"Enrich the blood and make it pure—
In this you'll find the only cure."

Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery will do this without fail. It has no equal. All druggists.

Referring to the recent statement that, at a recent festival held in the Queen's presence in the Highlands, there was excessive drinking, Sir Henry Ponsonby, Her Majesty's Private Secretary, writes to say he was present on the occasion mentioned, and that he did not see any drunken persons.

Worth Ten Dollars a Bottle.

Any person who has used Polson's Nerviline, the great pain cure, would not be without it if it cost ten dollars a bottle. A good thing is worth its weight in gold, and Nerviline is the best remedy in the world for all kinds of pain. It cures neuralgia in five minutes; toothache in one minute; lame back at one application; headache in a few moments; and all pains just as rapidly. Small test bottles only cost 10 cents. Why not try it to-day? Large bottles 25 cents, sold by all druggists and country dealers. Use Polson's nerve pain cure—Nerviline.

The Important Thing.

Eastern man (who has been invited to "take a hand" in the game)—I know very little about poker. I suppose the chief requisite in playing the game successfully is a knowledge of human nature.

Western man—A knowledge of human nature helps, stranger, it helps; but the chief requisite is cash.

By its mild, soothing and healing properties, Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy cures the worst cases of nasal catarrh, also "cold in the head," coryza, and catarrhal headaches. Fifty cents, by druggists.

How Intelligent Women Decide.

When the question has to be met as to what is the best course to adopt to secure a sure, safe and agreeable remedy for those organic diseases and weaknesses which afflict the female sex, there is but one wise decision, viz., a course of self-treatment with Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. It is an unfailing specific for periodical pains, misplacement, internal inflammation and all functional disorders that render the lives of so many women miserable and joyless. They who try it praise it. Of Druggists.

The subscriptions in the Toronto District this year to the Methodist Missionary Society amount to $23,403.44, an increase of $4,946.53 over last year.

F. W. Hamilton, whose name has been before the public lately in connection with that of Mrs. Middleton, of Ottawa, who has left her husband, arrived in Toronto yesterday and left for the west on the 1.05 o'clock C. P. R. train. Captain Sherwood, of the Dominion Police, who also arrived in that city yesterday, made inquiries at the railway ticket offices regarding Hamilton's destination, but not finding particulars he also took passage on the 1.05 train west with Hamilton.

The treatment of many thousands of cases of those chronic weaknesses and distressing ailments peculiar to females, at the Invalids' Hotel and Surgical Institute, Buffalo, N. Y., has afforded a vast experience in nicely adapting and thoroughly testing remedies for the cure of woman's peculiar maladies.

Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is the outgrowth, or result, of this great and valuable experience. Thousands of testimonials, received from patients and from physicians who have tested it in the more aggravated and obstinate cases which had baffled their skill, prove it to be the most wonderful remedy ever devised for the relief and cure of suffering women. It is not recommended as a "cure-all," but as a most perfect Specific for woman's peculiar ailments.

As a powerful, invigorating tonic, it imparts strength to the whole system, and to the womb and its appendages in particular. For overworked, "worn-out," "run-down," debilitated teachers, milliners, dressmakers, seamstresses, "shop-girls," housekeepers, nursing mothers, and feeble women generally, Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is the greatest earthly boon, being unequaled as an appetizing cordial and restorative tonic.

As a soothing and strengthening nervine, "Favorite Prescription" is unequaled and is invaluable in allaying and subduing nervous excitability, irritability, exhaustion, prostration, hysteria, spasms and other distressing, nervous symptoms commonly attendant upon functional and organic disease of the womb. It induces refreshing sleep and relieves mental anxiety and despondency.

Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is a legitimate medicine, carefully compounded by an experienced and skillful physician, and adapted to woman's delicate organization. It is purely vegetable in its composition and perfectly harmless in its effects in any condition of the system. For morning sickness, or nausea, from whatever cause arising, weak stomach, indigestion, dyspepsia and kindred symptoms, its use, in small doses, will prove very beneficial.

"Favorite Prescription" is a positive cure for the most complicated and obstinate cases of leucorrhœa, excessive flowing, painful menstruation, unnatural suppressions, prolapsus, or falling of the womb, weak back, "female weakness," anteversion, retroversion, bearing-down sensations, chronic congestion, inflammation and ulceration of the womb inflammation, pain and tenderness in ovaries, accompanied with "internal heat."

As a regulator and promoter of functional action, at that critical period of change from girlhood to womanhood, "Favorite Prescription" is a perfectly safe remedial agent, and can produce only good results. It is equally efficacious and valuable in its effects when taken for those disorders and derangements incident to that later and most critical period, known as "The Change of Life."

"Favorite Prescription," when taken in connection with the use of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, and small laxative doses of Dr. Pierce's Purgative Pellets (Little Liver Pills), cures Liver, Kidney and Bladder diseases. Their combined use also removes blood taints, and abolishes cancerous and scrofulous humors from the system.

"Favorite Prescription" is the only medicine for women, sold by druggists, under a positive guarantee, from the manufacturers, that it will give satisfaction in every case, or money will be refunded. This guarantee has been printed on the bottle-wrapper, and faithfully carried out for many years.

Large bottles (100 doses) $1.00, or six bottles for $5.00.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

Educationally, Markdale is rather a remarkable town, but then its School Board is composed of a remarkable set of men, who are, to say the least, remarkably unlike any School Trustees we have had the delightful honor of coming in contact with. The way they "bounce" teachers and fill the vacancies in an auction-sale-sort-of-style is also remarkable. In fact they are a mighty remarkable lot of gentlemen, and, for the sake of our much abused friend, the Public School Teacher, we earnestly trust that there is not another such a remarkable School Trustee Board in the universe!

The Owen Sound Advertiser apes the Canada Citizen, Grip and other milk-and-water Temperance-Political sheets, who strive to throw dirty water on Liberal Conservative Temperance men, such as Hon. Mr. Foster. Last week the Tizer sneeringly alluded to Grip's cartoon "illustrating the well "deserved spanking which Mrs. Yeomans administered to Mr. Foster, "who in his speech at the late Napanee Temperance Convention went "back on his old prohibition professions and tried to play fast and loose "with the question." Hon. Mr. Foster never tried to play fast and loose with Temperance—that is a falsehood manufactured out of whole cloth. As to what Mrs. Yeomans did or said, it is a matter of indifference. Temperance people disagree occasionally, and even the leaders of the Reform party have been known to differ in matters of national importance. So with the Conservative party. But for goodness sake don't try to make out that every member of your party is a prohibitionist, Mr. Tizer; for it won't work. The people know better. Sir Richard Cartwright knows better. Dr. Landerkin knows better. Yes, and James Henry Little knows better!

The Chatsworth correspondent of the Owen Sound Advertiser would make a rather clever editorial writer, but as a reporter he is not a brilliant success. Take his last batch to the Tizer for instance, and we find him commencing to write up an item anent Rev. C. Chiniquy's lecture in Chatsworth recently. The beginning is quite newsy, and interesting, but after penning two or three sentences the writer suddenly breaks off into an editorial article of nearly three quarters of a column in length. Well written it is; but the presumption of trying to get into the editorial shoes is—well, rather cheeky.

THE IRISH TURMOIL.

Blunt's Trial—Important League Convention—Balfour's Work in Ireland.

A Dublin cable says: The trial of Sir Wilfrid Blunt, at Woodford, was resumed yesterday. Mr. Harrington, counsel for the defence, applied to the Court for a summons to compel the attendance of Mr. Balfour, Chief Secretary, as a witness, in order to show whether any information had been sworn to as stated in the proclamation that the proposed meeting at Woodford last Sunday would lead to a breach of the peace. Mr. Renans, counsel for the prosecution, denied the right of the defence to ask what had happened in Council at Dublin. The Magistrate said Mr. Harrington's application was founded on the assumption that the statements in the proclamation were false, and the Court was not competent to decide the question. The hearing of the evidence was then resumed. The solicitor for the defence wade a formal affidavit in support of the application for the summoning of Mr. Balfour and the case was adjourned.

A Convention of the National League will open at Cardiff on Saturday next and will last three days. Commoners T. P. O'Connor, J. O'Connor Crelly, Foley and Biggar and a number of Welsh members will speak. The resolutions to be presented to the Convention declare that the meeting represents 2,000,000 of the Irish race settled in Great Britain, that "we believe that Ireland will never be peaceful and prosperous until she has control of her own affairs," and that "we will stand with the people at home until their rights are won."

Mr. Balfour's arrival in Dublin has already borne fruit at Woodford and elsewhere. Dublin Castle at one moment was actually in charge of a clerk in the Under-Secretary's office. Coercion in Mr. Balfour's hands will be no rosewater business. Lord Randolph Churchill's prediction at Stockton that Ireland would be got well in hand before next February expresses the real belief of Mr. Balfour and his colleagues. The suppression of the Woodford meeting shows how far they are ready to go. The Irish leaders meant this meeting as a challenge. They doubted whether the Government would venture to prevent an assemblage of the English Home Rule League addressed exclusively by Englishmen. They doubt no longer. They see the policy of repression and suppression is to be tried in grim earnest. Nor need either side regret that this question should be brought to a square issue. If Ireland can be governed from Dublin Castle, it will be governed this winter. If it cannot, so much stronger will be the argument for Home Rule.

A last (Friday) night's London cable says: Mr. Gladstone on his way back to Hawarden, at Staleybridge, made a speech, in which he advised the people to settle the Irish question, otherwise no English business could be transacted in Parliament.

James Donnelly, the dynamiter, who was convicted in 1883 in Edinburgh, has died in Chatham prison of consumption.

Earl Spencer, speaking at Bedford to day, said there was no doubt that there were extreme men in both England and in Ireland, who were ready to commit dynamite outrages in order to effect their purpose; but nothing was more mischievous than to attempt to confuse the Irish in one body by mixing up the party of Parnell with the dynamiters. (Cheers.) He was happy to think such efforts had failed. The Parnellites had no greater enemies than O'Donovan Rossa and his crew. (Hear, hear.) If the Liberal policy of conciliation prevailed, it would end these abominable crimes, but if coercion prevailed for any length of time, he saw the greatest danger from secret societies reviving, and extremists with their dynamite coming to the front. The present Liberal policy was not founded on despair—unless it were despair of the old worn-out methods. It was a policy bright with hope in the future, and with confidence in the result of reliance on the Irish people in throwing upon them the responsibility of governing their own country. (Cheers.)

FIENDS UNHUNG.

A Young Girl's Terrible Experience in the Wisconsin Lumber Woods.

A Chicago despatch says: Some time ago Julia Howdan, of this city, a pretty young woman, saw an advertisement in a paper for a girl to do housework in the country, and answered it. She met a woman who gave the name of Cassidy, and was taken by her to Marinette, Wis. At the station Mrs. Cassidy took a carriage and they drove into the country. They stopped at what looked like a farmhouse. Julia went to bed and when she awoke next day she found she had been dressed in short skirts and gaudy hosiery and heard a dance going on downstairs, where there were a number of other girls similarly attired. She tried to escape but was kept a close prisoner for two weeks. She finally got out and reached home yesterday morning. Later in the day she met Mrs. Cassidy on the street and had her arrested. In court Miss Howdan repeated her story in detail. She said that one night she escaped from the den to the woods. Dogs were put on her track and a party of men caught her and dragged her back to the house. Once when she was sick Mike Leahy, the keeper of the place, compelled her to saw wood all day. She told her story to two of the rough woodmen whom she was compelled to entertain and they helped her to escape. Mrs. Cassidy was held for trial.

Schools Closed for Want of Coal.

A Springfield, Ill., despatch says: On account of the scarcity of coal, caused by the strike of the coal miners in this district, the public schools were to-day compelled to close. The price of anthracite coal has advanced $1 per ton, and a 100 per cent. advance in bituminous coal is predicted. A few days of cold weather will cause a shortage of fuel among private consumers, which will undoubtedly result in a vigorous howl. Some of the mines are still being worked, but the coal pool will not receive any orders from private consumers.

In the midst of a driving snowstorm Judge Angers was sworn in at Quebec yesterday afternoon, and inaugurated his reign as Lieutenant-Governor of Quebec. The ceremony was of a more than usually imposing character, and attracted a considerable attendance. A largely attended levee and state dinner followed the swearing in.

THE FISH DISPUTE.

What West and Others Think of Chamberlain's Appointment.

A Washington (D.C.) despatch says: Mr. Joseph Chamberlain has notified Sir Lionel Sackville West that he intends to sail for America to-day. Mr. West is a diplomat. He says that it "amuses him to hear and read of the opposition to Chamberlain." Mr. West is not so well pleased over the outlook as he would appear to be. On the contrary, he is very much dissatisfied with Chamberlain's appointment. No man knows better than the British Minister that there are not ten Senators among the seventy-six in the United States Senate who would dare to vote for any measure which may be opposed by any considerable number of Irish American citizens. Mr. West also relates fully the very unpleasant "hole" into which he is thrust by the appointment of Chamberlain upon the same commission with himself. But Mr. West is too well versed in diplomatic etiquette to suggest to his Government that the gentleman who has been selected as his superior on the commission is unfit for the place. The situation is unfortunate, to put it mildly. In the first place, Congress set the seal of its disapproval upon the idea of a commission so emphatically last winter that there can be no possible hope of the approval of any measure in the House if the terms of the forthcoming convention are such as to require the sanction of that branch. Even if it does not affect the revenues, and can therefore go into effect with the approval of the Senate alone, it is destined to meet with but poor support in that body. One of the best posted men in the Upper House said to-day: "I am exceedingly sorry to learn that the President has decided not to interfere in the appointment of the British Commissioners. The sentiment of more than half the Senate is opposed to Mr. Chamberlain's position upon the Irish question, and the others are generally inclined in a lesser degree to take the same views. Every Irish society in the United States will in all probability oppose any measure in which Chamberlain has a hand. Couple with this state of affairs the fact that the Senate is opposed to the settlement of differences through a joint commission, and it will readily be seen that any treaty which may be negotiated will have a very slim chance of ratification. I have no idea that anything can be accomplished by this commission as it is at present constituted." Messrs. Angell and Putnam, the American members of the commission, have returned to Washington, and are in frequent consultation with Secretary Bayard regarding the approaching negotiations. The English commissioners are expected here about the end of the first week in November. Instructions will be given to the U. S. Customs offices to extend to them the courtesies usually accorded visiting diplomats in the matter of free admission of personal effects, etc. It is the present intention to have the negotiators meet in the Department Building, and the large room near the Secretary's office, known as the diplomatic reception-room, will be set apart for their consultations.

ALLEGED MIRACULOUS RECOVERY

Strange but Well-Authenticated Case of a Michigan Lady.

A Corunna, Mich., despatch says: There has been considerable excitement here over a so-called miracle which occurred to Mrs Andrew Eldridge, wife of a respectable man living for many years in this city. In nearly her own words the following is her version of the matter as given:

"I have been sick for years. Two years ago this month I suffered a stroke of paralysis of the entire right side, including both extremities. For ninety-eight days I was blind and speechless. I was always a believer in the Word of God, and that He was willing and able to heal my body. On Wednesday, the 12th inst., at about 11.30 a.m., I called upon God to either take me to Himself or heal my bodily infirmities as was best. I was lying on my right side and could not move over. God made known to me that he was willing to save me then, and I at once repeated the verse from His Word, 'Whosoever believeth on me,' etc., aloud and sat up in the bed, my husband supporting me. I arose and walked. To God alone be the glory.

"My mind was failing; now it is as good as ever. Since that day I have not taken one drop of medicine, and am each day growing stronger, and fully believe I am healed by the power and goodness of God alone. I will praise Him forever. Amen and amen."

A well-known physician says: "I have no comments to make, but I think Mrs. Eldridge is cured, and I have no doubt of her sanity or her firm belief in the interposition of God in her behalf."

Congregationalists and Union.

A Kingston despatch says: The Eastern Association of Congregational Ministers closed its session yesterday. Among the resolutions passed was the following: "That this association having had their attention called to certain proposals with a view to Christian union, emanating from the Provincial Synod of the Episcopal Church, they would place on record their warm approval of every wise movement towards such a union of all Christian Churches, but they consider that no proposal can be seriously entertained that is not based on a hearty recognition of the validity of the ordination of ministers of other communions. They further consider that the greatest hindrance to the success of such a movement lies in the exclusiveness of the clergy of the Episcopal Church (with a few honorable exceptions), manifested in their refusal to exchange pulpit services or to co-operate in general religious work with ministers of other denominations in the land."

Of a Similar Flavor.

Mrs. Waldo, of Boston (who is entertaining young Mr. Wabash, of Chicago)—I have a treat for you to-day, Mr. Wabash, in the way of some broiled bivalves. My husband is very fond of them.

Young Mr. Wabash (trying one)—They are certainly delicious, Mrs. Waldo. They taste something like oysters.

The late Richard Quain left nearly his entire fortune, amounting to $375,000, to University College, London.

THE DYNAMITE STORY.

Movements of Millen and Melville—Conspiracies to Assassinate.

A London cable says: An inquest was held yesterday on the dynamiter who died of consumption in his lodging house on Lambeth road. The deceased came from America a short time ago, and was seen in frequent communication with members of the Clan-na-Gael, including Melville, the principal agent in London. The revolver found in the deceased's lodging bears a number showing it to have been issued by the Clan-na-Gael. One of the witnesses called to establish his identity was a member of the same body named Hawkins, who with deceased was lately shown around the House of Commons by Mr. Joseph Nolan, a member of the Parnellite party. In the possession of Hawkins the police found a newspaper cutting announcing that Mr. Balfour, the Irish Chief Secretary, was to address an open air demonstration of Conservatives in Birmingham on November 2nd. It is believed a plot exists to attempt Mr. Balfour's murder on that occasion. The Chief Secretary is, therefore, being closely guarded night and day.

A London cable says: In reference to the statement of Commissioner Monro, of the detective department, at the inquest over the body of Cohen, the alleged dynamiter, yesterday, that Gen. Millen, the head of the Clan-Na-Gael Society, was in London during the Jubilee, the police state that Millen has never set foot in England. They say he resided at Boulogne and Paris. A detective called on him at Boulogne before the Jubilee celebration and warned him that he knew of the plot against the Queen. Millen then fled to Paris. From there he went to Brussels, then to Rotterdam and from that city to Amsterdam. At the latter place he took passage, with his wife and daughter, on the 22nd of this month, on steamer Edam for New York. With regard to Melville, the London agent of the society, the police say that when he arrived in London he took lodgings in a mean quarter in Gladstone street, and was in impecunious circumstances. Melville had visited Joseph Nolan, Irish member of Parliament, in company with Michael Hawkins. Both Melville and Hawkins had been seen in Cohen's company. Melville went to Paris and saw Dennehey and Maloney, who sailed for America on Aug. 17th. Dennehey is a member of the Clan-Na-Gael Society and resides in Brooklyn. Melville returned to London in a more prosperous condition. He lived at the Metropole Hotel and spent money freely. He was constantly in the company of a Miss Kennedy, with whom he travelled through Ireland and then to Paris. They lived in grand style. In Paris he called on General Millen at the Hotel du Palais. Melville finally sailed from Havre on Sept. 17th for New York. Miss Kennedy accompanied him. On reaching New York Miss Kennedy was arrested for smuggling. Burchall's address in Philadelphia is 2,521 North Sixth street. The police claim to have proof against him and Hawkins, but it is not known what they will do now that Melville has fled. Melville's address is "Care of Moroney, 925 Tenth avenue, New York."

Mr. Joseph Nolan, M.P., denies emphatically that he has any knowledge of dynamiters. He says he believes a base attempt has been made to implicate him with such persons. The inquest and proceedings in the Cohen case, in his opinion, had been designed to assist the nefarious policy of the Government.

Spurgeon Quits the Baptist Union.

A London cable says: Mr. Spurgeon has withdrawn from the Baptist Union. In announcing his decision to withdraw and replying to his critics he says: "To pursue union at the expense of the truth is treason to Jesus. To tamper with His doctrine is to become traitors to Him. We have before us the wretched spectacle of professedly orthodox Christians publicly avowing union with those who deny the faith, calling the fall of man a fable and denying the personality of the Holy Ghost." Replying to the question why he does not start a new denomination, he says it is a question for which he has no liking; that there are enough denominations already, and that if another were formed the thieves and robbers who have entered the other gardens walled around would enter it also, so nothing would be gained. Baptists generally regret Mr. Spurgeon's decision, and are urging him to reconsider it.

Judge O'Connor at Cornwall.

A Cornwall despatch says: Judge O'Connor has been suffering for some time from a severe cold and cough complicated by dyspepsia and insomnia. The travelling and work on circuit have prevented his getting needful rest and treatment, but he is now much better and is rapidly gaining strength. At the assizes yesterday Joseph Charlebois was charged with shooting Osborne Simpson in the arm and leg at the hotel of M. Bisner in the village of Alexandria last fall. The defence was that Charlebois was protecting the hotel against a mob, and that Simpson was shot by a misconception or accident. Verdict not guilty. Mrs. Julia Lalonde brought an action against D. Dereck, postmaster at Glenwalter, to recover damages for indecent assault. The jury were of opinion that it was a case of blackmail and they found a verdict for the defendant.

An Inter-Provincial Ploughing Match.

A Montreal despatch says: The awards in the County of Hochelaga Agricultural Society's annual ploughing match were only made known at a late hour yesterday. In the senior class there were thirty-seven entries, including several ploughmen from Ontario. The first prize was awarded to Adam Hood, of the township of Scarborough, who wins the handsome gold medal presented by Mr. Hugh Paton, Master of the Montreal Hunt, and $75. Second prize was won by Wm. Milliken, of the township of Markham, Ont., and third by Thomas McLean, of township of Vaughan, Ont., with Amile Delorme, of the county of Hochelaga, fourth. In the young ploughman's class the first four prizes were won by Quebec men, the fifth being won by Ar. McPhail, of Dundas county, Ont. The ploughing was unusually good.

—Wm. A. Woodhouse, who was arrested here for horse-stealing and taken to Simcoe for trial, was Friday sentenced to serve twelve months in Central Prison.

A DIABOLICAL PLOT.

A Brooklyn Lady Fatally Injured by the Explosion of a Package—Her Little Boy Badly Hurt.

A New York despatch says: About 10 o'clock on Friday night a young man, aged about 21 years, dressed in the garb of an American District Telegraph messenger, presented himself at the residence of Mr. Joseph Weischler, of the dry goods firm of Weischler & Abrahams, of Brooklyn, at 329 Washington avenue, in that city. To the servant who opened the door he handed a small package addressed to Mr. Weischler. That gentleman not being home, the package was carried to Mrs. Weischler. On opening it she found two small boxes, one of which was made of paper and the other of wood. The latter had a sliding top and she attempted to open it. She had only pulled the top a little when there was a sudden explosion, and she sprang to her feet screaming with pain, while her boy joined her with his cries. The servants rushed into the room and found Mrs. Weischler in a terrible condition. Her face and hand were badly lacerated and she was almost blinded. The boy, too, was rolling about the floor in agony from the pain caused by lacerations of his face and hands. An examination showed that the faces of Mrs. Weischler and her son were filled with small pices of metal which had been driven into them by force of the explosion. The boy, while painfully hurt, is not considered to be in any danger, but in the case of Mrs. Weischler it is feared that lockjaw may set in and that her death is certain. The most careful and minute examination failed to disclose any trace of the explosion, and the police are unable to say or even to guess what it was. There was no sign of any machinery to have worked an explosion, and none of the little bits of metal about similar to those which were driven into the face of Mrs. Weischler and her son. Where the explosives and the pieces of metal were kept is a thorough puzzle. The only reasonable explanation offered was that some new kind of chemical compound had been used, which, occupying a small space, has tremendous force and is exploded by a slight friction. The boxes will be thoroughly and carefully examined by experts, and it is possible that something may yet be found which will lead to the discovery of just what the explosive was.

Anti-Scott Fire Bugs.

A Peterboro' despatch says: Very recently the residence of Wm. Yelland, in the heart of the town, and the Rev. Mr. Tovell's parsonage and Mr. Rossiter's—the latter being a Scott Act informer—were set on fire by having kerosene distributed freely over the verandah and front door, and last night similar treatment was given to Dr. Fife, President of the Scott Act Association. Dr. Fife has offered a reward of $200 and the Mayor $500 for the conviction of the person or persons guilty of committing the act. The inspector has been fining the hotels to a very considerable extent lately. Over $5,000 has been taken from the violators of the Scott Act since the 1st of January last, and the opponents of the Act have now become exasperated, having been convicted so recently, and these fires are supposed to be the result of their wrath. The damage to all the properties is fully covered by insurance.

The Ottawa Elopement.

An Ottawa despatch says: The outcome of the recent sensational elopement from this city is as follows: Messrs. Gormally & Sinclair give notice that William Henry Middleton, of Ottawa, will apply to Parliament next session for a bill of divorce from his wife, Mary Froude Middleton, on the ground of adultery and desertion.

Mr. Fenwick Hamilton, accused of eloping with Mrs. Middleton, is at the St. Lawrence Hall, Montreal, and says he shall sue all the papers which maligned him.

A Montreal despatch says: Mrs. Middleton has telegraphed a local paper to contradict the report concerning the elopement, it being entirely false. "I am here for the purpose of procuring a divorce. Please contradict any statements concerning Mr. Hamilton relative to my affairs. If you do this for me you will greatly oblige.—Yours truly (signed) MARY F. MIDDLETON."

Important Legal Decision.

A Cornwall despatch says: A somewhat new point of practice in criminal cases was developed at the Assizes here. An indictment for assault occasioning bodily harm was being tried before Judge O'Connor. Under such an indictment the defendant cannot be sworn as a witness. At the conclusion of the trial His Lordship, instead of charging the jury in the ordinary way, directed them simply to find whether bodily harm had been occasioned to the prosecution. They found that it had not. This finding reduced the case to one of common assault. The defendant was thereupon sworn and gave evidence, this being allowed in the cases of common assault or assault and battery. Daniel McCourt was the defendant and Mrs. McWhinney the prosecutrix. The matter arose out of a row between neighbors. McCourt was acquitted.

Reckless Extravagance.

And just at present in San Francisco we can't say that a Scotchman wants nerve or backbone, for there's one of them at the head of the grand jury. "What do you think of it?" asked St. Peter.

"Weel, I'm a stranger here, an' I dinna ken if I've any richt tae cresticize, but I'm thinkin' a' this is fair extravagance."—San Francisco Chronicle.

AN INTERESTING DISCOVERY.

The Warrant for John Bunyan's Arrest Found Among Some Old Family Papers.

Everybody who has read or has heard read in childhood, as the majority have, John Bunyan's story of his dream of the Pilgrim's Progress will be interested to learn that the warrant for his imprisonment has been discovered among the papers of the descendants of one of Bunyan's fellow victims. The following is the story, as told in the London Times, of the discovery, and the text of the warrant:

On the accession of the Danby Ministry, the policy of toleration towards Nonconformists was reversed by proclamation dated February 3rd, 1674-5, all conventicles were suppressed, and all licenses to preach withdrawn. Bunyan was left at the mercy of his enemies, who struck at him with all possible speed.

The movers would be Sir W. Beecher, an M.P. for the borough, Sir George Blundell, and Dr. Foster, Chancellor of Lincoln, three of the magistrates connected with the first imprisonment—bitter harassers of Dissenters. All three had distrained for fines, and Foster, as Commissary of the Archdeaconry Court, had in the year 1668-9 alone inflicted 1,400 of these fines. They collected a strong bench—Sir John Napier, M.P. for the county, six baronets and seven minor luminaries—and under their hands and seals was issued the following warrant:

To the constables of Bedford and to every of them:

J Napier — Whereas information and complaint is made unto us that (notwithstanding the Kings Majties late Act of most gratious goodwill and free pardon to all his subjects for past misdemeanorus that by his said clementie and indulgent guard and favor they might bee mooved and induced for the time to come more carefully to observe his Highness lawes and Statutes and to continue in theire loyall and due obedience to his Majtie) Yett one John Bunnyon of ye said Towne Tynker hath divers times within one month last past in contempt of his Majtie good Lawes preached or teached at a Conventicle Meeting or Assembly under color or ptence of exercice of Religion in other manner than according to the Liturgie or practiss of the Church of England These are therein his Majties name to comand you forthwith to apprehend and bring the Body of the said John Bunnion before us or any of us or other his Majties Justice of Peace within the said County to answer the premisses and further to doo and receave as to Lawe and Justice shall appertaine and hereof you are not to faile Given under our handes and seales this flourthth day of March in the seven and twentieth yeare of the Raigne of our most gracious Soveraigne Lord King Charles the Second.

The document is so little thumbed or soiled that it cannot have been long in a constable's horny palm. The sufferer was not far to seek. He may even have done now as he did on his first arrest—gone to the constable's house to surrender. With him it was but simple duty. He did not dream of the great and noble use to which he was to turn his captivity nor that he himself would live to see some of the gain to religion and literature to ensue from it. It only remains briefly to indicate how this unknown and unsuspected treasure has been preserved to us, and Mr. Thompson permits me to say that he considers my account of it as reasonable and probable. Among the ministers ejected for Nonconformity in 1662 was one Ichabod Chauncy a son of Charles Chauncy, President of Harvard College. He settled at Bristol as a physician, sparing time to give valuable help to the harassed Dissenters, especially in defending those prosecuted under the Acts relating to religion. He was styled their "Attorney-General," and as such prosecuted and exiled with forfeit of land and goods in 1686. He would have much to do with the success of Bushell's case at the end of 1670, where the full Court of Common Pleas held that a juryman could not be fined nor imprisoned on the ground that his verdict was against evidence or the direction of the judge. As the persons acquitted were William Penn and Mead, Bushell was considered as a second Hampden, and his case would be green early in 1675. It may well be that Bunyan's friends would forward this warrant to their champion in the hope that some use might be made of the very short month between the date of the proclamation (before which there was no legal offence) and the date of the warrant. However, the intervention of the Bishop of Lincoln would soon be known, the sufferer was released in six months, and the warrant would pass into the good physician's pigeon-holes, where it would remain until it passed, with some documents derived from his father, into the hands of his grandson, Dr. Charles Chauncy, by whose family, I am informed by their solicitors, Messrs. Maples, Teesdale & Co., they have now been sold.

HE ROBBED HIS BOSS.

Mr. J. C. Rykert Swindled Out of $6,800 by a Dishonest Clerk—"Mort" Burtch Profits by His Tuition Under the Great Boodler.

A startling rumor is current upon the streets of St. Catharines regarding the escapade of a student in Messrs. Rykert & Ingersoll's office named Mort. Burtch, son of Joshua Burtch, who resides on the Great Western Hill, near the city. It seems that Mr. Rykert received two drafts yesterday morning for $3,800 and $3,000 respectively. The former was made on the Quebec Bank, Thorold, and the other on the Bank of Toronto, this city. He desired Burtch to proceed to Thorold and cash the draft drawn upon the bank there, and deposit the proceeds, together with the draft upon the Bank of Toronto, to his account at the Imperial Bank. Burch went to Thorold as directed and secured the $3,800 and then proceeded to the Bank of Toronto and endeavored to cash the other draft. Mr. Leitch, the pay clerk, offered to cash the draft in notes of small denomination, but these Burtch refused to accept, and left. There is little doubt that he succeeded in getting larger notes elsewhere, else he would have taken the $5 bills tendered. This occurred at about 2.30 yesterday afternoon, since which time nothing has been seen of the young man or the money. . Every possible effort was made this morning to ascertain Burtch's whereabouts. Finally Mr. Art. Camp, another student in Mr. Rykert's office, was sent to Lockport to find the young man if possible and procure all or a part of the funds. Young Burtch was in the habit of going to Lockport to visit friends every few weeks, and this is why he is supposed to have gone there now. The offence is not an extraditable one, and if Burtch chooses to hang on to his ill-gotten gains and remains under the protection of the United States the law cannot touch him.

A hundred photographs of the fugitive have been struck off and sent to the Chiefs of Police of the different American cities. The police here have the matter in hand, but the St. Catharines police are not very well up in this work. There is not much chance of there accomplishing much.

The winds of October have this year proved unusually fatal to London millionaires. The late Hugh McCalmont, banker, who died last week at his house in Grosvenor Place, was one of the richest men in London. Now Baron Herman de Stein has also passed away. Mr. McCalmont's fortune will probably exceed £4,000,000. In his lifetime he gave the late Lord Cairns £100,000 on his becoming Lord Chancellor and is said to have given him a similar sum afterward. He bequeaths about £3,000,000 to a nephew, Mr. McCalmont, a popular subaltern in the Scots Guards, with a weakness for boating, subject to an income till he is 27, while the capital still further fructifies. He gives £100,000 to St. George's Hospital, close to his house, but nothing at all to the present Lord Cairns, whose marriage to Miss Olive Berens will take place at the end of next month or the beginning of December. Baron Herman de Stein, who died in his 63rd year on Thursday, at Hyde Park Gate, has, like Mr. McCalmont, left a fortune of several millions. He was the head of the financial houses in Angel Court which floated successfully a half dozen foreign loans. He did for Portugal what Mr. McCalmont did for America, and was made a baron by the grateful king of that country. He gave large sums to all Jewish charities. He gave his daughter as a marriage portion nearly half a million when she married Sir David Solomon.

Hundreds of others were made enormously rich and thousands of miners and employees have received excellent wages for a number of years. Now the mill is pulled down and the site used for a waste dump. OUR BOUNDARY LINES.

How Canada is Divided from the United States.

(Golden Days, U. S.)

A glance at the map of the United States shows that its boundary adjoining Canada follows, the larger part of the distance, an irregular waterline formed by the great lakes and their outlets.

Thence from the Lake of the Woods, on the north of Minnesota, a more direct course is taken through the wilderness and over the mountains of the wild west to the Pacific coast.

This boundary between the countries is marked at regular intervals by pillars of wood and iron, earth mounds or stone cairns.

Beginning at the Lake of the Woods, cast-iron pillars have been placed alternately by the English and our Government, one mile apart, until reaching the Red River valley.

Those set by our neighbor were brought from over the ocean, while ours were made in Detroit. They are a hollow casting of a pyramidal form eight feet in height, having a base eight inches square and octagon flange one inch in thickness, with a top four inches square, surmounted by a solid cap.

Into these hollow posts are fitted well-seasoned cedar joists, with spikes driven through apertures made for that purpose in the casting. One half of the length of the pillars are firmly imbedded in the ground, so that the inscription on their sides, in raised letters two inches high, face the north and south, the first reading "Convention of London," the latter "October 20, 1818."

Beyond the Red River, earth mounds and stone cairns seven feet by eight generally denote the boundary line. Whenever wooden posts are used they are of the same height as the iron pillars and painted red above the ground.

Through forests a clearing has been made a rod wide, so that the course is plainly indicated. Where bodies of water are crossed monuments of stone have been raised several feet above high tide.

Over the mountains shafts of granite like grim sentinels guard the way. Altogether the fixing of the boundary marks was expensive, but it was well done.

Stringency in the money market in the east has extended to Manitoba, and all banks are now raising their rates of interest. The general impression here is that the Globe was right in its intimation that the Bank of Montreal was trying to block the sale of the Red River bonds by drawing from circulation $3,000,000.

ODD EXPRESSIONS.

How Some Quaint Popular Expressions Came Into Use.

Dido, Queen of Tyre, about seven centuries before Christ, after her husband had been put to death by her brothers, fled from that city and established a colony on the north coast of Africa. Having bargained with the natives for as much land as could be surrounded with a bull's hide, she cut the hide into narrow strips, tied them together and claimed the land that could be surrounded by the line thus made. She was allowed to have her way; and now when one plays a sharp trick, he is said to "cut a dido."

During a battle between the Russians and Tartars a private soldier of the former cried out, "Captain, I've caught a Tartar." "Bring him along," said the officer. "He won't let me," was the response. Canadian Cheese.

Mr. Lathrop, United States Consul at Bristol, makes the following report to Washington, which certainly is very flattering to Canadian cheese producers:

"The import trade of Bristol is largely made up of provisions. In this connection I wish to draw special attention to the way Canadian cheese has supplanted the United States product. The Canadian cheese is imported each year in increasing quantities in the Bristol district, and finds each year increasing favor, both with dealers and consumers. While the import of all foreign cheeses fell off in Liverpool in 1886 by 250,000 boxes, the import in Bristol from Montreal increased by 12,000 boxes—total for year 201,000 boxes, and the receipts from New York fell off considerably. Great Britain manufactures each year 135,000 tons—valued at about $35,000,000. Now, the very prince of English cheese is held to be Cheddar, made in Somerset, and yet Canadian cheese made on the Cheddar principle has actually, right here in Somerset, where I write, been sold for a penny a pound more than a cheese actually made in Cheddar Valley. There is a hot controversy now raging in the English papers as to whether Cheddar cheese is the result of particular herbage and pasturage, or of a particular mode of manipulating the milk; and I think that all but Somersetshire men are pretty well agreed that this toothsome cheese is the result of superior methods rather than of special grasses. And the Canadians have gone on improving until they have surpassed their teachers; but the United States do not appear to have proportionately advanced, or if they have they consume their best makes at home."

Sure Cure for Chapped Lips.

"As soon as the cold winds begin to blow," remarked a New York physician, "I am overrun with patients suffering from chapped lips. The trouble generally manifests itself in one wide cut in the middle of the lip. I used to treat such things as a laughable matter and prescribe some simple emollient, such as glycerine, for instance. But I soon found that such treatment was only a temporary remedy, for after partially healing the cut would reopen at the slightest exertion of the lips. The mere act of biting anything hard, laughing or yawning would make the unfortunate howl with pain. If the patient was addicted to the use of tobacco the chances were that he would have a bad lip all through the winter. In my researches for a permanent cure I ran across an old tramp printer, who had rubbed against the rough side of the world all his life and for whom every season had been a cold day. He told me that if I investigated the matter I would find that the people addicted to chapped lips were in the habit of touching them with their tongues. A sure cure, said he is to keep your tongue in your mouth. I have since followed his suggestion in my practice and never knew it to fail. The rough skin of the tongue scratches the lips, and when they have once become chapped the least contact is enough to keep the cut open."

HEARING NEWS OF A MURDER.

A Comical Story of Police Red-Tape in France—Finding the Right Man.

"Now I will show you how they did things in those days. I will tell you about the man who was assassinated. While I was on duty at night in the corps de garde a man came rushing in to say there was a terrible thing—they were assassinating a man in the Rue Cherchemidi. Well, instead of our going out as fast as we could to help this man who was assassinating or assassinated, the officer says to me: 'Go immediately and tell the Commissaire de Police—he lives in the Rue Grenelle, under a red lamp.' Well, away I go and find my Rue Grenelle and red lamp, and I make a great noise at the door for a long time; at last a head with a night-cap comes out of the window and asks me what in the world I want. 'The Commissaire de Police,' says I. 'Well, I am the Commissaire de Police: what do you want?' 'There is a man being assassinated in the Rue Cherchemidi!' 'Which side of the gutter?' says he. Well, I did not know anything about one side of the gutter or the other side, so I say at once boldly: 'The right side as you come down the street.' 'Ah,' he says, 'that is in the other arrondissement; go to the other commissaire, No. —, Rue——.' So away I go, with my man being assassinated all the time, and I find my other commissaire. 'Which side of the gutter?' says he. So I thought at any rate I would stick to my story, and I say: 'The right side coming down the street.' 'Ah! dit-il me regarde. But how long is it since they have been assassinating him?' 'About three-quarters of an hour,' says I. 'Ah! then he is dead by this time; we must get two men and a stretcher to carry him away.' So away we go with our stretcher, and I went with them, for I wanted to see whether the man was on the right side of the gutter or not—and we found him lying stone dead, with his head in the gutter. But he was more on the right side than on the left, and he was stabbed through the heart, so the three-quarters of an hour did not signify. But that is the way they do things here."

Farm and Garden.

The cultivation of bamboo for fencing material has been begun in California. It is said that an acre will produce pickets enough each year to make six miles of fence.

The American Cultivator predicts that the time is not far off when many disappointed farmers in the West will return to New England and take up farms, where the land can be worked to a certain profit by resolute and enterprising men.

The average shrinkage of steer going from Texas to Chicago is 100 pounds. The State furnishes an average 400,000 steers, which makes a shrinkage of 40,000,000 pounds, or, putting the average weight of a steer at 850 pounds, 47,058 head.

For keeping small quantities of seeds, paper bags are preferable to cloth, as they are better protection against moisture and insects. Always mark each package with the name of the seed contained in it, and the year in which it grew. Cold does not injure the vitality of seeds, but moisture is detrimental to all kinds.

For a horse that is weak in the knees, rub the limbs briskly with a woollen cloth, then bathe with salt and water, wipe dry and apply a mixture of one pint of alcohol and one drachm of tincture of Spanish fly, rubbing in a tablespoonful twice a day with the hand. Let the horse run in a loose stall deeply littered with sawdust or on an earth floor.

Almost any kind of material left on the ground under fruit trees will act as a fertilizer. It will at least prevent the growth of grass and weeds, and thus check loss of moisture and fertility that the tree needs to perfect its crop. It is as a mulch that the advantage of straw in an orchard consists. Its fertilizing value is very small, none of this being available until the straw has rotted.

Abandoned Corsets.

It is said that years ago Mrs. Scott Siddons' dressmaker advised her to leave off her corsets. "What, lose my stage figure!" she cried. "Impossible!" The dressmaker urged that she was losing her figure anyhow, and the only means of saving it was to take radical measures at once. "Well, here go my stays," said the actress, and the milliner proceeded to fit her a twenty-five inch waist. At the end of the season she came back again. "Make me a twenty-seven inch waist," she demanded, but in the meantime her figure below and above the waist had resumed their normal proportions, her skin had grown two shades fairer and clearer, and she looked younger. Since then she has never worn a stay, and she says that whereas before she abandoned them it was all she could do to drag through the last act, after she had dispensed with them she was so fresh and vigorous that she could have done a sixth act and not minded it. She still continues to wear very gorgeous gowns.

Mrs. Cleveland Growing Rotund.

By the way, a little horseback exercise would do Mrs. Cleveland no harm. It is rather a hateful thing to say, but I am going to tell the truth at all events—Mrs. Cleveland is growing fat. She is no longer the willowy, girlish White House bride, but a solid 170-pounder of the settled married woman type. The gushers who spout about the President's schoolgirl wife will have to revise their opinions if they are desirous of stating the truth. The change in Mrs. Cleveland's figure has added to her beauty, and she never loooked as well in her life as she does to-day.—Boston Traveller's Washington Letter.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

(From our Regular Correspondent.)

Washington, Oct. 31st, 1887.

As the time for assembling of Congress draws near, Washington has emerged from her Summer siesta and is in the midst of an era of preparation for the advent of assembled wisdom at the Capitol. The dawn of the approaching "season" is unusually radiant. It already reflects its glow over the whole city, and is prophetic of a reign of politics and gayety such as will cast a shadow over remembrances of preceeding Congressional sessions. Many of the people who possess wealth, culture and leisure, and make Washington their winter resort, have already returned. They will soon be followed by a general rush from all parts of the country. Then the ball begins. Congress and society will vie for supremacy. The former will interest, the latter will dazzle. The power of Society in Washington has to be seen to be appreciated. It exerts a strong control even over official life, and its power cannot be broken or dissembled. It reigns over Congress, in that it lures both Representative and Senator away from their duties at the Capitol. Not infrequently does the House of Representatives await a quorum until its truant members can be arrested in the enjoyment of a "high tea" or ball at Mrs. Secretary So-and-So's, and returned captive by the Sargeant-at-Arms. The monarchs of this power—the society leaders—will strain every nerve this season to increase its magnetism, and they promise a succession of entertainments on a scale that has not heretofore been attempted. Gossip is the ambassador and minister plenipotentiary of the social world. This year she tells of the mysterious costumes and surprises that will astound the oldest inhabitants, and add greatly to the splendor of display. Between Vanity Fair and the National Legislature, there will be nothing dormant in Washington the coming Fall and Winter, from the first whirl after Monday, December 5th, to the intermission which ensues when the mantle of Lent is thrown over society.

All Washington, and by that I mean the combination of social and official life at the Capitol, has been to the races the past week. The race season is indeed a gala time here. Fashion, with its modern tastes, is a great patron of the turf, and fashion nowhere rules with greater away than in her own stronghold at the Capitol of the Nation. Here a comparatively great proportion of the population can afford to enjoy themselves without regard to cost. Ergo, they all go to the races and lose their money. Heads of Departments, Chiefs of Bureau, down to the $900 clerk, may all be seen hovering about the bookmakers, or posing on the quarter-stretch for the admiration of the ladies on the grand stand, while the diplomatic dudes promenade with usual wont in front of the crowd. As they strutted up and down the past week, they seemed to feel that every eye was upon them; nor were they mistaken. The cut of their trousers, the shape of their collrrs, and their kaleidoscopic necties usually afford much amusement. The diplomat must be classed in the eccentric family of the genus homo, for both in his face and dress he seems to present in combination the fashions of Paris, London, Berlin and St. Petersburg.

Apropos of the races, the fact is lately developed that there are as many fine teams and handsome equipages in Washington as are to be found anywhere. Time was when a handsome turnout or fine span of horses was a rarity on the streets of the Capitol, and one involuntarily turned to look after the unusual sight. Now, however, such a state no longer exists. The miles of asphalt and smooth pavements are fairly alive during the winter, the elegant teams driven for the best part by their respective owners. General Beall, on his fine farm just outside the city limits, keeps so many fine horses that, were he so minded, it would be possible to appear with a new team every day for a considerable length of time. The President has a handsome team of blacks, and Secretary Bayard's favorite steed is a large powerful bay, mounted upon which it is no unfrequent sight to see him riding quietly along some unfrequented country road, half the time with his thoughts for sole companions.

The President is engaged in the preparation of his annual message to Congress. It goes without saying, that his chief topic will be the tariff problem and the question of a reduction of the surplus. It is also probable that there will again be something said upon Civil Service Reform. While the present Civil Service Reform laws have diminished the howl of the office-seekers and make life endurable at the Departments, they are still regarded as very imperfect, and afford many loop-hools through which the wily office-seeker manages to crawl. County News.

Judge Lane is ill.

All the Thornbury Teachers have been re-engaged.

The teachers and students have moved into the new High School building at Mt. Forest.

An insane old woman named Mrs. Smith, over 90 years of age, died in the Walkerton gaol on Saturday night week.

Several Mt. Forest boys will have to make an appearance at the Police Court to answer to a charge of damaging property on Hallowe'en.

Harrison's planing mill, Owen Sound, was destroyed by fire on Tuesday week, being without doubt the work of an incendiary. Loss about $12,000; insured for $3,000.

The Union hill curling and skating rink, Owen Sound, was destroyed by fire last week. The building was erected 20 years ago and its destruction was the work of an incendiary.

Information has been laid against hotelkeepers McQuillan & Cummins and shopkeepers Pilcher & McEachern, of Mt. Forest, for violation of the Scott Act. The two latter have effected a settlement.

The Enterprise says that Chesley boys placed a fine top buggy on the Presbyterian church shed in that town on Hallowe'en The Enterprise suggests that such senseless pranks be discountenanced in future.

On Friday week Mr. S. Curry, 3rd Con. Brant, was harrowing a field and one of his youngest daughters was sitting on the harrow. The harrow came in contact with some hard lumps of clay, when one half of it turned over and fell on the child's hand, bruising and crushing it badly.

About 1 o'clock on the 28th ult., the outbuildings of Mr. Wm. Keppler, of Lot 23, Con. 2, Proton, were destroyed by fire, together with 26 tons of hay, 6 loads of unthreshed peas, and 4 loads of unthreshed oats as well as two fine mares. Live stock and contents insured for $500. The fire is supposed to have taken place by children playing with matches.

On Monday week about 4 o'clock in the afternoon James Wilson of Mt. Forest, was engaged shingling a building for Mr. N. Roszel, at Egremont P.O., when he slipped from the roof and fell to the ground a distance of about twenty feet. Compound fracture of the thigh bone and two ugly gashes on the head, and probable internal injuries were the results.

A declaration of war has been issued between John Johnston and Hugh Jones. Jones is not big, but he's dangerous. And Johnston has had long experience in pugilistic encounters with his neighbors. It is therefore hard to say how the battle will end. After a preliminary skirmish, both parties adjourned to the office of the J.P.—Bruce Herald.

The conviction of Samuel Bailey for stealing a sheep from Mrs. Lightbody, in the County of Grey a year and a half ago, is a feather in the cap of constable Hefferman. Bailey might have enjoyed his mutton in peace, if Hefferman had not heard of the feast. Since his appointment as a constable, he has secured the conviction of several old offenders.—Bruce Herald.

Hallowe'en was not celebrated to any very considerable extent in Thornbury. The boys erected a fine big pyramid, consisting chiefly of barrels, on the centre of the bridge over the Beaver river. Just as the job was nicely completed, a force of constables—specially sworn in for the occasion—abruptly put in an appearance and politely but firmly requested the young men to demolish the elegant structure they had erected and return the barrels to their respective owners. The "boys" complied with considerable alacrity.

A fence is also being built between the block referred to and Mr. Sproule's residence (occupied by Mr. James Kester) on Sydenham street.

Bro. Newell, of the Dundalk Herald, vacated the editorial chair of that journal last week, his place being now filled by Mr. Spurr, of Toronto. Bro. Newell is a gentleman, and, during his brief sojourn in Dundalk, conducted the Herald on sound business principles and with considerable editorial ability. We regret his removal from the ranks of Grey county journalists, but wish him unqualified success in Uncle Sam's domains, whither he and his estimable and accomplished wife will shortly remove. At the same time we extend the right hand of fellowship to his successor, Mr. Spurr. No doubt the Herald will now be spurred on to increased activity.

Division Court drew a large crowd to Flesherton last Thursday. The sitting was prolonged until a late hour at night, and even then a number of cases had to be held over. Our town lawyer, John Frost, Esq., LL.B., had quite a number of important cases; also Messrs. Masson & Masson, of Owen Sound, and Mr. P. McCullough, of Markdale—all of which were cleverly handled. Judge Lane presided in his usual dignified and able manner. Such gentlemen are an ornament to the noble profession. Squire Armstrong, Clerk, and Mr. A. S. VanDusen, Bailiff, occupied their usual seats on the right and left of His Honor respectively. The dull monotony of the Court was occasionally relieved by bright sallies of wit from the Bench, the Bar and the Witness stand.

A colored family, living on the outskirts of this place, have been much annoyed of late by the outrageous and disgraceful pranks of a number of young hoodlums, who, unfortunately curse this otherwise quiet and respectable town by their presence. To hear the language of these young scamps one night recently, one would think colored people were lower in the social scale than animals, for they daren't maltreat the latter without being called to account for it, and they know it. But they seem to think otherwise as regards this colored family. The young hoodlums have been warned once to desist, and if they disregard the caution, the services of the strong stern arm of the law will be called into requisition. A debut before Squire Armstrong would probably cool their ardor mighty sudden.

BALFOUR AT BIRMINGHAM.

Ireland to be Scourged Into Submission and Free Speech to be Suppressed.

ORANGEMEN WILL FIGHT.

A last (Friday) night's London cable says; Mr. Balfour went to Birmingham to day and attended the first annual meeting of the Midland Conservative Union. He was accompanied by a detective and the chief of the Leamington police. At Birmingham armed detectives were posted at the depot to watch for suspicious characters. Mr. Balfour received during the day a hundred addresses from Conservative associations, and in thanking the deputations which brought them he gave assurance that the Government was resolved to proceed boldly and firmly with the work they had taken in hand in Ireland and bring it to a good conclusion. He admitted the task was a difficult one, but held that it was perfectly possible and capable of successful accomplishment. Certain incidents in Ireland had caused some of their friends some misgivings, but those incidents were due, not to lack of resolution on the part of the Government, but to defects in the law, which had never contemplated the present system of organized popular rebellion.

Mr. Balfour addressed a large and enthusiastic audience at the town hall this evening. He said he hoped that at the next session of Parliament England and Scotland would get a fair share of legislation. Still, the Irish question would remain the foremost problem in the mind of every one who took an interest in the fortunes of his country. He had noticed that Mr. Gladstone—(hooting, cries of "Chips," and laughter)—although he had mentioned his programme of legislation, did not appear to take a very lively interest in it himself. Except as regards the offer of the plundering of the Scotch and Welsh churches, as a bribe for the dismemberment of the empire, Mr. Gladstone displayed little interest in anything except the Irish question, and no man had done more to make it impossible to ignore the Irish question. Therefore Ireland would be his (Balfour's) topic to-night. The question was not whether Ireland was to be governed under her own or an English Parliament, but whether she was to be governed at all in accordance with any of those principles which had hitherto regulated the action of every civilized State in the world. (Cheers.) Referring to the events of the winter of 1885, he compared the Liberal party to those barbaric ancestors who got baptised because their king embraced Christianity. One morning Mr. Gladstone announced himself a Home Ruler, and forthwith a large section of the Liberals declared themselves Home Rulers. Some of them explained to a scoffing public the reason for their conversion, while others, like Harcourt, evidently believed that "Least said soonest mended," and that it was possible for men to utter their opinions regarding Ireland and yet retain the traditions hitherto governing their party. They might have allied themselves with the Parnellite party so far as the question of Home Rule was concerned and rejected fusion, but they had instead rejected an alliance and accepted fusion, and their principal object now, as evidenced by every paragraph of Mr. Gladstone's shameful speeches, was to render difficult the government of Ireland. In condemning Mr. Gladstone's inconsistency and his present tactics, Mr. Balfour declared that not one of the evictions now occurring could have been prevented, even if the amendment which Mr. Gladstone wanted had been inserted in the Land Bill. Mr. Gladstone's criticisms on land legislation were strange indeed, coming from a man who for sixteen or seventeen years had fruitlessly tinkered with the question. In regard to the unhappy affair at Mitchellstown Mr. Gladstone had attacked him (Balfour) personally for not listening in silence to bitter attacks made on men who spent their lives in defence of the law. The demon of inaccuracy had pursued Mr. Gladstone even to his assertions on this subject. But it was unnecessary to enter into details in justifying the police. If, as the Nationalists and Mr. Gladstone delighted to say, the police were defeated and routed, could any one blame them if they fired? (Cries of "Oh") The truth was, the Nationalists, including Mr. Gladstone, must choose upon which horse they will ride. If they choose to triumph in the defeat of the police, let them not blame the police for firing in self-defence. If they choose to say that the police were brutal butchers and they fired without cause, let us hear no more of this indirect triumph or their defeat. (Cheers.) Mr. Gladstone's attack on the character of Constable Whelehan, who was murdered by moonlighters, was the most monstrous of all his assertions and ought to cause shame to his followers. The statement that the police had paid an informer previous to planning the outrage was totally untrue. In comparison the number of meetings proclaimed by the Conservatives was much less than during Mr. Gladstone's administration.

Continuing, Mr. Balfour said he intended to stop speakers who directly advocated crime, but to tolerate those who only talked nonsense. Earl Spencer, he said, moved uneasily in the Parnellite livery, but Mr. Gladstone as if "to the manner born." He concluded by predicting that a steady application of the present policy of the Government would result in the Irish becoming enthusiastic and loyal supporters of an empire which they by their virtues were fitted to adorn.

Mr. William Johnston, member of Parliament for South Belfast, a Conservative, made a speech to-night at Glasgow. In the course of his remarks he said that every Orangeman in Ireland was determined to take up and use his rifle before he would allow the Empire to be torn up.

Earl Spencer, in a speech at Scarborough this evening, said it ill became Lord Hartington to make insinuations against Mr. Gladstone; that they were as undeserved and illogical as they were unfair. The treatment of Ireland, without regard to her national aspirations, was bound to fail.

A CANADIAN DEFAULTER.

An ex-Torontonian's Departure from New York—His Deficits.

A New York despatch says: David Scott, one of the ablest and most successful business men in this city in the paper trade, a partner in the old firm of Vernon Brothers & Co., and President of the Ivanhoe Paper Company, has mysteriously disappeared. The mystery is partly solved by the discovery, since Mr. Scott's disappearance, that he has withdrawn considerably over $40,000 in cash from the firm of Vernon Brothers & Co., and that he has involved the firm with the Ivanhoe Paper Company to the extent of $60,000, and with the Lawrenceville Cement Company, of 115 Broadway, for $10,000 more.

Mr. Scott disappeared on October 22nd, after he had had a long and exciting interview with Mr. Thomas Vernon, the senior partner of Vernon Brothers & Co., in which Mr. Vernon obtained from Mr. Scott a partial explanation of his business entanglements. While Mr. Vernon then and since Mr. Scott's disappearance has been able to learn the amount in which Mr. Scott has involved the firm, he has not been able to find out where the money went.

Mr. Thomas Vernon said in an interview yesterday: "Mr. Scott has been with the firm for thirty years. He came to New York from Toronto, Canada, with a letter of introduction, and was given a clerkship at $6 a week. He was bright and intelligent, and he rose rapidly in our esteem. After five years he was admitted to an interest in the firm."

Mr. Scott was also President of the Lawrenceville Cement Company. The directors met in the company's office in the Boreel building yesterday. Mr. Alvah Hall, one of the stockholders, said that the company held $10,000 in Mr. Scott's notes, but they were fully secured and the company would lose nothing. Mr. Hall added that he believed Mr. Scott to be temporarily insane.

Mr. Scott is a son of Mr. Scott, formerly Surveyor of Customs of Toronto. He is about 48 years old, and had been with the firm of Vernon Bros. & Co. for twenty-five years. The New York Sun has the following regarding him: An intimate friend of Mr. Scott said yesterday: "Mr. Scott's private charities will never be known. He was generous, charitable and open-handed. There are three tombstones in Greenwood that he has had erected over young men who had died friendless. One of these was the son of William Lyon Mackenzie, the Canadian patriot of 1837. Many men have told me with tears in their eyes of what Scott has done for them. He has been a changed man for a year past, has drank some and been to races, but I can't understand what he has done with his money."

WOMEN FIGHT WITH WOLVES.

Keeping the Desperate Brutes at Bay With a Lantern Till Help Comes.

A Houghton, Mich., despatch says: Dolphie Brunelle, a farmer near here, was called from his home on Wednesday and left his wife and daughter, the latter aged 17, alone. Mrs. Brunelle heard a noise in the calf-pen late in the evening, and she and her daughter went out with a lantern to see what was the matter. They found the barn surrounded by wolves, and before the women had time to retreat the ferocious animals surrounded them. The brutes were afraid of the lantern and retreated whenever it was swung toward them, but Mrs. Brunelle dared not swing the lantern violently for fear it would go out. With remarkable courage she worked her way step by step toward the barn, keeping the wolves at bay with the light. After ten minutes of the greatest ordeal she managed to reach a pitchfork, and while the daughter swung the lantern she attacked the wolves with the fork, finally succeeding in getting into the barn and closed the door. Then both fainted.

FINE FRUIT.

Apple Trees of 1812 Still in Full bearing.

At Dr. Springer's barns in East Hamilton is a sight really worth seeing. In one heap alone is a thousand bushels of apples (Rhode Island Greenings) and here and there are piles containing 100 or 150 bushels of other varieties. The fruit is all good and sound and was raised by the doctor in his splendid orchards. It may not be generally known that there are on Dr. Springer's premises apple trees which were planted in the year 1812. This season two of these bore fruit in abundance. The product of one was thirty bushels and of the other thirty-three bushels. The doctor has given great attention to fruit culture, and has been generally successful.

The Latest Craze in England.

A London cablegram says: We are threatened with a new craze, which, properly worked, deserves to become as popular as walking round the Agricultural Hall used to be. Napoleon Bird is astonishing the North of England with long-distance pianoforte performances. Last week this artist played at Stockport for thirty-six and a quarter hours without stopping, thereby beating his own best previous record by eleven and a quarter hours. Although much troubled by sleepiness during the last hour or two, he seems to have finished very fit, and wound up by singing "Rule Britannia" to his own accompaniment. At present there seems to be no rival in the field. But when we get our two or three men playing against one another on different pianos the sport will become exciting as well as intellectual.

It is stated in Ottawa that Dr. McMichael, Q. C., of Toronto, has been offered a position on the bench of the Queen's Bench Division, and that Judge Armour will be made justice of that division.

Mr. Robert J. Burdette has written as follows to a comedian who desired the humorist to write a play for him: "Thought of it once or twice, but never got quite so far as the title. If ever I do commit the deed, however, I'll tell you the first one. But, seriously, I couldn't do it. It isn't in me. Play-writing demands a peculiar genius, for which I have searched all through my baggage a hundred times, but it isn't there. I think it must have been seized in the custom house."

A KENTUCKY TRAGEDY.

A Dissipated Gambler Murders His Wife Child and Brother-in-Law and Commits Suicide.

A Louisville despatch says: At 10 o'clock yesterday morning Mrs. Mary Bruner, the mother of Mrs. Charles B. Brownfield, who lives at 1,922 West Chestnut street, called at the residence of her daughter. As no one answered her ring she raised the window of the little one-story frame cottage. The sight that met her eyes was a horrible one. In the middle of the door opening between the room occupied by her daughter and husband and their little daughter of 8 or 10 years, and the one occupied by Wm. Bruner, a brother of Mrs. Charles Brownfield, who resided with the family, was the body of Charles B. Brownfield, her daughter's husband, suspended by a strap, dead. At the suicide's back and on a bed in a dark corner reposed the body of Wm. F. Bruner with his throat cut from ear to ear. Facing the self-murderer in the other room was another bed upon which, stiffened in their blood, were the forms of his wife and child. Their heads were almost severed from their bodies. Beneath Brownfield's feet lay the razor with which the awful deeds had been committed. The bed clothing was drenched with blood and the faces of the victims besmeared so that they were almost beyond recognition. On the bureau in the parlor the following letter, dated 6.30 a. m., and written by the murderer in an unusually legible hand, was found:

"To all whom it may concern,—I, Charles B. Brownfield, murdered my dear wife and baby, also W. F. Bruner, my brother-in-law. I killed my wife and baby because I was tired of life and did not want them left penniless in the world and no one to care for them. My cause of being tired of life is gambling. Now let my brothers and friends take warning. I killed W. F. Bruner because I did not think he was fit to live, and now I will make an attempt on my life, so good-bye my father, brother and sister, and friends and relations. All take warning. Good-bye.

CHARLES B. BROWNFIELD.

Charles B. Brownfield was about 30 years of age and very dissipated. He caused his father, Squire Brownfield, a magistrate and highly respected old gentleman, much trouble. He was a mechanic and worked in the shops of the Louisville & Nashville Railroad in this city.

DRUNK AND CRAZY.

A Swiss Silk Weaver Shoots His Wife and Fires His House—Two Children Burned to Death.

A last (Wednesday) night's Hebron, Conn., despatch says: John Hodel, a silk weaver, shot his wife last night and then set fire to the house. Two children were burned to death. Hodel fled, but was captured. The murderer says he told his wife last night he was going to kill himself. She said she wanted to die, too. An agreement was then made that the whole family should die together. There were two small children—boys, aged 3 and 6—and the mother expected to be confined again in a month. During the night, Hodel says he brought the children from an adjoining room and placed them in the bed with their mother and set fire to the bed, but the smothering process was too slow, so he got a shotgun and fired both barrels into his wife's breast. The flames then spread and smothered both children. With nothing on but a nightshirt, Hodel ran down the road towards the depot crying "Fire!" The neighbors gathered and put the fire out. Hodel wandered around awhile and then returned to the house, where he was arrested. He was a silk weaver, earning good wages and had a half a dozen barrels of home-made wine and cider in his cellar. Drinking this made him crazy and prompted the crime. He is a Swiss and came from Lucerne eighteen months ago. He is 31 years old.

CANADA AND AMERICA.

New York Chamber of Commerce on International Relations.

A New York despatch says: The Chamber of Commerce yesterday adopted resolutions favoring the attempt now being made by British members of Parliament and others to have urged upon Congress the importance of having all disputes or differences between the United States and Great Britain settled by arbitration when not accomplished by diplomatic proceedings. Resolutions were adopted favoring the peaceful settlement of the Canadian fishery question between Great Britain and this country, and a committee was appointed to investigate the possibility of a material expansion of our commerce in this direction by inviting arguments for and against Commercial Union with Canada, and documentary evidence as to the extent and prospects of the trade between the two countries, and to report to the Chamber such recommendation for its action as would enable it to contribute its influence, not only to the early adjustment of the fishery question, but to aid in procuring the extension of the commerce of this country, should such action be deemed desirable.

The Heroine of a Romance Dying.

A Baltimore despatch says: The report that the beautiful Miss Williams, of this city, was at one time engaged to Mr. Herbert, the owner of the Muckross estate, in Killarney, is slowly dying at her home here, recalls a romance. As is well-known the wedding-day was set, but the ceremony was forbidden by Mr. Williams because Mr. Herbert was a divorced man and his estates were heavily encumbered. Subsequently the young lady fell from her horse, and since then she has been an invalid. She obeyed her father and gave up the man she loved, but the struggle was too much. She pined away gradually, and now they say is slowly dying, surrounded by all the comforts of a luxurious home and the attentions of a devoted family circle.

A FIGHT WITH INDIANS.

An Engagement in Which U. S. Cavalry Put the Redskins to Flight—Five Indians and One White Killed.

A Crow Indian Agency, Mont., despatch says: Yesterday morning a scout and interpreter were sent to the Indian village ordering the chiefs to come to Gen. Ruger at headquarters. After the chief had harangued the camp a number of them rode before Gen. Ruger's quarters, where a parley took place, at the end of which the chiefs returned to their camp. The cavalry were down in full field order on the eminence fronting the Indian position. The Indians soon began riding about and singing war songs. At the end of the time allowed the Indians to come in with the bad young men, whose surrender the General had demanded, the cavalry advanced, the infantry took position and the Indians opened fire. At the first volley Corp. Chas. Simpson, of Troop "K," 1st Cavalry, was shot dead. Private Euguene Moller, of Troop K, was wounded four times. The Indians took a position in the rifle pits and in the bush. The Hotchkiss rifle planted the first shot beyond the Little Horn. The next fell in the Indian camp, and one Indian and a horse were killed. The cavalry now advanced upon the Indians, driving them into the bush. Sword Bearer was killed, being shot twice in the skirmish by G Troop, 1st Cavalry, commanded by Capt. F. C. Upham and Lieut. J. B. Aylesacre. The Crow scout, Firebug, also claims to have fired the fatal shot. Nearly all of them came into the agency, only about twenty escaping to the hills. The latter are now being pursued by cavalry. The above names cover all the casualties, except one, who was slightly disabled by a fall. Five Indians are reported dead. There is no danger to the settlements.

SOLD HIS DAUGHTERS.

A Sot Who Bartered Away His Flesh and Blood to Savages for Whiskey.

A special to the New York World from Ottawa, Ont., says: While a Victoria schooner was lying at the wharf at Barcley Sound, on the west coast of Vancouver Island, recently, the captain and crew were surprised to see two white girls running towards the vessel, closely pursued by three or four Indians. The girls sprang on board and begged the captain to protect them from their pursuers. The Indians demanded the girls as their property, but the captain refused to give the girls up. The Indians went away and returned largely reinforced. The captain then surrendered the girls for fear of his life. They are daughters of Wm. Thompson, of San Juan. The father became dissipated, and all he earned went for the purchase of liquor. When he could no longer obtain money or liquor he sold his eldest daughter to a wealthy Chinaman, to whom, it is said, she was married at the point of a revolver. His wife died of a broken heart, and in one of his revelries at the Indian camp, it is alleged, he agreed to barter two of his daughters for whiskey. The following night the girls were carried away by a few of the tribe. Since their captivity they have been brutally treated. A younger sister, only 8 years old, was sold to another tribe.

A Sleeping Beauty in Court.

A Detroit despatch says: The Coroner's inquest in the case of Mrs. Jane Hoag, of Adrian, who drowned herself on Saturday, was marked by a peculiar episode. Gertrude King, the principal witness, who is given to naps lasting from two to four hours, during which she cannot be aroused, fell asleep in court-room, and the able legal gentlemen present, after shaking her, were perforce compelled to await the pleasure of the sleeping beauty. Finally the inquest was adjourned until to-morrow. The girl is 18 years old and the ablest slumberer in Lenawee county.

CHASING WILD ANIMALS.

A St. Louis despatch says: One of the most exciting scenes that ever occurred in this city took place at the Union depot between 3 and 4 o'clock this afternoon, and for a time created not only a tremendous excitement, but the wildest kind of a scene among the people present. During the day a special train of passenger and flat cars bearing John Robinson's menagerie and circus people and their animals from Fort Scott, Kansas, came into the Union depot en route to Cincinnati, where they are to winter. About half-past 3 the train pulled out to cross the bridge, and while passing over the "Puzzle switch" in the depot yard a flat car flew the track, followed by others, and ran into a freight train on the side track, demolishing two or three cars and killing George Squires, a canvas man, and badly injuring two other circus men named Fuller and Isle. In the smash-up some of the animals' cages on the flat cars were broken, and a Bengal tiger, two lions, a leopard, an ibex and a vulture escaped. The wildest kind of a commotion followed. The depot officials and policemen ran frantically about shouting warnings, and there was a general and quick stampede from the yards to the streets beyond. The circus and depot men then made search for the animals. The leopard was found crouched under a freight car, and an attempt was made to lasso him, but it failed, and the animal rushed from cover, bit a man severely in the leg on his way out, bounded into the ticket office, and then jumped through a transom into the superintendent's office. He was besieged by the circus men, and after several attempts to capture him and two or three shots being fired at him he was covered with a tarpaulin and secured. One by one the other animals were found, and after more or less trouble were captured and returned to their cages, but it was not until nearly dark that the work was over and the excitement was allayed.

A NOVEL COMBAT.

A Mink and a Hawk Fight in a Barrel of Water.

A fight took place a few days ago on the farm of G. Hanshaw, lot 6, con. 6, West Nissouri, the like of which does not often occur. Mr. Hanshaw had a sunken barrel in a spring on his farm, where the water is very scarce. A mink thought he would go into the barrel to have a little swim, but when in he found he could not get out again. While he was struggling in the water a large hen hawk chanced to fly over, and it seems to have occurred to him that it was a good chance to make a meal of the mink. He went for the barrel and a terrible fight ensued. The hawk, however, succeeded in killing the mink, but during the combat his feathers became so wet that he, too, was unable to get out and was drowned. Both victor and vanquished were found dead in the barrel afterwards

A Father's Plans Frustrated.

The Minnedosa, Man., Tribune had the following in a recent issue: A surprise awaited Mr. Campbell, of Merchiston, the week before last, that he little dreamed of. He had made arrangements to send his daughter, Miss Campbell, well known in Minnedosa, to Scotland, but on her arrival at Strathclair she and Mr. John Arch. McDonald, of the Hudson Bay Post, became one, and the trip to Scotland was indefinitely postponed, though Mrs. McDonald passed through Minnedosa the same day on a visit to friends at Rat Creek, while her husband went on a trip west. Although Mr. Campbell was much disturbed at the unexpected turn of affairs, yet he has made up his mind that "what can't be cured must be endured," and forgiven the couple.

Draughts.

William Strickland, of Leeds, champion blindfold player of the world, died recently at Leeds. He was 38 years of age. There is no doubt that the strain of mental force he brought to bear on draughts shattered his nervous system, and made him fall early a victim to any disease which presented itself. Wylie, the "Herd Laddie," in discussing blindfold playing, expressed the opinion that blindfold playing was injurious to the brain, and should never be indulged in. Besides, it was a useless test of ingenuity. Strickland was a splendid player and a genial man. He had many friends.

Roomy Trousers.

"Now, Job," said Mrs. Shuttle, "those trousers are altogether too big for the boy. They'll have to be changed." "No, they won't. They're all right. I bought 'em where they advertised 'Boys' clothing to play in.' They are just big enough for him to play in without going out of doors. They're so roomy."

The Twenty-Four Hour System.

Mr. Sandford Fleming, originator of the 24 hour system, has received a letter from the Japanese Minister in London stating that the 24 o'clock system will be adopted throughout the Japanese Empire on January 1st. Mr. Fleming is also informed that it is giving satisfactory results in Sweden, and expresses the belief that it is only a matter of a few years before the system will be universally adopted.

There's nothing like being prepared. A man died in Boston the other day who, for over thirty years, greased his nose every time he went out on the street. His idea was that some one might want to tweak it, and having it greased their fingers would slip off. But for his caution his nose might have been a wreck.

A REPORTER'S LIFE.

Not All Sweetness by Any Means—Good Advice.

(Jersey City Argus.)

There are few people who, as they sit comfortably by their firesides reading their daily papers, are aware of the amount of reportorial labor each column in that paper contains, and the worriment in many cases the never-tiring reporter endured. I can remember very distinctly when but a schoolboy how I tried to outrival my school companions in writing essays, and unfortunately for myself I made this a special study. I was always devotedly attached to newspapers, in fact, there is a streak of printer's ink coursing through my veins, my grandfather at the time of his death being the oldest editor and publisher in the State of Pennsylvania. It is no more than natural that when I left school—which I did very suddenly to avoid being expelled for putting a rat in my teacher's desk—that I should drift into a newspaper office. I did this, and now, as I look at the little clock on the mantel and my wife in bed soundly sleeping, I wish I had not. It is long after midnight, and before me is a note from the city editor, which reads:

Have a column of copy in the city desk by 8.30 to-morrow morning. Imperative.

City Editor.

Now, had the last word been omitted, I might be soundly sleeping, but with that word in the order the column must be given, and in doing so I will tell the city editor what I have been doing, and at the same time let the Argus readers take an outside glimpse at the daily life of an average newspaper reporter.

At 7 o'clock this morning the little alarm clock on my mantel made a buzz and a whizz that fairly set my hair on ends, and with the alarm were several well-aimed rib blows inflicted by my wife and her pointed elbow. Every man when so suddenly awakened longs for just forty winks more of sleep, but if he is a reporter and has a wife who sleeps from 7 o'clock in the evening he can't have them. I was soon turned out of bed and after going through my morning evolutions, hurried down stairs to breakfast. Hastily breaking an egg, half of which I spilled on the clean table cloth, I seized a roll so hot that it could not be eaten, sipped my coffee which made me think a "Bob" Davis torchlight procession was going down my throat, glanced lazily at a morning paper that was lying by my plate, but which lack of time would not permit me to read, seized my hat and last year's overcoat and hurried to my office. "A little late this morning," was the salutation from the knight of the blue pencil, as every city editor is dubbed by the reporters who have the pleasure of watching him make sheet music out of his copy. "I understand," he continued, "that there is reason for believing that there is crookedness in one of the city wards; you go see the expert's report, carefully compare his figures and footings with the originals, and get in a good story in time for the first edition. Now hurry."

Out I went and in a very few minutes was poring over columns of figures. Now, if there is anything I detest it is figures, unless on a bank note in my own possession. Until now, I put down and carried over until nothing but figures seemed to exist. I turned in my story, had the pleasure of hearing it pronounced "not what it should be," and sat down for a little rest. The city editor saw me do this and turning to me said: "The police headquarter reporter has sent in a story of a girl missing from Hoboken. Now you go over there, trace her up, and if possible, find her. You can get your lunch when you come back." I am morally certain that a city editor is like an actor, inasmuch, as he never eats, but I do when it comes my way. Well, I went to Hoboken, and after two hours' hard work trying to make the Germans understand English and listening to them try to make me understand German, I succeeded in tracing the girl to her aunt's and finally bringing her home. Thinking I would be credited with a good piece of work, I returned, wrote a half column story and turned it in. The city editor read it, and when he concluded, handed it back to me and said, "Cut that down to ten lines. Anybody could have worked that case up."

My heart sank. I wrote ten lines, handed it to him again and began to chew copy paper to prevent immediate starvation. I have worked on a half a hundred papers since entering the profession and I do honestly believe that it has always been my luck to get the mean assignments. Again the city editor saw that I was resting and he opened his assignment book. "They are holding a post-mortem in the morgue on a body they think was poisoned. Work yourself in and catch all you can, because the doctors won't tell you anything."

A post-mortem, an empty stomach, and the subject having been buried two weeks before being exhumed. It's all in the business and out I went. For an hour I stood by the dissecting table carefully watching the tests made by the doctors, and when they put the stomach in a pail to be analyzed I was happy and returned to the office. There was no result, so aside from the brief mention of the fact there was nothing to write. The forms were soon on their way downstairs and a moment later the boys were on the street shouting the Argus. I drew a sigh of relief, for there could be no more work for that day's paper. Evidently the city editor saw the smile of satisfaction and as he drew a cigar from his handsome cigar case called me to his side. Oh, no, gentle reader, it was not for the purpose of giving me a cigar, but some more assignments. "I have cards for a wedding to-night. You take it in, and on your way drop in the theatre, and write up a notice. Before you go to the wedding see what the fire commissioners do, and when you return take a look in police headquarters and see what you can do for early copy," were the orders as he tantalizingly blew some of the smoke from his regina-victoria in my face.

"Is that all?" I asked, as I entered the order in my pocket diary. "That's all I know at present," he generously replied, and kindly told me I might go home for lunch. This was the best order he had given and home I went. My wife kindly told me that if I couldn't get home at the proper time I could get my meals at a restaurant, as she would not be bothered keeping them warm. I did not dispute her suggestion, for she had a peculiar way of arguing that is not by any means as pleasant as it is striking. My luncheon was cold. The chops were dried to a crisp, the muffins were heavy and the coffee all grounds. I did not dare complain, and after trying to eat in vain, I left the table, and throwing myself on the sofa tried to rest until dinner hour. My wife, as usual, noticed I had eaten sparingly, and ventured to suggest that I had been drinking, when the truth was I had not tasted a glass of beer all day. She also noticed that my muddy feet were resting on a tidy that had been carelessly left on the foot of the sofa, and after telling me what she thought of men in general, brought in my slippers that my mother had made and presented to me last Christmas. I put them on and soon fell into a doze, only to be awakened by my wife, who insisted upon telling me the number of creditors that had called to see me during the day. While she was in the midst of her list the fire bell rung. Of course the fire was in that portion of the city for which I am held responsible. I jumped from the sofa, threw off my slippers and started to put on my shoes. I could find but one of them, but after a long search during which the entire city might have burned down I found it out in the back yard, where it had been taken by an ugly yellow dog that my wife's brother had given her. It did not take me long to put it on and as I ran to the fire I could imagine a large tenement house in flames, people jumping from the windows, others burned to death and I sending copy over for an "extra." How I ran when I pushed myself through the crowd and found the chief engineer he very kindly told me there was no fire. He added by the way of consolation that the fellow who sent out the alarm thought there was one. Again I started homeward, and after walking two blocks a tough young fellow met me and wanted to know if I was not the Argus reporter. I told him I was one of them and he seemed to be surprised that I had front enough to say that I was a reporter. He wanted to break my face because his name had been in the paper for being drunk. I never saw him before in my life and am not particularly anxious to see him again and besides I have but one face and though that is very nearly worn out, still I want to use it. It cost me fifteen cents to treat him, but I squared things. I arrived home in time to see Mary, that's our girl, clearing off the dinner table and my wife had done as she said she would, let me go without it if I was not home in time. I was now thoroughly tired and my wife wanted me to take her to the theatre. All my reasoning power failed to make her realize that it was an impossibility, and when I hurried out to the wedding, theatre, fire board and police headquarters, she was crying and saying something about going home to her mother. I wouldn't blame her if she did, for I have not a minute to devote to her. Why, honestly, at one time I had not seen her awake for so long, when I met her on the street I did not know her and actually tried to flirt with her, but my wife don't flirt, that is, not with me. Well, I covered all my assignments and when I came in, beside my regular copy, found an order calling for a column. I don't know what time it came. My wife does, however, but I don't think it would be healthy to wake her up to ask her. I am inclined to think I have written nearly a column and will submit it to my city editor, but just one word in conclusion to parents who have sons anxious to become reporters because they don't have to pay to get in the theatre. Should they ever express to you such a desire just tell them—

"Yes, darling, in a minute."

My wife's awake and is telling me her opinion of a man who runs around all day and neglects his work to such an extent that he has to keep a light burning until morning to catch up.

"Yes, dear, I'll put the light out so you can sleep. I'm coming to bed right away."

A BACHELOR'S REVERIE.

The Romance Woven from the Strains of the Piano Next Door.

I wonder why the piano isn't going this evening? My pretty little neighbor must be otherwise engaged. The door-bell rang a moment ago, so Sir Welcome Beau is doubtless in attendance. Ah, me! I believe I'm just a wee bit jealous of that handsome, smiling fellow. It's a little trying for a crusty old bachelor to sit up here in his lonely den and wonder what those two young people are about next door. Humph! They're probably enjoying themselves after the manner of young folks. Sentiment and small talk without limit is doubtless the bill-of-fare. Yes, yes, how silly I am to envy them. Isn't this fresh magazine and my generous pipe of "Lone Jack" far preferable to such nonsense! Of course it is!

* * * * * *

"Ah! there, she's playing now! How she makes that instrument speak! It voices her very feeling more truly than ever tongue could. Yes, he's certainly there to-night; and she's talking to him through that piano just as plainly as can be, the little minx! I wonder if he can interpret her music?

There, now, those quick treble notes—those bird-like runs and trills—don't they say, just as plainly as daylight: "I'm so glad you came to-night—so glad, so glad, so glad, glad, glad, glad, glad;" and now those softer, deeper notes! Can't you hear? "For I love you. O, I love you, love you, love, love, love—" Oh, you young looney, you! Why don't you take her right off that piano-stool and fold her in your arms and kiss her? I have no patience with such a young noodle. What wouldn't I give to be down there in your place for just one minute, young man—just one single minute! Ah! There, now! The music suddenly stops! The youngster's evidently come to his senses at last! Well, God bless them—God bless them!

What! is that a tear? It is, by Jupiter! and I've let my pipe go out, too, and haven't turned a leaf in that magazine yet. What an old idiot I am, to be sure!

* * * * * * *

"Yes, little maid, I know you are very sad this evening. The first plaintive note of the piano told me so; and there's no use in your repeating it so often. You'll make me sad, too, if you don't stop soon. How often has the piano told me, within the past two weeks, that he has gone. Oh, so far—far—far away—away—away; across the sea—the sea—the—sea; and you're so lonely—so lonely, that your heart is almost breaking—breaking—breaking—breaking. Poor little girl! I wish I could cheer her up. I'd give my right hand to bring her absent lover back to her this minute. Well, I declare! is that more tears? I'm getting to be as soft as a woman. I must cease this moping here in my den, every evening, listening to that sentimental little woman pouring her heart out at her piano. It's not good for me, I'm afraid.

* * * * * * *

"Great Heavens! I shall go wild if this continues! Every evening since that steamship has been overdue the agonized tones of the piano have almost driven me crazy. And there it goes again, telling me over and over, in weird, distracted tones: 'He is dead, dead, dead; he is drowned, he is drowned. I, too, will die, will die; I, too, will die.' And those wild, piteous chords! Do they breathe a prayer? I think they must. Ah! how they pierce my heart!

* * * * * * *

"There is resignation in the piano's tones to-night. The steamer is lost. They have given up all hope. I saw a man of prayer at the house this evening. He has doubtless comforted her. But, oh, what unspeakable sadness there was in her face, as she stood at the window this evening as I passed! Yes, the piano is resigned to-night. In sad, low tones it speaks of heaven, and reunion, and peace and joy unutterable! There are still tears in its notes, to be sure, but they are brightened with hope. And now the hope grows stronger and seems almost ready to burst forth into a hymn of celestial gladness. But there, the door-bell rings, the music stops, and—what was that? A scream?

* * * * * * *

"Well, bless me if it isn't almost too good to be true. So he isn't drowned, after all? I wonder what they all thought of me for rushing in where the returned lover and his sweetheart, almost wild with joy, were clasped close in each other's arms, with the rest of the family standing about weeping for gladness. I suppose I had no right to intrude, but that scream justified it.

* * * * * * *

"The old piano seems almost bursting with happiness again to-night. It fairly delights me to hear it. I'm so glad the young folks are not going away from the house next door, now that they are married. I should miss the piano, oh, so much. My! what a divine hymn of gratitude and bliss there is in those simple, soulful measures that the happy little woman is playing now! Heigh-ho! That young fellow got a rare treasure! But I don't envy him. No—I—don't—believe—I—do. But, anyhow, here is his health, and long life to the young couple. 'May they live long and prosper!'"

"You see," said Mr. Fred Grant to the electors of a New York town the other day, "that, like President Cleveland, I have taken my wife along." Freddy is right. MAGNETIC WIND.

A Remarkable Subterranean Bellows Near a Texas Town.

About 100 miles east of El Paso, near Sierra Blanco, on the line of the Texas & Pacific Railway, there is a strange phenomenon that has just come to public notice. The authority for the statements about to be made is ex-Governor John C. Brown, of Tennessee, receiver of the Texas & Pacific, who visited this city a few days ago, accompanied by several officials of the road, in whose jurisdiction the phenomenon is located. Governor Brown and Superintendent Judy told the story to one or two persons here, and it has just come out. About three years ago the Texas & Pacific Railway Company undertook to sink an artesian well a few miles east of Sierra Blanco, which is a little hamlet, 95 miles east of El Paso. The workmen put the pipe down about 600 feet, when suddenly an underground cavern was struck, the drill dropped about 6 feet and a current of air rushed up the pipe. Drilling ceased and the well was abandoned, the 600 feet of pipe remaining in the ground and giving a connection between the surface of the earth and the subterranean cavity a quarter of a mile beneath. The phenomenon did not at that time attract the attention of any one sufficiently to investigate. Recently, however, Superintendent Judy's attention was called to it, and his personal examination and inquiries have developed peculiar facts and testimony about the wonderful well. Gov. Brown stopped to see it on his way here. Not many people live near the well, but those who do reside in the neighborhood of it are thoroughly acquainted with it. Ever since it was abandoned, three years ago, the people near by have been in the habit of going and sitting about the well in summer to enjoy the cool and invigorating air that rushes up the pipe. One of the strangest things is the fact that the current of air ebbs and flows like the ocean tides. From 10.15 a.m. to 10 15 p.m. a current of air rushes out of the pipe with a sound that resembles the noise made by a locomotive blowing off steam so loud that it can be heard for forty or fifty yards. At. 10.15 p. m. the overflow of air ceases and a strong suction sets in, which lasts for the next twenty-four hours, this ebb and flow continuing day after day. It has been observed by horsemen that whenever they get in the neighborhood of the well strong magnetic forces are felt and sparks are given off if the horse's mane is touched. Recently a man from Sierra Blanco was sitting close to the well, and on taking out his pocket-knife found a nail which he had in his pocket clinging to the knife. He held the knife in the current of the air and found the magnetic property was greatly increased. Several weeks ago Supt. Judy held his pocket-knife in the current of air for four minutes, and the knife is still strongly magnetized from the effect. The overflowing current of air is believed to possess remarkable curative properties. Its efficacy is to be tested by experiments upon cases of paralysis and other diseases. The people who live near the wonderful well call it the "fountain of youth."—Galveston News.

The Origin of Man.

In a recent lecture at Rochester, Rev. C A. Johnson, in dealing with the subject of "Evolution," said: "I propose to solve this vexed question and present evolution in its proper light, so that you can understand what evolution is composed of, relative to the material which go to make it up. Evolution is as settled a scientific doctrine as the laws of gravitation. It is of great importance for us to know whether man descended from a stock of primates back to which we may trace the converging pedigrees of monkeys and baboons until their ancestry becomes indistinguishable from that of rabbits and squirrels. We shall have some difficulty in settling the questions that at times arise from the cases of human nature which exists potentially in mere inorganic matter and the chain of spontaneous derivation which connects incandescent moleculus or star-dust with the world and with man himself."

A USEFUL DEACON.

He Couldn't Pray or Sing, but He Could Keep the Dogs Out of Church.

The Rev. E. A. Dickinson, editor of the Religious Herald, of Richmond, Va., was telling the Philadelphia Baptist Association the other day how necessary it was to enlist the active services of every member of a congregation, when some one pertinently asked: "What are you going to do with a man that can't do anything?"

"That's a mistake," returned the reverend journalist. "Every man is of some use. If he can't do one thing he can do another. The point is to find out just what he is fit for, and having found it put him at it. This recalls an actual experience I once had in a backwoods congregation in Virginia. It was my first visit among the people and I was anxious to make it successful. It should be remembered that church in the backwoods means a gathering of all the people and a good many dogs. After the opening hymn I called on old Deacon Blank to lead us in prayer.

"'Taint no use askin' me,' he said, 'I can't do it.'

"'Suppose you start the next hymn, then?'

"'Can't sing either.'

"'How about taking up the collection? I guess you can manage that?'

"Nop. I'm a bad hand at getting 'round. Better get some one else.'

"Noticing that the old fellow carried a stout walking stick an idea was suggested.

"'Well, brother, do you think you'll be able to keep out the dogs?'

"'You bet I air,' he confidently replied. Then taking a seat at the door, he battled with the brutes throughout the meeting, and after it was over more than one of the congregation was followed home by yelping curs with broken limbs.

Odd Jots From China.

At the recent eclipse of the sun the Chinese authorities, in accordance with the usage of the Empire, ordered the Buddhist and Tavist priests to recite their incantations to rescue the sun from being devoured. It was at the time of the festivities over the Emperor's birthday, when all officials were required to wear embroidered robes, but it is also the law that during an eclipse officials who participate in the ceremonies must wear ordinary garments until the sun is rescued. An edict had to be got from the Emperor to settle it. He ordered the officials to ignore his birthday and attend to the sun, so they all wore ordinary robes.

Ontario Crop Report, 1887.

The November report of the Ontario Bureau of Industries is just out. It states that the yield of fall wheat is 14,440,611 bushels, being 3,630,531 bushels less than last year, and 5,162,693 bushels less than the average of six years. The average yield per acre is 16 bushels. Spring wheat may be set down as a general failure. The estimated yield is 5,633,115 bushels, against 9,518,553 bushels last year, and 9,713,879 bushels for an average of six years. The barley crop was saved with scarcely any injury from discoloration, but the yield per acre is less than for any harvest of the last six years. The total product is 17,134,830 bushels, being 2,377,448 less than last year and 2,031,583 less than the average of six years. The oat crop is below the average in yield. The estimated product is 49,848,101 bushels, against 58,665,608 last year. The estimated yield of peas is 12,173,332 bushels against 16,043,734 last year.

The G. T. R. Tunnel.

At the recent Grand Trunk meeting in England President Tyler stated that the cost of the St. Clair Tunnel would be about £486,000; the traffic that would pass through it would come partly from their ferry at Sarnia and partly from their ferry at Detroit; the traffic which passed over these ferries every day was eight passenger trains and twenty freight trains at Sarnia, and ten passenger trains and twenty-five freight trains at Detroit. Supposing this work cost £500,000, the interest would come to £32,000 a year, and they calculated there would be a saving of at least £10,000, as compared with the present working of the ferries.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

A lot of ratepayers are extremely anxious to see Mr. Purdy's address to the electors in print. We don't think Mr. Purdy will disappoint them, now that his star has arisen above the Municipal horizon. O, no!

Four of the Chicago Anarchists were hanged in Chicago last Friday. One committed suicide a few days previous. The other two had their death sentences commuted to imprisonment for life. They were murderers and paid the just penalty of their crimes. No need to shed crocodile tears over the remains of scoundrels who did not hesitate to take life while yet they were in the flesh.

THE SABBATH DAY.

There seems to be a diversity of opinion among Christian people as to the keeping holy of the Sabbath day. This is not to be wondered at. People interpret scripture differently in connection with other things, and it is not at all surprising that they should also differ in this respect.

Some very good people believe in a rigid observance of the Sabbath according to certain rules laid down by men who flourished hundreds of years ago, and who interpreted certain passages in the Bible touching this point with the aid of a very dim intellectual light. And yet, while rigidly observing certain rules, at the same time very inconsistently and absurdly violating God's laws in other particulars. For example, the great Scottish divine, Rev. Norman Macleod, tells an amusing instance of the peculiar inconsistency of this class of "rigid" observers of the Sabbath day. One day, in walking towards a small country chapel, in which he was to preach that morning, he observed a lady bending her steps in the same direction, and carrying a small lap-dog in her arms. Immediately behind her walked a man with unsteady steps, who had only a few moments before emerged from an inn close by. The man was palpably under the influence of liquor. Suddenly the dog leaped from the lady's arms and ran off in an opposite direction. The lady politely asked the tipsy man to whistle for her dog. That worthy looked at her in evident amazement for a moment, then steadying himself with an effort, replied in very severe tones:—"Mem d'ye no ken this is the Sawbath day!" So it is with many people. While they are very scrupulous and hair-splitting in matters of little or no importance, they are equally lax in things of infinitely greater moment.

Another class of people, while faithfully performing their duties, in so far as attending divine worship and other services connected with the church are concerned, do not hesitate to criticise their neighbors harshly, and perhaps most unjustly, as soon as they are beyond the sound of the preacher's voice. Indeed, sometimes the good preacher himself comes in for a share of this idle, and, in many cases, malicious gossip. This love of idle gossip seems to be an inherent weakness of the human family. The disease, morally speaking, is contagious, and some of the very best people have been known to give way to it in moments of forgetfulness. Every man and woman living has some weak point in his or her character—ample food in every life for the satire of the social vampires which abound in every community. But let critics be just in their criticisms, and while exposing the faults of their fellow-men, let them not forget the good to be found there too. Yes, and in tens of thousands of instances it will be found that the good far outweighs the bad. At the same time—

"O wad the power some giftie gie us,
To see oursels as ithers see us,
It wad frae many a blunder free us
An foolish notion!"

So sang the immortal Burns, who, with all his faults, has given to the world many beautiful and inspiring thoughts, wrapped up in simple but expressive verse.

There are many other classes of Sabbath observers. Mr. A. is of opinion that a little ride out into the country with his wife and little ones—who have been "penned up" in the hot city all the week—would not be contrary to a scriptural observance of holy day. God make the trees to grow and the flowers to bloom. Surely he can study these works of His hands by a drive or a stroll out into the rural district, where the air is pure and scented with the sweet perfume of flowers, or newly mown clover it may be. He cannot afford to take holidays and go to the seashore or to some pleasant country town—such as Flesherton, for instance. Oh, no! he can spare neither the time nor the means for that. It is only some high salaried layman, minister, doctor, lawyer, or editor who can afford such luxuries as that. Mr. B. is horrified. "Gadding about the country" on Sunday is simply a detestable practice and wrong in the sight of the Lord. Visiting friends is equally bad. Nothing, except what is absolutely necessary, should be done on the Lord's day. But Mr. B. doesn't think it wrong for his wife to stay home from church Sunday mornings and cook a good hot dinner for her liege lord! Mr. C. thinds all is vanity and vexation of spirit. No cooking on Sundays in Mr. C's house. Everybody moves around the house like a funeral procession. Mr. C's face is two inches longer than ordinary and woe betide the unfortunate son whose exuberance of boyish spirits tempts him to give vent to a whistle. No boots blacked. No bangs curled with pipe stems around his domicile. No shaving. Nobody smiles—at least they don't when Mr. C. is around. Mr. C. marshals his family off to church after the manner of a policeman in charge of a gang of desperate young culprits. His spinal column is as stiff as a poker, while his features preserve a grim rigidness suggestive of cast iron or marble. After dinner every member of the family reads his or her bible—still in charge of the policeman! In after years Mr. C. is astonished to find, that with all his careful religious training, his sons are far from becoming either distinguished theologians or useful members of the church of his choice. However, it is to be hoped the theological freezing they got in youth will be susceptible to rays of true religious warmth in later life.

Every man has a conscience. God implanted that principle within man for wise purposes. When an individual does wrong, or even thinks wrong, conscience immediately makes him cognizant of the fact. Call conscience what you will, "the soul," or "the inner man," that man or that woman who obeys its voice will not make many (if any?) blunders, either in keeping holy the Sabbath day, or in the more commonplace things appertaining to this life.

That the Sabbath should be sacredly observed as a day devoted to the sevice of the Lord, few, but skeptics, will deny; but just how it should be observed so as to fulfil our Lord's command, is a question not so easily answered. However, we have no further space at our disposal this week and must leave the matter over for further observations at some future time.

Maxwell.

From our own Correspondent.

Our mail of last Thursday from Flesherton being delayed for some cause unknown, except to the mail-carrier. We had a number of useless trips to the Post Office for the ADVANCE which did not arrive until about 7 o'clock p.m. Mr. Parks is respectfully requested to select some other day in the week for his late trip.

Our school trustees are reported as having engaged Mr. C. J. Sproule, of Flesherton, as teacher here for next year in place of Mr. Drummond, who is retiring.

One of our leading merchants is very anxious to exchange his stock of goods for a farm. He appears to think farming is a paying business.

We are to have a new Postmaster in our village after a time. But at present he is only a few days old. We wish the new arrival every success.

A new way of disposing of poultry is being introduced. Raffles at farmers houses are becoming numerous. Perhaps they forget that it is only gambling no matter how respectable they may try to make it appear, and the parties bringing home turkeys and geese have generally paid more for them than they would have to pay in a more honorable way.

Mr. Medter Guy is home visiting his friends.

The light fall of snow last week brought out the sleighs and for one or two days it looked as though winter had commenced.

There are many complaining of the wells going dry and water becoming scarce.

CANADIAN CLIMATE.—The Canadian climate is particularly productive of Cold in the Head and Catarrh. In fact Catarrh to-day is more prevalent than any other disease. The discovery of Nasal Balm places within the reach of all a certain mean of cure.

COUNTY & DISTRICT NEWS.

Clipped and Condensed from the Columns of Our Exchanges.

Gruer's planing factory in Mt. Forest was destroyed by fire on Tuesday week.

Mr. Robert Myles, ex-reeve of Euphrasia, has engaged with Mr. J. B. Watson, the orator and humorist, as advance agent and manager.—Meaford Mirror.

Mr. Joseph Stone, of Melancthon, while fixing his well on Saturday last, had one of fingers crushed between two pump logs. The finger was so badly crushed, that part of it had to be amputated.—Shelburne Free Press.

The directors of the Melancthon, County of Dufferin, Agricultural Society have determined to pay for the publication of the list of prize winners in the local paper. This is as it should be and we hope Proton will follow suit.—Dundalk Herald.

Last Monday four farmers along the gravel road, about four miles west of the town of Collingwood, had their barns and dwellings burned to the ground. The fire caught in the buildings from a neighboring swamp fire.—Thornbury News.

About a year ago Mr. Wm. Shilson, doing business as a general merchant in Hanover, removed to Walkerton. It was a sad day for Wm. He is now a bankrupt, having made an assignment a few days ago. He was a non-advertiser.—Hanover Post.

Last Friday the four Mt. Forest liquor dealers, mentioned in last week's issue, appeared before P. M. Lowes in the council chamber here at 10 a. m., and in a few minutes afterwards departed to their several homes, each $50 and costs poorer for having sold liquor in contravention to the Scott Act.—Mt. Forest Representative.

We learn that a destructive fire has been raging along the lake shore road. The bridge across Silver Creek was burned and also a barn on an adjacent farm. It was reported about town that a young man who was bringing some lambs to town had a narrow escape as he was at one time entirely surrounded by fire.—Collingwood Enterprise.

The way of the debtor is hard. The steam barge Chamberlain was tied up by the Mate for wages last week. He was no sooner paid off than the Chief Engineer, following a good example, had her tied up on Tuesday morning for his wages $250. Besides, she is held under two Division Court attachments—all because, as the Captain says, "he has not paid them."—Owen Sound Times.

As Mr. Joshua Woodland was walking from his house to his stable a week ago yesterday he was suddenly seized with a rush of blood to the head, and fell to the ground unconscious. The doctor was summoned, but before he could arrive Mr. Woodland had recovered consciousness. He is around again as hearty as usual. Some fifteen years ago he had a similiar attack.—Durham Chronicle.

On Friday last Fanny Lawden died in the Orangeville gaol at the advanced age of 83 years. She had been in prison for upward of two years, and yet her only crime, if such it can be called, was that she was without means, and had not sufficient strength to earn a livelihood. She was formerly a resident of Mulmur. Truely her life was a blank, an empty dream. The remains were placed in a rude coffin, and consigned to a nameless grave. Vanity of vanity!—Dufferin Post.

On Friday Alex. Reid, a tonsorial artist from Wiarton, was handed over to the tender mercies of Mr. Reether, the offence charged was the heinous crime of assaulting an editor. It seems the young man had assaulted his mother and had been fined for the offense, the Echo very properly commented on the facts brought out at the trial, hence the assault. He was brought before His Honor Judge Kingsmill and elected to be tried at the coming December sessions. Bail in two sureties at $150 each were fixed for his appearance.—Bruce Telescope.

Tuesday, just after dinner, Mr. James Bailey, of Mulmur, while working at Shepherd's new mill dam, near Primrose, seeing that he was about to fall down the embankment just then being constructed, jumped and alighted on a pile of rocks over twenty feet below. Mr. Bailey had both bones of his left leg broken near the ankle, and when Dr. Norton arrived he found that one of the bones had made a serious flesh wound and was protruding, while the wound was also bleeding very freely. The fractures were adjusted and the wound stitched and dressed, but there is yet danger that amputation may be found necessary.—Shelburne Economist.

Mr. Robt. Bull had the top of one of his fingers taken off while running a shaper in his factory last Tuesday, through the piece of wood which he was handling breaking and allowing his hand to run against the knives.—Durham Chronicle.

It being thought that the burning of Harrison's Planing Mill on the night of the 1st November, was the work of an incendiary, the Town Council have bills posted up offering a reward of $2000 for the apprehension and conviction of the incendiary.—Owen Sound Advertiser.

A youth named Billy Mitchell, in the employ of McLean's livery, met with an accident on Tuesday last. The baggage team ran away. The public have not yet recovered from the effects of this extraordinary occurrence. Neither has Billy. The load slipped forward, and carried him to the ground at the heels of the horses. About a ton of freight fell on his legs, and one of the wheels of the waggon passed over his arm. Yet Billy is alive to tell the tale; and is not much the worse of the accident.—Bruce Herald.

Past Grand Bro. Theo. Lawrence has been appointed District Deputy Grand Master for the newly erected district No. 24, I. O. O. F., comprising Collingwood, Stayner, Owen Sound, Flesherton, Thornbury and Meaford. It will be his duty to visit each of these Lodges, instruct them in their work and report to the Grand Master. This will entail a large amount of work, but his love for the order will make it a burden earily borne. His long and faithful services will entitle him to the honor thus laid upon him.—Collingwood Enterprise.

About 1 o'clock on Monday morning, fire was discovered issuing from Mr. W. Bernie's barn. In a short time a number of people were present and every effort made to save the property but without avail. The building was totally destroyed together with its contents, consisting of two horses, two head of cattle, three sets of harness, five pigs, one hundred hens, a new reaper, one new horse rake, one fanning mill and about thirty tons of hay. Partially insured. The new barn was on fire several times but was saved. The work was evidently that of an incendiary.—Hanover Post.

DUNEDIN.—On Monday night Mr. Andrew Young's house was burned to the ground, with all its contents. Mr. Young and family barely escaped with their lives and only got out of the house when the roof was falling in. Much sympathy is felt for the family at their loss at this season of the year is particularly heavy. —An old man named Isaac Brown died the other day at James Moore's. He was an old soldier, and had no friends in this part of the country. Indeed, no one knows anything about him except what he told himself. If his friends should see this they will know what became of him.—Collingwood Enterprise.

Bruce Fall assizes were held in Walkerton last week before Mr. Justice Rose. There was a very heavy docket. Samuel Bailey, of the 2nd concession, Bentinck, was found guilty of sheep stealing, and sent to the Central Prison for six months. Samuel Hughes, the murderer of Mrs. McDougall at Allenford last July, when placed in the dock did not plead to the indictment, and appeared to be ignorant of what was going on around him. A number of medical men stated that they had no doubt but that he was insane. He has had a number of epileptic fits lately and is a total wreck. A verdict of not guilty was entered. He will remain in prison until sent to the asylum.

On Friday last, death again visited our community, and called away one of our oldest and and most respected residents, in the person of Mrs. McCaul, (widow of the late John McCaul.) Deceased was a native of Argylshire, Scotland, and came with her husband to America in 1849 and settled in Glenelg in 1850 when the Tp. was nearly all bush. Deceased was ever hospitable, kindly and obliging, and a constant member of the Methodist church. The funeral services were conducted by the Rev. Mr. Ottawal, of Priceville, in Ebinezer church Glenelg, on Tuesday last. Deceased leaves a family of six children to mourn their loss who have our sincere aymyathy.—Grey Review.

Mr. Wm. McIntosh, jr., of lot 3, con. 8, St. Vincent, had his left hand amputated at the wrist joint on Friday last in Meaford. This course was necessitated owing to the bone of the hand being diseased and the disease apparently working its way into the arm. He had been troubled with a weakness in the hand for some three years past, brought about, as he believes, by overstraining it at that time by ploughing when his right was almost useless by reason of a felon. He says he can date the weakness in the left hand from that time, and it has continued to grow worse and worse until it culminated in amputation as stated above. The man is married and has two of a family. He is owner of the farm on which he resides. Since the amputation the young man has been the guest of Mr. John Douglas, Meaford, a relative, and we are pleased to announce that he is recovering from the effects of the operation.—Meaford Mirror.

On Friday last as Mr. Gavin Kirkwood of Brant and his son George were engaged in plowing a sad accident occurred ending in the death of the young man. It appears that the team, which is a spirited one, were allowed to stand while father and son were occupied in removing turnip tops, and placing them into the furrow. The horses becoming frightened attempted to run away, when the young man rushed to their head and endeavored to stop them. Losing his footing, he fell under their feet, one of the horses stepping on him, breaking three of his ribs and injuring him internally. The father with the assistance of a neighbor, who happened by at that time, succeeded in getting him home. A doctor was at once summoned, but in spite of all that medical skill could do, he expired next morning, after enduring the most intense suffering. The remains were interred on Monday, the funeral being the largest that ever passed through Chesley. The bereaved family has the heart-felt sympathy of the whole community.—Chesley Enterprise.

When Justice Galt learned from the grand jury presentment last week that Robert Fletcher was confined in gaol without any crime being charged him he was justly indignant, and ordered the Sheriff to release the unfortunate man. He also instructed the Sheriff not to receive Fletcher at the gaol if he was ever again committed. On Monday afternoon Turnkey Bowles hired a livery rig and drove Fletcher to the home from which he was ejected about a year ago. The father and brother of the poor idiot reside on lot 29, Con. 5, Mono, and are, although they live in a state of squalor and ignorance, rather wealthy, owning 200 acres of land and having money out on mortgages. They received their relative coldly, and the only one to greet him was his sister. The brother is married and his wife forbade the Turnkey to deposit his burden at the house, saying that they would have nothing to do with him. The neighbors were rejoiced when they saw poor Robert returning, and the Turnkey was heartily cheered as he passed several houses.—Dufferin Post.

A Man's a Man for a' That!

The rich man's son inherits lands,
And piles of brick, and stone and gold,
And he inherits soft white hands,
And tender flesh that fears the cold,
Nor dares to wear a garment old;
A heritage, it seems to me,
One scarce would wish to hold in fee.

The rich man's son inherits cares;
The bank may break, the factory burn,
A breath may burst his bubble shares,
And soft white hands could hardly earn
A living that would serve his turn;
A heritage, it seems to me,
One scarce would wish to hold in fee.

What does the poor man's son inherit?
Stout muscles and a sinewy heart,
A hardy frame, a hardier spirit;
King of two hands, he does his part
In every useful toil and art;
A heritage, it seems to me,
A king might wish to hold in fee.

What does the poor man's son inherit?
A patience learned of being poor,
Courage if sorrow come to bear it,
A fellow-feeling that is sure
To make the outcast bless his door;
A heritage, it seems to me,
A king might wish to hold in fee.

O rich man's son! there is a toil
That with all others level stands;
Large charity doth never soil
But only whitens soft white hands—
This is the best crop from thy lands;
A heritage, it seems to me,
Worth being rich to hold in fee.

O poor man's son! scorn not thy state;
There is worse weariness than thine
In merely being rich and great;
Toil only gives the soul to shine,
And makes rest fragrant and benign;
A heritage, it seems to me,
Worth being poor to hold in fee.

—James Russell Lowell.

SIR HUGH'S LOVES.

"Heaven forbid!" ejaculated Hugh; he was quite appalled at the notion of any likeness between this absurd specimen of humanity and himself; but happily the little mother did not hear him, for she was adjusting the long robe to her liking.

"There, you must take him, Hugh; I want to see him once in your arms—my two treasures together;" and she held the baby to him.

Hugh did not see how the weak arms trembled under their load, as he retreated a few steps in most genuine alarm.

"I take him! My dear, I never held a baby in my life; I should be afraid of dropping him; no, let him stop with his mother. Women understand these sort of things. There, now, I thought so, he is going to cry; and Hugh's discomfitted look was not lost on Fay, as the baby's shrill voice spoke well for his strength of lungs.

"Oh, hush, hush," she said, nearly crying herself, and rocking the baby to and fro feebly. "You spoke so loudly, Hugh, you frightened him; he never cries so when we are alone."

"You will be alone directly if you do not send him away," was her husband's impatient answer; it is not pleasant for a man to be deafened when he is tired after a long journey. Why, I do believe you are going to cry too, Fay; what is the good of a nurse if you exhaust yourself like this?" And he pulled the bell rope angrily.

"Oh, please don't send my baby away," she implored, in quite a piteous voice; "he is always with me now, and so good and quiet, only you startled him so."

"Nonsense," he returned decidedly; "your illness has made you fanciful; surely I must know what is best for my wife. Nurse, why do you allow Lady Redmond to wear herself out with a crying child? it cannot be right in her weak state."

Fay gave up her baby without a word; she was too gentle to remonstrate, but if he could have read her thoughts. "He does not care for his child at all," she was saying within herself; and then she was very quiet, and shielded her face with one hand. Sir Hugh was rather uncomfortable; he knew he had been out of temper, and that he was disappointing Fay, but he never guessed the stab he had inflicted when he had refused to take their boy in his arms.

"Well, Fay," he said, in rather a deprecating manner, "I meant to have had a little talk with you, now that noisy fellow is gone; but you seem sleepy, dear; shall I leave you to rest now, and come up again after dinner?"

Fay uncovered her eyes and looked at him rather oddly, he thought, but she made no answer. Hugh rose and looked at his watch, and repeated his question.

"No," she said, very slowly; "do not trouble to come up again, Hugh. I cannot talk to you to-night; I shall be better quiet."

"There, I told you so," he cried, triumphantly. "I knew that little rascal had tired you."

"My baby never tires me," she answered, wearily, and closed her eyes. Oh, if she could only close them forever! But then she remembered how terrible death had seemed to her in her illness—a bit of infinite pain.

Hugh looked at her a little puzzled; his Wee Wifie was very much altered, he thought; and then he kissed her two or three times with some affection, and went to his dressing-room.

But when she heard him go down stairs she rang for the nurse to bring back her baby directly. The woman did not like her excited look, or the fierce way she almost snatched him to her bosom.

"You had much better try and get a little sleep, my lady," she said, kindly; but Fay only shook her head. It was not bedtime yet, she said, but she would like to be quiet with her baby for a little. And when nurse had gone to have a talk with Janet, she tottered from the couch, and knelt down beside it, and wetted the white robe with her tears.

"It is all over, baby," she moaned; "he does not care for you or for me either—he only wants Margaret; but you must love your mother, baby, and grow up and comfort her, for she has no one but you to love her in the whole wide world."

Lady Redmond had a serious relapse after this, and it was two or three weeks before she was carried to the couch again.

* * * * * *

Hugh had not learned his lesson yet. Neither his wife's illness nor his own had taught him wisdom; he was as restless and unreasonable as ever.

He grew very impatient over Fay's prolonged weakness, which he insisted was due in a great measure to her own fault. If she had not excited herself so much on the night of his return, she would never have had that relapse. It was a very tiresome affair altogether; for his own health was not thoroughly re-established, and a London physician had recommended him a few months' travel; it was just what he wanted, and now his trip to Cairo and the Pyramids must be indefinitely postponed.

He rather obstinately chose to believe that there was a want of will in the matter, and that Fay could throw off her weakness she liked. Still he was very kind to her in his uncertain way—perhaps because the doctors said he must humor her, or she would fade away from them yet. So he told her that she would never get strong while she lay moping herself to death in that little painted bird-cage, as he called the blue room. And when she answered listlessly that she could not walk—which he was at first slow to believe—he used to carry her down to one of the sunniest rooms in the old Hall—into either the morning-room or library—and place her comfortably on her couch with her work and book before he started out for his ride.

It was a new thing to have those strong arms performing such gentle offices for her. Fay used to thank him gratefully with one of her meek, beautiful looks, but she seldom said anything—his kindness had come too late to the poor child, who felt that her heart was slowly breaking with its hopeless love. For who would be content with the mirage when they are thirsting for the pure water? Or who would be satisfied with the meted grain and the measured ounce when they have given their all in all?

Those looks used to haunt Hugh as he rode through the Singleton lanes; he used to puzzle over them in an odd, ruminative fashion.

He remembered once that he had been in at the death of a doe—where, or in what country he could not remember; but she had been overtaken with her fawn, and one of the huntsmen dispatched her with his knife.

Hugh had stood by and shuddered at the dumb look of anguish in the wild deer-eyes, as with a sobbing breath the poor creature breathed its last, its helpless fawn licking its red wounds. Hugh had not been able to forget that look for a long time; and now it recurred to his memory, and he could not tell why Fay's eyes reminded him so of the dying doe's—it was an absurd morbid idea. And then he touched his black mare a little smartly, and tried to efface the recollection by a rousing gallop. But, do what he would, he could not get it out of his mind that his Wee Wifie was sadly altered; she was not the same Fay whose little tripping feet had raced Nero and Pierre along the galleries with that ringing laugh. This was a tired Fay who rarely spoke and never laughed—who seemed to care for nothing but her baby.

Hugh used to tell her so sometimes, with an inexplicable feeling of jealousy that rather surprised him; but Fay did not understand him.

"What does it matter for whom I care?" she would say to herself. "I must love my own baby." And then she would think bitterly that Hugh seemed to like her better now that she had ceased to vex him with her childish demonstrations. "I am getting very dignified," she thought, "and very quiet; and I think this pleases him. Do old people feel like this, I wonder, when all their life is ended, and they have such feeble, aching limbs? Ah, no; I do not believe they suffer at all. But now I seem as though I can never rest for my longing that Hugh may love me and tell me so, before I die." And so she would prose on in her sad plaintive little way.

No wonder Sir Hugh marvelled at her, so silent of tongue, so grave of look—such an altered Wee Wifie; but all the conclusion at which he had arrived was that the baby had been too much for her, and that, when the summer heat was over, she would grow strong again. And Fay never contradicted him.

And by and by, when the days grew a little cooler, Fay began to creep about the garden a little, and call herself well. Hugh drove her out once or twice in her pony carriage; but she saw he did not like it, and begged him to let her go alone—such reluctant courtesies gave her no pleasure. But presently Erle came for a brief visit, and was her ready escort, and after that she really began to mend.

CHAPTER XXXI.

FAY'S MISTAKE

She loves with love that cannot tire,
And when, ah, woe! she loves alone
Through passionate duty love flames higher
As grass grows taller round a stone.
Coventry Patmore

Never! 'tis certain that no hope is—none?
No hope for me, and yet for thee—no fear,
The hardest part of my hard task is done;
Thy calm assures me that I am not dear.
Jean Ingelow

Erle was quite shocked at Fay's changed appearance, but he said very little about it. He had an instinctive feeling that the shadow had deepened, and that Fay was sick at heart; but he only showed his sympathy by an added kindness, and an almost reverential tenderness; and Fay was deeply grateful for his delicacy, for she knew now that though she had been blind, others had had their eyes open; and she had a morbid fear that every one traced her husband's restlessness and dissatisfaction with his life to the right cause, and knew that she was an unloved wife. Fay was very proud by nature, though no one would have guessed it from her exceeding gentleness; and this knowledge added largely to her pain. But she hid it—she hid it heroically, and no one knew till too late how the young creature had suffered in her silence.

Erle and she were better friends than ever; but they did not resume their old confidential talks. Erle had grown strangely reticent about his own affairs, and spoke little of his fiancee and his approaching marriage. He knew in his heart that Fay had read him truly, and knew that his warmest affections had been given to Fern, and he had an uneasy consciousness that she condemned his conduct.

Fay never told him so; she congratulated him very prettily and made one of her old mischievous speeches about "the young lady with the go in her"—but somehow it seemed to fall flat; and she asked him a few questions, as in duty bound, about his prospects, and how often he saw Miss Selby, and if he would bring her to Redmond Hall one day; "for I mean to be very fond of your wife, Erle, whoever she may be," she continued; "and I hear from the Trelawneys that Miss Selby—but I must call her Evelyn now—is very nice indeed, and that you are to be congratulated."

"She is far too good for me," returned Erle, with a touch of real feeling, for his fiancee's unselfish devotion was a daily reproach to him. Could any girl be sweeter or more loving, he thought.

Fay sighed as she watched him. Erle had changed too, she said to herself; he was nicer, but he had lost his old-time merriment; he looked graver, and a little thin, and there was not always a happy look in his eyes. Fay sometimes feared that the other girl with the fair hair had not been forgotten; she wanted to tell him that she hoped Evelyn knew all about her, but she lacked the courage, and somehow it was not so easy to talk to Erle this time.

But there was one subject on which he dilated without reserve, and that was on Mr. Ferrers' search for Crystal. He was in New York now, he told Fay, with his sister, and he was waiting for further intelligence before he followed Miss Davenport. "Miss Trafford corresponds with him," he continued, with an effort; "but it seems the travellers have little time for writing." But he wondered, as he talked about the Ferrers, why Fay changed color so often—he had heard it was a sign of delicacy.

"I am tiring you," he said, hastily; "you are looking quite pale; you want a change sadly yourself, my Fairy Queen." And Hugh, entering the room at that moment, caught at the word, and came up quickly to the couch.

"Don't you feel so well to-day, pet?" he asked, kindly; "why are you talking about a change."

"It was only Erle's nonsense, dear," she said, hurriedly. She never could speak to him without a painful blush, and it always deepened if he looked at her long, as he did now.

"I never saw you look better than you do to-day," returned her husband; "she is quite rosy, is she not, Erle? But you are right, and a change will do her and the boy good. I was thinking how you would like to go down to Devonshire, Fay, while I am away."

"Away?" she said, very quietly; "where are you going, Hugh?"—but there was no surprise in her face.

"Oh, you cannot forget," returned Hugh, impatiently, "unless that baby puts everything out of your head. Do you not remember that I told you that Fitzclarence was coming down this week to arrange about our trip to Cairo."

"No," she replied, "you never said anything about it, Hugh;" which was the truth, for he had never taken the trouble to inform her, though Mrs. Heron had had orders to prepare a room for the expected guest.

"Well, well," rather irritably, "I meant to tell you, but one's memory is treacherous sometimes. He will be down here about Wednesday or Thursday, for in another week we hope to start."

"Indeed," returned Fay, in her tired voice, pulling off her baby's shoe; but to Erle's astonishment, she manifested no emotion. As for Sir Hugh, he was relieved to find his Wee Wifie was becoming such a reasonable woman. Why, he could talk to her quite comfortably without fear of a scene.

"What will you do with yourself, dear," he continued, briskly. "Don't you think it would be the best thing to go down to Daintree and show your baby to Aunt Griselda?"

"Just as you like," was the indifferent answer. But Erle interrupted her.

"How long do you mean to absent yourself from the bosom of your family, Hugh?"

"Oh, two or three months; we cannot follow out the route Fitzclarence proposed under that time—about ten or eleven weeks, I should say."

"Three months? Well, all I can say is marriage is not the fettered state that we bachelors imagine it to be. I had no idea that one could get leave of absence for half that time. I hope my wife will be as accommodating as Fay."

"There was a concealed sarcasm in Erle's careless speech that jarred upon Hugh, and he answered angrily,

"I wish you would not talk such nonsense, Erle. Fay has the sense to know that my health requires complete change, and I shall not be the man I was without it. I ought to have had three months last time, only her illness recalled me. But now I can leave her more happily."

"And you expect to make the trip in eleven weeks with Fitzclarence as the leader of the expedition. Fitzclarence, so renowned for his punctuality—so celebrated for never altering a given route at a minute's notice."

"I did not know Fitzclarence was a friend of yours, Erle; but I never listen to the idle gossip one picks up at one's club. I am perfectly satisfied with his arrangements, and so are the other men—we have two other fellows going with us. Fay, my dear, I should like you to write at once to your aunt, and ask her if she can have you and the boy. The cottage is rather small; do you think you could do without Janet, and only take nurse?"

"Oh, yes," replied Fay, in the same constrained voice; but Erle saw that she had become very pale. But just then Ellerton entered and told his master that some one was waiting to speak to him on business; and so the subject dropped.

Erle looked rather wistfully at Fay when they were left alone together. "I am afraid you will be very lonely when Hugh goes away," he said, kindly. "Why need you go to Daintree; you will be dreadfully dull there with only your aunt. I do not see why you should not come to Belgrave House first, while Mrs. Montague is there. She is a very pleasant woman, Fay; and you could do just as you like, and you would see Evelyn, and I am sure you two would soon be great friends. Do come, Fay; and you can go to Daintree afterwards."

Fay shook her head with a faint, dissenting smile; but she was touched by his kind thought for her.

"No, Erle," she said, decidedly, "it would not do at all. Hugh would not like it. He wishes me to go to Aunt Griselda."

"What does it matter to him where you go, so long as he is enjoying himself," burst from Erle's impatient lips; her meekness really provoked him. But he regretted the rash speech as soon as it was uttered, especially as a soft hand touched his.

"Hush! Erle," she said, gently, "you should not speak like that; not to me at least. Do you not know that I have no greater pleasure in the world than to obey my husband's wishes. No," she continued, and her eyes grew misty, "I have no other happiness but that—no other happiness but that."

"But, Fay," interrupted Erle, eagerly, "what possible objection could Hugh have to your staying at our house while Mrs. Montague is there? We would wait on you, and watch over you, as though you were a queen."

"Yes, yes! I know that—you are always so kind to me, Erle; but it would never do for me to come to Belgrave House. Hugh does not like Mr. Huntingdon."

"Very few people do," muttered Erle, "but he has always been a good friend to my mother and me."

"Yes, I know; and he is your uncle, so of course you make allowances for him. But Hugh has told me the story of poor Nea Huntingdon; and, somehow, I feel as though I could never visit Belgrave House until you are master there."

Erle smiled. "When that day comes, Mrs. Trafford shall reap a golden harvest after all her hard work. You do not know how I long to help her, and make life easier for them all. Think of such women living in a place like the Elysian Fields—over that shop too; and yet, if I were to take up their cause now, I should only forfeit my own chances, and do no good. So you mean to be obdurate, my Fairy Queen, and not come to us."

"No, dear," she said, quietly, "I could not come." But she never told him that one of her reasons was that she might possibly meet the Ferrers there, if they were coming back from America; and she felt just now as though she could not have borne such an encounter.

Erle had to go up to London the next day, but the Hon. Algernon Fitzclarence took his place the following evening, and after that Fay had a miserable time; for all day long Hugh and his guest were planning the route for their trip, or talking over previous tours.

Either Fay's knowledge of geography was very limited or her head got confused; but as she listened to them, she felt as though Egypt were thousands of miles away, and as though Hugh would certainly get lost in those trackless deserts, and was cruel to leave her for such dangers, she thought. And sometimes she got so nervous that she would make an excuse and leave the room, that she might not hear any more. And then she would wander about the grounds in an aimless way, trying to throw off the oppression that was growing greater as the days went on. It was not that she did not want her husband to leave her. Her loneliness could not be greater if he went away—so she believed in her wretchedness; but she was so terrified for him. And she had taken a dislike to the Hon. Algernon Fitzclarence. He might be a great traveller, as Hugh told her, and a very amusing companion, but his manners were not to her taste. Fay's innocence instinctively took alarm at the covert admiration conveyed in her guest's looks and words. He was too much a man of the world to pay her open compliments; and indeed her gentle dignity repelled him; but he made her understand that he thought his hostess very charming.

Hugh noticed nothing; he was rather pleased than otherwise that a fastidious man like Fitzclarence should admire his little wife. Fay was certainly very pretty, even in her husband's eyes, and she was so much improved—not half so childish. But it was a relief to Fay when the Hon. Algernon departed. Hugh was to join him in town for a day or two to procure his outfit, and then come back to the Hall to bid Fay good-bye. It was on the second day after their guest had left Redmond Hall that Fay went into her husband's room to dust and arrange his papers as usual.

It was a duty she had taken upon herself from the first. Sir Hugh had a masculine horror of what he called servants' interference—he never allowed them to touch the papers on his writing-table or bureau; and his strictures on the feminine duster were so severe that no one but Mrs. Heron ever ventured even to remove the overflowing waste-paper baskets.

But when Fay came to the Hall she assumed the duty as her right, and took a great pride and pleasure in her task; and Hugh's first marital praise was bestowed on the clever little fingers that tidied without disarranging his cherished papers, and after that the work became her daily pleasure. But this morning there was an unusual amount of disorder and confusion. Sir Hugh had sat up late the previous night sorting and destroying his letters; and not only the baskets but the floor was heaped with a profusion of torn paper. Fay felt weak and tired, and she went about her work slowly; but she would not ring for a servant to help her; it would be a long time before she tidied Hugh's papers again, she thought. And then her attention was attracted by an unfinished letter lying at the bottom of the debris which she first believed had been thrown away by mistake—but on closer inspection she found it was torn across. But it was in her husband's handwriting. Fay never knew why the temptation came to her to read that letter. A sentence had caught her eye, and an intense wish suddenly came over her to read the whole and know what it meant. Afterwards she owned that her fault had been a great one; but she was to pay dearly for her girlish curiosity.

It was a mere fragment, and was apparently the concluding portion of a long explanatory letter.

". . . And now I have told you all frankly, and however much you may condemn me, at least you will be sorry for me.

"For, indeed, I have done all that a man can do, or at least the best that is in me, and have only been beaten and humiliated at every turn. I can do no more. My illness has exhausted me, and taken away all strength of resistance; and though it may seem cowardly to you, I am forced to run away, for my present life is unendurable. Just put yourself in my place, and think what I must suffer.

"So you must not blame me, dear, if I have come to the conclusion that the same place cannot hold us both—at least not for a time. One or other of us must be I. The misery of it is too great for my endurance, until I can learn to forget the past; and, as I have told you before, Margaret,"—the word lightly scratched through and "I" substituted, only Fay never noticed this—"I think it right to go; and time and absence will help us both. She is so good and gentle; if she knew all, she would own that this is my duty; but——" here the letter was torn across, and Fay read no more. But as she stood there her fingers stiffened over the paper, and an icy chill seemed to rob her of all feeling. She thought that letter was written to Margaret, and now her despair had reached its climax.

Poor, unhappy Wee Wifie; it was a most fatal mistake. That letter had been written by Hugh one night when he could not sleep, and it was addressed to his wife. He had come to the conclusion that he had lived the life of a hypocrite long enough, and that it would be wiser and more honest if he unburdened himself of his unhappy secret and told Fay why he had thought it better to go away. He had tried to speak to her once, but she did not seem to understand, and he had grown irritable and impatient; it would be easier to make excuses for himself on paper. He could tell her truly that he was very fond of her, and that he wanted to make her happy. "I mean to make you a good husband," he had said in a previous portion; "one of these days, if you are patient with me, you shall be the happiest little woman in the world."

Hugh never finished this letter; something happened to distract his attention, and he never found an opportunity of completing it. The night before he had read it over, and the beginning had not pleased him. "I will write another when I am away," he said to himself; "I am afraid she will feel herself hurt if she reads this, poor little thing. I have not been sufficiently considerate." Unfortunately Fay had come to a different conclusion. She thought the letter had been written to Margaret, and that the "she" who was mentioned was Hugh's wife. Yes, it was his wife of whom Hugh spoke when he said the same place could not hold them both, and for "place" the unhappy girl substituted "house." Hugh could not remain in the same house with her. "She was good and gentle; if she knew all,"—ah! and she did know all—"she would own that it was his duty; his present life was unendurable," and therefore—therefore he was going to Egypt with that dreadful man who would lead him into danger. "One or other of us must leave, and of course it must be I."

"No, no, my bonnie Hugh," she said at last, with a dim smile, as she lifted up her eyes to his portrait; "if one must be sacrificed it shall not be you—no, my dearest, it shall not be you." And then, in her childish ignorance, she made up her mind that Hugh should not go to Egypt.

"You are very unhappy, darling," she went on, pressing the letter in her hands; "you are terribly unhappy because you cannot love me and care for your boy; but you shall not be troubled with us any longer; and, indeed, I could not stop—" and here a blush of shame came to her sweet face—"knowing what I know now. No, baby and I will go, and you shall not leave your beautiful home and get lost in those horrible deserts; you shall stay here and learn to forget all your troubles, and presently you will be happy; and it is I who will go, my dearest."

Extraordinary Scene in a Church.

An extraordinary scene occurred in All Saints' Church, Woodford Wells, Essex. It was the occasion of the usual harvest festival and the building was crowded. As soon as the service commenced an elderly man, of gentlemanly appearance, jumped up from his seat excitedly, and, pointing to a lady who was entering, exclaimed, "Oh, what a bonnet!" He continued muttering to himself, and occasionally starting to his feet during the prayers, as well as beating time with his hands to the music. The churchwardens and others endeavored to pacify him, but when they approached him he placed himself in a threatening attitude, the consequence being that no one was able to lay hold of him. Meanwhile many of the worshippers left the church in a state of alarm. When the first hymn was given out by the vicar, the man again jumped up suddenly, left his pew and advanced toward the vicar, every one expecting something serious to happen. The man, however, went up to a lady, put his arms around her and embraced her, to her great consternation. He then turned and walked out of the church and no one followed him. He is a stranger to the locality, and the supposition is that he is an escaped lunatic.

Mark Twain's Meanest Man Outdone.

The Brookville Recorder publishes the following: "The writer was on the road to Farmersville and had to wait some time at the Erbe toll-gate, which was blocked up by a waggon with a hay rack. As we finally drove up and handed over our four cents the old lady in charge of the gate said: 'If you wait long enough I'll tell you why that man was so long here. You see this morning he went past with a load of hay so large it would not go through the gate. To help him out of the trouble my husband and myself got rails from the fence and fixed up the side of the road, so that he could drive around the gate, and he got by without unloading. When he came back just now he refused to pay only one way, as he said he had only gone through the gate once. What do you think of that?' said the old lady as we drove on."

Lessons in Natural Philosophy.

"Yes, Tommy," said the teacher of the infant class, "that is right; vegetables come from the ground; and now can Willie Waffles tell us where meat comes from?"

"Yessum," responded Willie, with the air of one familiar with the subject, "meat comes from the butcher's."

Mrs. Boland, living at Cap Rouge, near Quebec, went to call upon a neighbor yesterday morning, leaving her three young children alone in the house while she was absent. The youngest child, a boy of 3 years of age, amused himself by lighting chips at the stove, when his clothing caught fire, and before his mother returned was so badly burned that he died in a few hours, after suffering the most fearful agony.

The arrival of a supposed English mediation committee at Massowah is interpreted in some quarters as denoting the collusion of England in the Italian project, because the preparations of Italy have gone too far to permit mediation.

His visit to the German Crown Prince is not for the purpose of performing an operation, but for the purpose of considering the advisability of allowing the Prince to return to Germany. Some reports say that the Crown Prince is again suffering from hoarseness.

Advices from Kurrachee say that the tour of the Earl of Dufferin, the Governor-General, along the northern frontier, is associated with the formation of a railway between Kurrachee and Upper India. The establishment of such a railway, it is believed, will enable producers to place wheat in London at one shilling per quarter less than at present.

The programme of the ceremonies attending the celebration of the Pope's Jubilee was made public yesterday. On December 31st the Pope will receive the members of the International Committee, who will present him with a gift of 1,000,000 lire; on January 1st the Pope will celebrate mass in St. Peter's; January 2nd he will hold a public reception at the Church of San Lorenzo; on the 4th and 5th he will receive foreign deputations; on the 6th he will open the exhibition of the gifts presented to His Holiness, and on the 15th the Pope will canonize ten saints.

The trial of Gen. Caffarel, Madame Limousin, Madame Ratazzi and Gen. D'Andlau for selling Legion of Honor decorations, was commenced at Paris yesterday. All the defendants were present except Gen. D'Andlau. Gen. Caffarel was examined and admitted entering into business relations with Mme. Limousin, in order to obtain resources to relieve his embarrassment. He interested himself in the applications for the Legion of Honor decorations solely to oblige Mme. Limousin. He never received any money for them. He denied that he divulged the plan for the mobilization of the Seventeenth Army Corps.

THE CROWN PRINCE WORSE.

Dr. Mackenzie Says There is Another Growth in the Throat.

A Berlin cable says: The Reichs Anzeiger publishes a statement from Dr. Mackenzie that the Crown Prince's throat is worse, but that he is in no immediate danger. Dr. Mackenzie telegraphs from San Remo as follows: "Regarding the condition of the German Crown Prince, there has been a recurrence of the growth lower down in the throat. I am issuing an unfavorable bulletin to-night." Dr. Mackenzie says that the general health of the Crown Prince is excellent, that he takes a great deal of exercise in the open air and sleeps and eats well, but that the local complaint within the last few days has assumed an unfavorable character. The Emperor has instructed Prince William to obtain both a written and verbal report from the physicians as to the state of the Crown Prince's health.

At 7 o'clock this morning Prince William, son of the Crown Prince, visited Prof. Bergmann to arrange for a conference of physicians, which was held this forenoon, the Prince being present. At midday the Prince started for San Remo, via Frankfort. At Frankfort he was joined by Dr. Schmidt, the specialist, who is to decide whether an operation is necessary or not. It was reported that the growth is a tumor, and that the Prince's voice is again hoarse. A later despatch from San Remo says: "Dr. Mackenzie found a totally new growth half an inch below the ligaments of the glottis. There is no immediate danger. The doctor thinks that the growth is too low to be operated upon through the mouth, and that an incision will have to be made into the throat." The news of the Crown Prince's condition has caused a great sensation in Berlin and Vienna.

"DARWIN'S LIFE."

A Forthcoming Book Says He Was a Naughty Child and a Lazy Boy.

A London cablegram says: The Pall Mall Gazette publishes lengthy extracts from a new book entitled "Darwin's Life," which will soon be issued. From these extracts it appears that Darwin as a child was naughty, and as a boy he was lazy. He left Shrewsbury School after seven years very little wiser than when he went there. He frankly avowed that he did not work because he knew that his father would leave him enough to live on. He was placed in charge of Dr. Brother, but his horror of the sight of blood and his repugnance to dissection prevented his becoming a doctor. After two years had elapsed his father concluded that he would not make a doctor and designed him for the Church. He was sent to Cambridge, where he led a dissipated life, gambling and neglecting his studies. The idea of his entering the ministry was ultimately abandoned. Darwin was passionately fond of music. He frequented the concerts in the college chapel and paid the choir boys to sing in his rooms. Yet his ear was strangely defective. He was incapable of perceiving a dissonance and could not hum a tune correctly. In 1839 Darwin became a deist and thereafter remained one. "Never in my most extreme fluctuations," he wrote, "was I an atheist. I never denied the existence of God."

THE GREATEST ART PUBLISHERS.

A Word About Raphael Tuck & Sons, whose Famous Publications Go All Over the World.

If a dozen ordinary men were asked to name the greatest painter now living, the chances are that they would give a dozen different answers. Anybody, though particularly any artist, will tell you that the house of Raphael Tuck & Sons are the greatest art publishers in the world. There can be no doubt of that. Their publications are before you, no matter where you find an art dealer's establishment. Their largest house is in London, but they have others almost equally extensive in Berlin, Paris, Leipzig and New York. Their headquarters in this city, by the way, is in charge of Mr. Samuel Gabriel, at No. 298 Broadway, where the firm's latest productions can be viewed. The collection there displayed of reproductions of the most noted works of all the modern masters is worth going far to see. So extensive have Messrs. Raphael Tuck & Sons' operations in America become that Mr. Adolph Tuck will visit the New York agency about the middle of next month and make arrangements for still further extensions. The factories of Messrs. Raphael Tuck & Sons at Leipzig employ an army of more than three hundred experienced designers, lithographers and transferers. Besides this they have their own paper and card-board mills, where are prepared the materials for their art printing. Altogether the firm employs more than one thousand people in their printing, cutting, embellishing, finishing, packing and shipping departments. They send their publications all over the world. These consist of large and handsome oleographs for framing purposes, artistic studies for painting and drawing, circular and shell plaques, wall pockets, etc., for wall, mantel and cabinet decoration; Christmas and New Year cards, and a thousand and one artistic notions designed to beautify the homes of those who have learned to appreciate the beautiful. Messrs. Raphael Tuck & Sons may truly claim to have done more to render art popular than any other publishers in the world. They have re-produced and sold at popular prices all the paintings in the world-famous Berlin gallery, and the works of some of the eminent foreign and American artists. In Christmas and New Year cards alone Messrs. Tuck & Son annually print more than 2,000 designs. Among their latest novelties is an exquisite line of Porcelain Studies of superior quality and thickness and bevelled, and each inclosed in a wooden safety box, guarding it against risk of breakage in transmission through the mail. All the designs are by well known artists, and the best that has been thus far brought out is the portrait of Mrs. President Cleveland, generally acknowledged to be the best picture of her extant. —*N. THREW VITRIOL AT HER.

A Young Lady Teacher of Norwich the Object of a Fiendish Act.

A Norwich, Ont., despatch says: Upon reaching the usually quiet village of Norwich your correspondent was surprised to find the place thoroughly aroused over a case of vitriol throwing which had taken place the previous evening. The subject of the attack was a Miss McMurchie, one of the lady teachers in the public school, a position which she has filled to the great satisfaction of the ratepayers of this town for the past four years. On Friday evening, as was her custom, the young lady went down to the Post-office for her mail and was returning along Stover street about 7.15. Just as she crossed Court street a man, whom she had not previously noticed, and who, she thinks, had concealed himself in the shade of the fence, faced her and threw directly at her head a quantity of vitriol, probably a pint, judged by the marks upon the sidewalk and the grass, which is badly burned for a full yard in length. Fortunately for the young lady, she was wearing for the first time this season a fur coat and cap to match. The collar of the coat was turned up, thus affording very complete protection. As the scoundrel threw the vitriol from the vessel she dodged her head, thus escaping the full effect of the attack in the face, the contents largely passing over her right shoulder, the balance falling upon the shoulder and collar of her coat and slightly upon her right cheek and ear. For the moment she thought that it was a mere joke of some friend throwing water upon her, and turning to ask the scoundrel why he had done that she felt the burning sensation. Her voice failed her and she hurried into the house of Mr. S. Allen, where the acid was washed from the face and lard immediately applied. Search was immediately made for the assailant, but thus far no arrests have been made. Suspicion points very strongly in certain directions. Miss McMurchie, who is one of the most highly-esteemed young ladies of this town and a member of the Presbyterian Church, is wholly at a loss to account for the assault. She has no enemy that she knows of and cannot imagine any ground therefor. At first it was supposed that the vitriol had been designed for another, but maturer judgment is in favor of the idea that her assailant knew well whom he was attacking. Strong feeling is expressed that the Council has not been called in the emergency and a reward offered for the apprehension and conviction of the offender.

SINGULAR MATRIMONIAL ROMANCE.

A Young Scotchman Whose Faithfulness to His Promised Wife Could Not Be Shaken.

The New York correspondent of the Brooklyn Eagle tells a pretty story, as follows:

Rather a notable wedding took place here the other day, with a romantic story attached. Young James Robertson Blackie, of the great Glasgow publishing house, came over the ocean to take back with him in the guise of a helpmeet Miss Ellen Arthur Botts, of Savannah, Ga., who is a niece of the late President Arthur. He is a tall, blonde young fellow, who is an excellent business man, as the present prosperity of his house shows, and with a heart in the right place, as the following little story proves: His wife was a relative of his stepmother, and came as a schoolgirl to Glasgow to be educated, living in his father's home. He fell in love with her promptly, and they were provisionally engaged owing to her youth. Upon her return to this country she was for some time the devoted nurse of her dying grandfather, and after his death was attacked with fever as a result of her fatigue. While still convalescent the great earthquake that shook Charleston to pieces came to Savannah, and the shock and terror acting upon her enfeebled nerves entirely destroyed her sight. The specialists here, when consulted, declared the case was hopeless, and she must resign herself to life-long blindness. Upon this painful verdict she wrote to her fiancee, releasing him from the engagement, and resigned herself to darkness and loneliness for the rest of her life. The manly young Scotchman, however, refused to submit. He took the next steamer for this country, and on arriving declared that he loved and would marry her whether she ever regained her sight or not. Stimulated by this unexpected happiness she at once began to mend, and with the restoration of her general health her eyes began to improve, and now she has as bright a pair of brown ones as are to be seen anywhere, and no one can see further into a millstone than she. They were married on Wednesday and will return to Scotland some time in November.

SHAVING AGAINST TIME.

On Tuesday night, at No. 418 King's road, Chelsea, says the London Telegraph, an extraordinary shaving match against time was decided, Teddy Wick, the champion barber, being backed to shave 50 persons in 60 minutes for £15 a side. He actually shaved 77 persons in 59 minutes 53 seconds, and thus won the stakes. In the first quarter of an hour he disposed of 21 men; in the second, 14; in the third, 19; and in the last 14 minutes 53 seconds he put on a "spurt" and finished off 23.

A Hint for Teachers.

Miss Gleeson, teacher in an East Middlesex school, has a reading-desk in a corner of the school room, and on it keeps "Treasure Trove" and "Our Little Ones" on file. These are specially useful in stormy weather. During the time of any special event, such as a war, she puts the Graphic or odd numbers of other illustrated papers on the reading-desk. The children at noon hours read in turns; sometimes one will read to a group of listeners.

Was America Ever Discovered?

At the time when Columbus started in search of the New World nearly every man, woman and child in Europe insisted that there was no New World to discover. When he came back, crowned with success, a large proportion of these good people adhered to their theory, and if they were alive to-day many of them would doubtless insist that America had never been discovered at all. A man will give up anything in the world more readily than a pet theory. For example, look at the individuals who still maintain that consumption is incurable. Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery has cured thousands upon thousands of cases, and will cure thousands more, but these people can't give up their point. Nevertheless the "Discovery" will cure any case of consumption, if taken in time.

LAURA PUGH FOUND.

In Company With Her Husband She Accosts Her Father.

Advices from Buffalo convey the information that Laura Pugh, the 18-year-old daughter of Mr. Wm. W. Pugh, formerly of Hamilton, who disappeared from her father's house in Buffalo six weeks ago, was found Wednesday afternoon by her father. She was walking on the street in Buffalo with her husband, Fred. W. Adams, to whom she was married in Toronto immediately after her disappearance. They have been in Chicago during the interval and only returned to Buffalo on Wednesday. The law of New York makes it a felony to marry a girl under 16 years of age without the consent of her parents. The penalty is five years' imprisonment or $1,000 fine, or both. Mrs. Adams has her marriage certificate, and it is not known whether there will be any prosecution or not. Mrs. Pugh, her mother, is very ill.

WHAT AILS YOU?

Do you feel dull, languid, low-spirited, lifeless, and indescribably miserable, both physically and mentally; experience a sense of fullness or bloating after eating, or of "goneness," or emptiness of stomach in the morning, tongue coated, bitter or bad taste in mouth, irregular appetite, dizziness, frequent headaches, blurred eyesight, "floating specks" before the eyes, nervous prostration or exhaustion, irritability of temper, hot flushes, alternating with chilly sensations, sharp, biting, transient pains here and there, cold feet, drowsiness after meals, wakefulness, or disturbed and unrefreshing sleep, constant, undescribable feeling of dread, or of impending calamity?

If you have all, or any considerable number of these symptoms, you are suffering from that most common of American maladies—Bilious Dyspepsia, or Torpid Liver, associated with Dyspepsia, or Indigestion. The more complicated your disease has become, the greater the number and diversity of symptoms. No matter what stage it has reached, Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery will subdue it, if taken according to directions for a reasonable length of time. If not cured, complications multiply and Consumption of the Lungs, Skin Diseases, Heart Disease, Rheumatism, Kidney Disease, or other grave maladies are quite liable to set in and, sooner or later, induce a fatal termination.

Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery acts powerfully upon the Liver, and through that great blood-purifying organ, cleanses the system of all blood-taints and impurities, from whatever cause arising. It is equally efficacious in acting upon the Kidneys, and other excretory organs, cleansing, strengthening, and healing their diseases. As an appetizing, restorative tonic, it promotes digestion and nutrition, thereby building up both flesh and strength. In malarial districts, this wonderful medicine has gained great celebrity in curing Fever and Ague, Chills and Fever, Dumb Ague, and kindred diseases.

Salt-rheum, "Fever-sores," Scaly or Rough Skin, in short, all diseases caused by bad blood are conquered by this powerful, purifying, and invigorating medicine. Great Eating Ulcers rapidly heal under its benign influence. Especially has it manifested its potency in curing Tetter, Eczema, Erysipelas, Boils, Carbuncles, Sore Eyes, Scrofulous Sores and Swellings, Hip-joint Disease, "White Swellings," Goitre, or Thick Neck, and Enlarged Glands. Send ten cents in stamps for a large Treatise, with colored plates, on Skin Diseases, or the same amount for a Treatise on Scrofulous Affections.

"FOR THE BLOOD IS THE LIFE."

CONSUMPTION,

which is Scrofula of the Lungs, is arrested and cured by this remedy, if taken in the earlier stages of the disease. From its marvelous power over this terribly fatal disease, when first offering this now world-famed remedy to the public, Dr. Pierce thought seriously of calling it his "Consumption Cure," but abandoned that name as too restrictive for a medicine which, from its wonderful combination of tonic, or strengthening, alterative, or blood-cleansing, anti-bilious, pectoral, and nutritive properties, is unequaled, not only as a remedy for Consumption, but for all Chronic Diseases of the Liver, Blood, and Lungs.

ACCOMMODATION WANTED

More Accommodation Must be Provided for Farmers.

It is becoming more and more apparent that the accommodation afforded the farming community in Flesherton is far from being adequate to meet the wants of our growing and progressive town. We must advance or retrograde—one or the other. We are advancing and have been for years past, but have at length arrived at a peculiar crisis in the history of the place. There has not been sufficient accomodation for the travelling public—in so far as stabling and shed room were concerned—but now that the large sheds connected with Mr. Sproule's block have been closed to the public and put to other uses, it becomes imperative for the people of this town to open their eyes to the fact, that unless ample accommodation be forthcoming a great deal of the trade of the place will be diverted from its legitimate channel. Prompt action is absolutely necessary in this matter. Every day lost counts seriously against us.

Time and again farmers have approached us and have spoken in most emphatic terms of the meagre accommodation afforded—especially on "big days." One prominent farmer said to us, a short time ago: "I tell you what it is, sir, this thing won't go down with us farmers. Here I have been driving my team around the place for two mortal hours—rain pouring down all the time—and I can't find a single nook or corner in which to obtain shelter for them. I like Flesherton and her business men better than those of any other place in my knowledge, but blank me if I don't do my business elsewhere if you folks do not provide decent accommodation."

Another farmer said: "Look here, boss, you're town's goin' to the mischief. D'ye think I drive my team seven or eight miles for the fun of having to tie them to a lamp post in Flesherton and seein' how they like to stand out in the storm while I'm enioyin' myself in a cosy room. Betcher life I don't. An' I won't do it again."

A traveller informed us not long since, that he could not get his horse into the hotel stable here after ten o'clock without "raising a dickens of a row!" Another alleged that he couldn't get in at all and had to go to the Station.

However, be these things as they may, it is a fact patent to all, that our hotel stable, and especially the shed, does not afford anything like ample accommodation to the public generally. What would have been ample ten or fifteen years ago does not fill the bill now by "a large majority." Flesherton has more than doubled in population in that time and requires greatly increased facilities for the travelling public, in order to retain its vastly growing trade and rapidly developing resources. It rests entirely with the people of this town and community to remedy this matter or not as they choose. It is a serious question and as such must be considered in the most serious manner. We leave it with the people.

Mr. James Armstrong, pathmaster, near Eugenia, had Mr. Wm. Wilson up before Squire Armstrong on Tuesday last, on a charge of obstructing the public highway by placing thereon a fence. It was evident that Mr. Wilson was in ignorance of the existence of a certain Township By-Law in reference to the opening of the roadway alluded to, or he would not have placed the fence there. A nominal fine only was therefore imposed on him.

We would like to see everybody patronize our worthy Barber, Mr. Booth. He keeps a very neat and tidy shop, is an excellent workman, and a steady and industrious citizen. He intends to give the place a fair trial, but unless there is a moderate patronage, of course he may be induced to go to some better place. The business has been run down by dead-beats like the fellow Smyth, but that is no reason why Mr. Booth should not receive a large patronage and do a rushing business. He is well worthy of the people's custom.

CONFIDENCE RETURNING.

The Central Bank Bills to be Redeemed Forthwith.

From The Toronto World. (Monday.)

The financial scare had almost subsided on Saturday, in fact had disappeared before closing hour. The volume of business at the banks was fairly large, and the deposits, especially in the savings branches, as far as could be learned were fully up to the rule. The tone of The World's article was generally commended as tending to allay excitement, and the alarmists were not to be found by noon.

The bankers believe that the scare is over, as they are confident that the banks have decided to stand together whatever the cost may be. Even the strongest institution cannot afford to chance the effects that might follow another suspension. The bankers themselves, though not disposed to talk much, do not deny that some such understanding exists.

But the banks have learned a lesson, viz., that it would have been in their interests to have assisted the Central when it appealed to them rather than to have aggravated the situation as they appear to have done. The banks, too, have learned this lesson: that a little more co-operation and brotherly feeling would not hurt their combined interests.

Mr. Walker, the general manager of the Commerce, in an interview on Saturday said his concern had been too harshly spoken of as "ear-marking" the bills of the Central Bank, and thereby first starting the uneasy feeling. It was not, said he, till large blocks of Central bills were being offered for deposit in the Commerce, and when the other banks were cognizant of the real condition of that institution that the Central notes were earmarked—a term meaning that the bank holds the depositor responsible for these bills should the bank issuing them be unable to redeem them when presented.

But granting all this, it does seem that not only the Commerce, but the other banks were too previous in thus casting suspicion on the notes of the Central, for The World is authorized to say that arrangements are being completed for the immediate redemption of the notes of the bank. Any one who will read the communication at the close of this article on "Bank Note Circulation" will see the need there is for the banks protecting one another's notes.

QUEBEC CONFERENCE.

The Resolutions Adopted by the Provincial Representatives.

NEW FINANCIAL BASIS.

Unrestricted Reciprocity Endorsed by the Delegates.

DISALLOWANCE CENSURED.

Respecting Amendments of the British North America Act.

Whereas, in framing the British North America Act, 1867, and defining therein the limits of the legislative and executive powers and functions of the Federal and Provincial Legislatures and Governments, the authors of the Constitution performed a work, new, complex and difficult, and it was to be anticipated that experience in the working of the new system would suggest many needed changes; that twenty years' practical working of the Act has developed much friction between the Federal and Provincial Governments and Legislatures, has disclosed grave omissions in the provisions of the Act, and has shown (when the language of the Act came to be judicially interpreted) that in many respects what was the common understanding and intention had not been expressed, and that important provisions in the Act are obscure as to their true intent and meaning; and whereas the preservation of Provincial autonomy is essential to the future well-being of Canada; and if such autonomy is to be maintained, it has become apparent that the Constitutional Act must be revised and amended; therefore the representatives and delegates of the Provinces of Ontario, Quebec, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Manitoba, duly accredited by their respective Governments, and in conference assembled, believing that they express the views and wishes of the people of Canada, agree upon the following resolutions as the basis upon which the Act should be amended, subject to the approval of the several Provincial Legislatures:

LIMITING THE FEDERAL VETO.

1. That by the British North America Act exclusive authority is expressly given to the Provincial Legislatures in relation to subjects enumerated in the 92nd section of the Act; that a previous section of the Act reserves to the Federal Government the legal power of disallowing at will all Acts passed by a Provincial Legislature; that this power of disallowance may be exercised so as to give to the Federal Government arbitrary control over legislation of the Provinces within their own sphere; and that the Act should be amended by taking away this power of disallowing Provincial statutes, leaving to the people of each Province, through their representatives in the Provincial Legislature, the free exercise of their exclusive right of legislation on the subjects assigned to them, subject only to disallowance by Her Majesty in Council as before Confederation; the power of disallowance to be exercised in regard to the Provinces upon the same principles as the same is exercised in the case of Federal Acts.

QUESTIONS OF DISPUTED JURISDICTION

2. That it is important to the just operation of our Federal system, as well that the Federal Parliament should not assume to exercise powers belonging exclusively to the Provincial Legislatures, as that a Provincial Legislature should not assume to exercise powers belonging exclusively to the Federal Parliament; that to prevent any such assumption, there should be equal facilities to the Federal and Provincial Governments for promptly obtaining a judicial determination respecting the validity of statutes of both the Federal Parliament and Provincial Legislatures; that constitutional provisions should be made for obtaining such determination before, as well as after, a statute has been acted upon; and that any decision should be subject to appeal as in other cases, in order that the adjudication may be final.

PRIVATE ATTACKS ON FEDERAL AND PROVINCIAL STATUTES.

3. That it is in the public interest, with a view to avoiding uncertainty, litigation and expense, that the constitutionality of Federal or Provincial statutes should not be open to question by private litigants, except within a limited time (say two years) from the passing thereof; that thereafter such constitutionality should only be questioned at the instance of a Government, Federal or Provincial; that any enactment decided, after the lapse of the limited time, to be unconstitutional should, for all other purposes other than the mere pronouncing of the decision, be treated as if originally enacted by the Legislature or Parliament which had jurisdiction to enact the same, and as being subject to repeal or amendment by such Legislature or Parliament.

REFORM OF THE SENATE.

4. That a leading purpose of the Senate was to protect the interest of the respective Provinces as such; that a Senate to which the appointments are made by the Federal Government, and for life, affords no adequate security to the Provinces; and that, in case no other early remedy is provided, the British North America Act should be so amended as to limit the term for which the Senators hold office, and to give the choice, as vacancies occur, to the Province to which the vacancy belongs, until, as to any Province, one-half of the members of the Senate representing such Province are Senators chosen by the Province; that thereafter the mode of selection be as follows: If the vacancy is occasioned by the death, resignation or otherwise of a Senator chosen by a Province, that Province to choose his successor; and if the vacancy is occasioned by the death, resignation or otherwise of any other Senator, the vacancy to be filled as now provided by the Act, but only for a limited term of years.

LIEUTENANT-GOVERNORS' POWERS.

5. That it was the intention of the British North America Act, and of the Provinces which were thereby confederated, that in respect of all matters as to which the Provincial Legislatures have authority, the Lieutenant-Governor of every Province, as the representative of the Sovereign in Provincial affairs, should have the same executive authority as other Governors and Lieutenant-Governors of British Colonies and Provinces; that the Act has practically been so construed and acted upon in all the Provinces ever since Confederation; that it is of essential importance to the Provinces that this right should be maintained, and should be placed beyond doubt or question; that, there being no express provision in the Act declaring such right, and the right being in consequence occasionally denied and resisted, the Act should be amended by declaring its true construction to be according to the intention and practice as herein mentioned.

FEDERAL SEIZURE OF LOCAL WORKS.

6. That the Federal authorities construe the British North America Act as giving to the Federal Parliament the power of withdrawing from Provincial jurisdiction local works situated within any Province, and though built in part or otherwise with the money of the Province or the municipalities thereof; and of so withdrawing such local works (without compensation) by merely declaring the same to be for the general advantage of Canada or for the advantage of two or more Provinces, whether that is or is not the true character of such works within the meaning and intention of the Act; that it was not the intention that local works should be so withdrawn without the concurrence of the Provincial Legislature, or that the power of the Federal Parliament should apply to any other except "such works as shall, although lying wholly within any Province, be specially declared by the Acts authorizing them to be for the general advantage," as expressly mentioned in section 29, subsection 11, of the Resolutions of the Quebec Conference of 1864 and that the Act should be amended accordingly.

FEDERAL ELECTIONS ON PROVINCIAL LISTS.

7. That there exists in each Province the requisite machinery for preparing voters' lists and revising the same for elections to the Provincial Assembly; that, without any detriment to either Federal or Provincial interests, the lists so prepared were used for twenty years at all Federal elections, under the express terms of the British North America Act and of the subsequent statutes of the Federal Parliament; that the preparation of separate voters' lists for Federal elections is cumbrous and confusing, and involves great loss of time and needless expense to all concerned therein; and that in the opinion of this conference the British North America Act should be so amended as to provide that, at all elections to the Federal Parliament, in any Province, the qualification and lists of electors should be the same as for the Legislative Assembly of the Province.

POWER OF LOCAL GOVERNMENTS TO APPOINT MAGISTRATES.

8. That the intention of the British North America Act and of the several Provinces thereby confederated was, that the Provincial authorities should have the power of appointing stipendiary, police and other magistrates, and all officers who are under the jurisdiction of the Provincial Legislatures; that ever since Confederation all such appointments have accordingly been made by Provincial authority; that it is just and right in the general interest that the Provinces should have this power; that a question has been raised in some of the Provincial Courts as to whether, by the technical effect of the Act, such power exists; and that, to remove all doubt on so important a matter, an amendment of the Act should be obtained, expressly declaring that the jurisdiction to make such appointments does belong to the Provinces.

REVENUE FROM PROVINCIAL COURTS.

9. That, according to the intention of the British North America Act and its promoters, the Provinces are entitled to all fees paid or payable on legal proceedings in the Provincial Courts; that the Provinces accordingly have always enjoyed or dealt with the revenue therefrom; that, according to a recent decision of Her Majesty's Privy Council, the Provincial Legislatures cannot legislate as to such fees or apply the revenue to Provincial purposes; and that the Act should be so amended as to expressly give this constitutional right.

POWER OF ISSUING COMMISSIONS TO HOLD COURTS.

10. That by the British North America Act the Provincial Legislatures have exclusive jurisdiction to make laws in relation to the administration of justice, including the constitution, maintenance and organization of Provincial Courts, both of civil and criminal jurisdiction; that a judicial opinion has been expressed that a Lieutenant-Governor has the power of issuing commissions to hold Courts of Assize and Nisi Prius, Oyer and Terminer and General Jail Delivery, but the right to do so is considered to be so open to the question that, when it is deemed necessary to hold such a Court, independent commissions expressed in the same terms have, by arrangement between the Federal and Provincial Governments, been issued by the Governor-General and Lieutenant-Governor; that it is expedient that all doubt should be removed and the contrivance of two commissions rendered unnecessary; and that an amendment of the Act should expressly declare that the Lieutenant-Governors have power to issue such commissions, subject to Provincial statutes.

PRIVILEGES OF LOCAL LEGISLATURES.

11. That it has been found by the experience of all legislative bodies to be necessary that they should possess certain privileges and immunities to enable them effectually to discharge the functions entrusted to them; that, for this purpose, Acts have been passed by the Parliament of Canada, and confirmed by Imperial legislation, defining the privileges, immunities and powers of the two Houses and of the members thereof; that Acts in like manner have been passed by several Provincial Legislatures defining the privileges of their Legislative Councils and Legislative Assemblies; that these Acts have not yet been confirmed by Imperial legislation; that doubts have been expressed as to the power of the Provincial Legislatures to pass these laws; that a Provincial Legislature should have the same power to pass Acts defining the privileges of the Legislative Council and Legislative Assembly and of the members thereof, as the Federal Parliament has to pass Acts defining the privileges of the Senate and House of Commons and of the members thereof; that the Provincial Acts should be confirmed as the Federal Acts were; and that it should be declared by the amending Imperial statute that a Provincial Legislature has, with respect to itself, the same powers as the Federal Parliament has with reference to such Parliament.

ABOLITION OR REFORM OF LEGISLATIVE COUNCILS.

12. That in two of the Provinces of the Dominion there is no second chamber, that in five of the Provinces there is a second chamber; that in one of these five the Legislative Council is elective and for a limited term; that in the other four the appointments are by the Lieutenant-Governor and for life; that the experience which has been had since Confederation shows that, under responsible government and with the safeguards provided by the British North America Act, a second Provincial chamber is unnecessary, and the expense thereof may in all the Provinces be saved with advantage; that under the Act a Provincial Legislature has power to amend the constitution of the Province; that this power includes the abolition of the Legislative Council, or changing the method of constituting the same; that the provision has failed to effect the abolition of the Council in some Provinces where public opinion is believed to favor such change; and that the Act should be so amended as to provide that, upon an address of the House of Assembly, the elected representatives of the people, Her Majesty the Queen may by proclamation abolish the Legislative Council, or change the constitution thereof, provided that the address is concurred in by at least two-thirds of the members of such House of Assembly.

FEDERAL CLAIMS TO PROVINCIAL CROWN LANDS.

13. That by the British North America Act it is provided that all lands belonging to the several Provinces of Canada shall belong to the Provinces respectively in which they are situate; that the claim recently made by the Federal Government to all Crown lands as to which there was no treaty with the Indians before Confederation, is contrary to the intention of the Act and of the Provinces confederated, is unjust, and is opposed to the construction which, until a recent period, the Act received from the Federal authorities, as well as from the Legislatures and Governments of the Provinces; that the Act should be amended so as to make clear and indisputable in its technical effect, as well as its actual intention, that all such lands belong to the Province in which they are situate, and not to the Dominion.

BANKRUPTCY AND INSOLVENCY.

14. That by the British North America Act the jurisdiction with respect to bankruptcy and insolvency is assigned to the Federal Parliament; that there is no Federal law on that subject now in force; that, in the absence of a law for the whole Dominion, it is in the public interest that each Province should be at liberty to deal with the matter, subject to any Federal law which may thereafter be passed; that it is doubtful how far under the present provisions of the Act, the Provincial Legislatures can deal with the subject; and it is desirable that the Act be amended by expressly giving to the Provinces the necessary jurisdiction, in the absence of and subject to any Federal law.

PROVINCIAL POWER TO PARDON PRISONERS.

15. That it was provided by the 44th Resolution of the Quebec Conference of 1864, that "the power of respiting, reprieving and pardoning prisoners convicted of crimes, and of commuting and remitting of sentences in whole or in part, which belongs of right to the Crown, should be administered by the Lieutenant-Governor of each Province in Council," subject as in the said resolution set forth; that all provision relating to this power was omitted from the British North America Act; that by the royal instructions given to the Governor-General subsequently to the passing of the Act, His Excellency is (among other things) "authorized and empowered to grant any offender convicted of any crime, in any court, before any judge, justice or magistrate within the Dominion, a pardon;" that by reason of this language and otherwise doubts have arisen as to the power of a Lieutenant-Governor of a Province to respite, reprieve or pardon prisoners convicted of an offence against the laws of the Province, or of commuting and remitting, in whole or part, any sentence, fine, forfeiture, penalty or punishment in respect of any such offence; that it is presumed this was not the purpose of the instructions; that the power of dealing with all matters relating to the execution of Provincial laws should belong to the Lieutenant-Governor in Council of each Province, leaving (if deemed desirable) the power of the Federal Government to apply to other cases; and that the Act should be amended accordingly.

THE NORTHERN BOUNDARIES OF ONTARIO AND QUEBEC.

16. That the Provinces represented at this conference recognize the propriety of all questions as to the boundaries of the Provinces being settled and placed beyond dispute; that the boundaries between Ontario, Manitoba and the Dominion, so far as the same have been determined by Her Majesty in Privy Council should be established by Imperial statute, as recommended by the order of Her Majesty; and that the whole northern boundaries of Ontario and Quebec should be determined and established without further delay.

THE PRESENT ARRANGEMENT AS TO PROVINCIAL SUBSIDIES.

17. That by the British North America Act all the Customs and Excise duties, as well as certain other revenues of the Provinces, were transferred from the Provinces to the Dominion, and it was provided that the following sums should be paid yearly by the Dominion to the several Provinces for the support of their Governments and Legislatures:

Ontario	$80,000
Quebec	70,000
Nova Scotia	60,000
New Brunswick	50,000

And that an annual grant in aid of each Province should be made, equal to 80 cents per head of the population as ascertained by the census of 1881, with a special provision in the cases of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick.

INCREASED BURDENS ON THE PROVINCES.

(2) That the revenue of the Dominion, at the inception of Confederation, was $13,716,786, of which 20 per cent. or $2,753,906 went to the Provinces for Provincial purposes, 80 per cent., or $10,962,880, going to the Dominion; that by increased taxation, on an increased population, the Dominion revenue has been raised from $13,716,786 to $33,177,000; that while this increased taxation is paid by the people of the Provinces, and the increase of population imposes upon the Provinces largely increased burdens, no corresponding increase of subsidy has been granted to them, 13 only, instead of 20 per cent., of the increased revenue of the Dominion, or $4,182,525, being now allowed to the Provinces, while, instead of 80 per cent. 87 per cent., or $28,994,475, is retained by the Dominion.

GREATER COST OF CIVIL GOVERNMENT AND LEGISLATION.

3. That the yearly payments heretofore made by the Dominion to the several Provinces under the British North America Act have proved totally inadequate for the purposes thereby intended; that the actual expenses of civil government and legislation in the several Provinces greatly exceed the amount provided therefor by the Act; and that the other expenditure necessary for those local purposes which, before Confederation, were provided for out of Provincial funds, has largely increased since.

NOT READY FOR DIRECT TAXATION.

4. That several of the Provinces are not in a condition to provide, by direct taxation or otherwise, for the additional expenditure needed, and in consequence have from time to time applied to the Federal Parliament and Government for increased annual allowances.

BASIS FOR A FINAL SETTLEMENT.

That this Conference is of opinion that a basis for a final and unalterable settlement of the amounts to be yearly paid by the Dominion to the several Provinces for their local purposes and the support of their Governments and Legislatures, may be found in the proposal following, that is to say:

THE PLAN PROPOSED BY THE CONFERENCE.

(A) Instead of the amounts now paid, the sums hereafter payable yearly by Canada to the several Provinces to the support of their Governments and Legislatures, to be according to population and as follows:

(a) Where the population is under 150,000	$100,000
(b) Where the population is 150,000, but does no exceed 200,000	150,000
(c) Where the population is 200,000, but does not exceed 400,000	180,000
(d) Where the population is 400,000, but does not exceed 800,000	190,000
(e) Where the population is 800,000, but does not exceed 1,500,000	220,000
(f) Where the population exceeds 1,500,000	240,000

PAYMENT ACCORDING TO POPULATION.

(B) Instead of annual grant per head of population now allowed, the annual payment hereafter to be at the same rate of eighty cents per head, but on the population of each Province, as ascertained from time to time by the last decennial census, until such population exceeds 2,500,000, and at the rate of sixty cents per head for so much of said population as may exceed 2,500,000.

THE CASE OF MANITOBA AND BRITISH COLUMBIA.

(C) The population as ascertained by the last decennial census, to govern except as to British Columbia and Manitoba; and as to these two Provinces, the population to be taken to be that upon which, under the respective statutes in that behalf, the annual payments now made to them respectively by the Dominion are fixed, until the actual population is by the census ascertained to be greater; and thereafter the actual population, so ascertained, to govern.

TO BE FINAL BY IMPERIAL ENACTMENT.

(D) The amounts so to be paid and granted yearly by the Dominion to the Provinces respectively to be declared by Imperial enactment to be final and absolute, and not within the power of the Federal Parliament to alter, add to or vary.

EFFECT OF THE PROPOSAL.

(5) That the following table shows the amounts which, instead of those now payable for government and legislation and per capita allowances, would hereafter be annually payable by the Dominion to the several Provinces (the same being calculated according to the last decennial census for the Provinces of Ontario, Quebec, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island, and according to the limit of population now fixed by statute for the Provinces of British Columbia and Manitoba:

Province	ation, 1881.	llowance for Government and legislation.	The subsidy per head.	Total allowance for Government, etc., and subsidy.
Ontario	1,923,328	$ 240,000	$ 1,536,662 40	$ 1,776,662 40
Quebec	1,359,027	320,000	1,087,221 60	1,407,221 60
Nova Scotia	440,572	150,000	352,457 60	502,457 60
New Brunswick	321,233	180,000	256,986 40	436,986 40
Prince Edward Island	108,891	100,000	87,112 80	187,112 80
Manitoba	150,000	150,000	120,000 00	270,000 00
British Columbia	60,000	100,000	48,000 00	148,000 00

CONSIDERATION BY LOCAL GOVERNMENTS.

(7) That this Conference deems it desirable that the proposal above set forth should be considered by the Governments of the several Provinces of the Dominion, and, if approved of, should be submitted to the Provincial Legislatures.

DUTY OF THE LEGISLATURES.

18. That in the opinion of this Conference, the several Provinces of the Dominion, through their respective Legislatures, should at the earliest practicable moment take steps with the view of securing the enactment by the Imperial Parliament of amendments to the British North America Act in accordance with the foregoing resolutions.

RESOLUTIONS RESPECTING PROVINCIAL LEGISLATION IN CERTAIN MATTERS.

There having been submitted for the consideration of the Conference some matters of inter-Provincial interest and concern in respect whereof no amendment of the British North America Act is necessary, this Conference, as to certain of the said matters, resolves as follows:

PROTECTION OF MAGISTRATES UNDER CONSTITUTIONAL ACTS.

19. That, in view of the doubts which arise from time to time as to the respective powers of the Federal Parliament and Provincial Legislatures, it is expedient and just that it should be enacted by the respective Provincial Legislatures, that no action shall lie against any judge, stipendiary or police magistrate, justice of the peace, or officer for any act done under the supposed authority of a statutory provision which may afterwards be held to have been beyond the legislative jurisdiction of Parliament or the Legislature which enacted the same, provided the action would not lie against him if the statutory provision had been within such legislative jurisdiction.

LAWS RESPECTING THE ENFORCEMENT OF DEBTS.

20. That it is desirable that the laws of the several Provinces for the enforcement of debts should be assimilated as far as may be consistent with the different legal systems prevailing in the respective Provinces; that this Conference is of opinion that such assimilation should include provisions against preferences by insolvent debtors, and provisions for the examination of debtors, and for taking speedy possession of an insolvent's estate for the benefit of his creditors; so far as these subjects can be dealt with by the Provincial Legislatures.

PROBATES AND LETTERS OF ADMINISTRATION.

21. That this conference approves of there being legislative provision in the several Provinces of the Dominion, rendering effectual in all the Provinces (subject to proper conditions) probates and letters of administration granted in any one of them.

GIVING EFFECT TO IMPERIAL LEGISLATION.

22. That this conference approves of a similar law being passed in all the Provinces (subject to proper conditions) with respect to probates and letters of administration granted in the United Kingdom, to go into effect when probates and letters of administration granted in the Dominion are by Imperial legislation made effectual in the United Kingdom.

CO-OPERATION OF THE FEDERAL GOVERNMENT INVITED.

Resolved, That copies of the foregoing resolutions be formally communicated by the President on behalf of this conference to the Federal Government, and that this conference do cordially invite the co-operation of the Federal Government in carrying into effect these resolutions.

RESOLUTIONS TO BE TRANSMITTED TO THE RESPECTIVE GOVERNMENTS.

That copies of the foregoing resolutions be also transmitted by the President of this Conference to the respective Governments of the Provinces not represented at this Conference, namely, Prince Edward Island and British Columbia, with a view to their concurrence in and support of the conclusions arrived at by this conference.

A DECLARATION FOR UNRESTRICTED RECIPROCITY

"That, having reference to the agitation on the subject of the trade relations between the Dominion and the United States, this Inter-Provincial Conference, consisting of representatives of all political parties, desires to record its opinion that Unrestricted Reciprocity would be of advantage to all the Provinces of the Dominion; that this Conference and the people it represents cherish fervent loyalty to Her Majesty the Queen, and warm attachment to British connection; and that this Conference is of opinion that a fair measure providing under proper conditions for Unrestricted Reciprocal trade relations between the Dominion and the United States would not lessen these sentiments on the part of our people, and, on the contrary, may even serve to increase them, and would at the same time, in connection with an adjustment of the fishery dispute, tend to happily settle grave difficulties which have from time to time arisen between the Mother Country and the United States." Carried unanimously.

DISALLOWANCE OF MANITOBA RAILWAY ACTS CONDEMNED.

That the Legislature of the Province of Manitoba at its last session enacted a measure providing for the construction of a railway from the city of Winnipeg to West Lynne, known as the Red River Valley Railway; that the line of the proposed railway is within the original limits of the Province of Manitoba as defined by 33 V., c. 3 of the Statutes of Canada; that by the subsequent Act 44 V., c. 14, for the extension of the boundaries of the Province, it was enacted that "the said increased limit and the territory thereby added to the Province of Manitoba shall be subject to all such provisions as may have been or shall hereafter be enacted respecting the Canadian Pacific Railway and the lands to be granted in aid thereof;" that this provision does not apply to the original limits of the Province; that the Province of Manitoba in accepting the extension of its boundaries on the conditions mentioned did not surrender any right, power or franchise which may be exercised by the Province within its original limits; that the Legislature, in passing its measure for the construction of the Red River Valley Railway, acted within its constitutional powers; that the Act has, notwithstanding, been disallowed by the Federal Government; that this conference views with alarm this encroachment of the Federal upon Provincial power, by which the will of the people of a Province in a matter within Provincial jurisdiction is subordinated to the will of the central power; and that this conference desires to express its sympathy with the people and Legislature of Manitoba in their struggle for the rights of their Province.

The delegates from the Province of New Brunswick did not concur in this motion, and wished their dissent to be placed on record.

THE CAROLINA GOVERNORS.

Wide Fame of the Historical Remark and the Circumstances of It.

Assistant Secretary of the Treasury Thompson, who as Acting Secretary of the Treasury in the absence of Secretary Fairchild last week, issued the $14,000,000 bond circular, is one of the handsome members of the Government. He is very well made and has a very graceful manner—a manner that his white hair makes courtly. But his white hair is the work of thought, and not of age, for his face is full and ruddy, and his step is quick and youthful. He was formerly Governor of South Carolina, and might therefore be supposed to know more or less about that famous remark of the Governor of North Carolina. He said to me the other day that it was marvellous how far the remark had travelled. During his long tour among the light houses and life-saving stations on the great lakes this summer he heard of it in the most unexpected ways and places. "Why," he continued, "one day Mr. Kimball (the superintendent of the life-saving service) and I went ashore at a little village to get shaved. We found a little barber shop and two inquisitive barbers. The one who shaved me was even more curious than most barbers. He asked me questions about my journeyings until he found out that I was from Washington, and then he asked me whether I had a place in any of the departments. I told him I had, but did not tell him what it was, and he did not think it well to pursue the subject. He got through before the other barber, and I told Kimball, as I surrendered my chair to an old countryman, that I would wait for him outside. No sooner had I gone than my barber asked Kimball who I was. 'That was Governor Thompson, of South Carolina,' he said, 'now Assistant Secretary of the Treasury.' With that the old farmer rose up in his chair, all lathered as he was, and said: 'Do you suppose he would tell me what it was the Governor of North Carolina said to him?'" I asked Governor Thompson who those famous governors were and just what occurred at their famous meeting. He said that he did not know them by name, and that the story was old when he was born. The tradition was that the Governor of North Carolina, in the good old days when prohibition was not dreamed of, journeyed, on horseback of course, to make a formal call on the Governor of South Carolina. The latter had a jugful of liquor in the house at the time, and for some inexplicable reason could get no more. When his distinguished guest arrived he set the jug out on the table and invited the Governor of North Carolina to make himself at home. The guest drank copiously, the host moderately, to preserve at once his soberness and his liquor. At last he saw with dismay that his guest had drunk the last drop of the precious liquor. The guest was too drunk to know it, but he missed the familiar invitation of his host to take another drink. So leaning on his elbows he looked across the table reproachfully with the melancholy remark: "Governor, it's a long time between drinks."—Washington Letter to Philadelphia Record.

"A PEEP 'ER HEAVEN."

A SKETCH FROM REAL LIFE.

The day after an entertainment at the Hospital given several years ago by a few ladies, assisted by talented friends, to obtain funds to start the Flower Mission, an old man, who for many months had been a patient sufferer from a terrible disease—resulting from having had his feet frozen—lay resignedly awaiting death.

Death, to so many a terrible visitant to him seemed a kind friend—looked forward to as a relief from the agony he had suffered for, what seemed to him, years of weariness and pain. The children were at the hospital that day helping to clear away the remains of the previous evening's entertainment. Childlike they soon tired of the unusual work, and stole away to the wards to see the patients and have a chat with old Dick, the sufferer just alluded to, who was a favorite of theirs. The ladies, busy sorting and packing the numerous articles used the evening previous, scarcely noticed the departure of their small helpers, and an hour passed before they returned, brimful of excitement and delight.

"Come! come! see poor old Dick! He is sound asleep, and we have such a surprise for him when he wakes!"

So spoke one conspirator, the others dancing about filled with delight at the thought of the surprise awaiting their poor friend Dick.

So somebody went to see what the children had been doing during their long absence. Well might Dick be astonished at the transformation scene which met his eyes when he awoke—poor old eyes, dim iwith suffering and sleepless nights. The iron bedstead on which he lay was twined with flowers—the decorations of the flower-room the evening before; all around his pillow lay flowers, on the white counterpane and draped over his head.

Dick had awakened, and in the midst of all the floral beauty and fragrance he lay, with such a smile on his worn face,

"Oh Missy!" he said to one of the ladies. That was the name he always called her.

"Oh Missy! I'm having a peep er heaven sure. It can't be nicer than this. The flowers and the children, God bless them. Someways I'm thinkin', Missy, He wants ter show me what it's like up there."

Nobody said a word. Nobody could. Tears in the eyes make tears in the voice, and one by one those ladies stole away to their work again, leaving poor old Dick so happy, waiting for a "peep er heaven"—the real heaven. It was the last time the ladies ever saw old Dick. The last time those poor weary eyes brightened at their coming.

They left him with his eyes closed, a smile on his rugged face waiting, the garlands of flowers over and above the narrow bed and around the pale countenance, drawn by constant suffering.

If there are any who do not believe in the good done by a flower mission, let them read this truthful sketch and learn that it was through the instrumentality of a flower mission that a poor, suffering, friendless, old man had a "peep er heaven."

STRANGER THAN FICTION.

Remarkable Discovery of a Long Lost Brother.

Thirty-three years ago last September Hiram Robbins and wife, of Brighton, made a visit to Niagara Falls and on the way home were attracted by a man and wife, accompanied by three small children, consisting of a baby, a girl 2 years old and a boy perhaps 4 years old. They were well dressed and apparently in good circumstances, but the mother was insane. The father, owing to his wife's illness, had the whole care of the family and the baby was somewhat neglected. Mrs. Robbins took pity on the baby and offered to take charge of it until the train reached Rochester. As they neared the city the father said: "If you would kindly take baby and keep him for eight or ten days until I could care for the rest of the family I will return and take him and reward you for your trouble."

Mr. Robbins' people readily consented to do as requested and the father gave the name of the baby as Frank Dyer. When the ten days were up Mr. R.'s people looked for the man's return, but in vain. And when two or three months had passed they began to wish that he would not come and he never did. The child grew up the foster brother of Prof. S. J. Robbins, of Penfield, with whom many of our readers are personally acquainted. S. J. Robbins entered the army with the 108th Regiment from this city and during his absence this youth was the comfort of Mr. and Mrs. Robbins. During the rebellion Hiram Robbins died. In September, 1864, S. J. Robbins came home, having left his right arm at Cold Harbor, Va. In a few weeks after his return Mrs. Hiram Robbins died, leaving Frank Dyer twice orphaned. The two orphaned boys fought the battle of life as best they could, Mr. Dyer taking a position on a railroad. In this he was successful, soon becoming a conductor on the Central, and is now a passenger conductor on the Chicago, Kansas & Nebraska Railroad. Now comes the strangest part of the story. About three weeks ago a conductor on the Central saw a lady in the Syracuse depot looking for a lost brother, and after hearing her story became convinced that Frank Dyer was he. A letter was sent to Prof. S. J. Robbins, who corresponded with the lady in Vermont and found her to be Frank's sister. The mother is still alive and insane, but has never forgotten to ask for her baby. She can tell his exact age and the clothes he wore when she last saw him. The father died soon after leaving the child with Mr. Robbins, and at his death all positive knowledge as to the whereabouts of the babe was lost. The older brother lives in Nebraska. Conductor Dyer is at his old home at Allen's Creek with Prof. S. J. Robbins, who will accompany him to see the relatives from whom he has been separated for 33 years.—Rochester Herald.

THE CROWN PRINCE'S FATE.

Doctors Declare That He Has Cancer in the Throat.

HIS PROSPECTS OF LIFE.

A last Saturday night's Berlin cable says: The first whispers of dire news from San Remo, confirming the rumors that the Crown Prince's malady was of a cancerous nature, was unheard in Berlin till towards evening. On the Boerse business was over. Some evening papers had congratulatory articles on the improving prospects of the Crown Prince, when suddenly semi-official reports were permitted to transpire that yesterday evening's advices were false news. These reports created general consternation. The earlier announcements were vaguely put, to the effect that the malady had been found to be of a cancerous nature, and that with regard to the further treatment of the Crown Prince no trustworthy information would be obtainable until a verbal report was received from Dr. Schmidt, who went to San Remo at the command of the Emperor. Nothing was said about the chances of recovery or the condition of the patient, but the official admission was enough to conform the worst fears in the public mind concerning the Crown Prince's fate. Later it became known that Prof. Bergmann had not lectured at the University, being engaged in a consultation on the expediency of performing another operation, and that Drs. Schroeter and Krause were in favor of immediate tracheotomy, while Drs. Schretzer and Mackenzie were opposed to it. At last a decisive examination was made yesterday morning, which resulted in the doctors unanimously declaring that a radical cure was impossible, the only difference of opinion being as to how long the Crown Prince's life could be prolonged. The Crown Prince heard part of the discussion between the doctors. He showed the greatest self-possession when told that his recovery was very uncertain and retired to meet the Princess. He afterwards sent a long despatch to the Emperor, and then, recalling the doctors, he told them that he placed himself in their hands. Dr. Mackenzie communicated the result of the examination to Prince William, who seemed to be more affected by the dreadful news than his father had been. Dr. Schmidt, who will personally read the report of the doctors to the Emperor to-morrow, shares Dr. Mackenzie's opposition to an immediate operation. His relations with the Emperor, therefore, will undoubtedly influence the family decision. Prince William returns to Berlin to-morrow.

The confirmation of the statement that the Crown Prince is afflicted with cancer has revived interest in the methods attempted for the extirpation of the disease. The National Zeitung, in an article bearing the stamp of authority, says: "Despite the malignant nature of cancer, the larynx operation is now frequently successful. The most famous German operators are Dr. Hann, of the Friederichshaem Hospital, Berlin, and Dr. Bergmann, who recently performed five operations, and in every case the patient rapidly recovered. Even the extirpation of the whole of the larynx has been effected with complete success." A gentleman named Puher, residing in Prague, has sent letters to the newspapers stating that Prof. Gussenbaum, of Heidelberg, removed the whole of his larynx in 1880, since when he has enjoyed excellent health.

Whatever is done with the Crown Prince, the feeling in the highest quarters is against further reliance upon Dr. Mackenzie. It will be an unavailing and poignant source of regret to all Germany that while the German specialists diagnosed the cancer character of the growth at the outset of the Prince's illness the treatment of the case was committed to Dr. Mackenzie. The opinions of Profs. Tobold, Fraenkel and others, published in the spring, are recalled as proofs of the accuracy of the German specialists. Prof. Tobold's written opinion is now of historic interest. He declared that the removal of the first growth from the Crown Prince's throat with forceps by Dr. Mackenzie's method provoked a vigorous recurrence of the tumor. The only eminent defender of Dr. Mackenzie is Prof. Vertell, of Munich. He maintains that Mackenzie did not select the wrong treatment, that he continued that begun under Bergmann and Gerhards, and that an operation in the spring would have been utterly useless.

The following semi-official summary of the opinions of the physicians in attendance at San Remo is issued to-night: Dr. Schretzer holds that the new growth below the vocal cords is cancerous and advises the complete cutting out of the whole larynx. He claims that an immediate operation would be very advantageous, but says he would consent to a postponement, as in the meantime the malady can be combatted by tracheotomy. Dr. Schroeter is convinced that the life of the Crown Prince might be preserved by the total excision of the larynx. Although the operation is very dangerous and its effect uncertain, it might be attended with good results. An excision from the windpipe, he maintains, would only defer death a few years. Dr. Krause states that the new swelling prevents him from expressing a decisive opinion. The affection appears to be cancerous, but he opposes a complete excision of the larynx and advocates tracheotomy only. Dr. Mackenzie considers the growth to be cancerous and advises that a small piece of it be extracted for submission to analysis by Prof. Virchow, on whose report the final decision of the physicians should be based.

The Emperor is naturally much affected by the serious nature of the Crown Prince's illness, but the rumors that he has had a relapse threatening death are untrue. He has appeared daily at the palace windows at the time for relieving the guard and bowed and saluted the crowd waiting for him. He looks pale and works at his desk for some time before dinner. News comes from Coblentz that the Empress is worse. No bulletins about her condition have been posted, and it is feared her illness is serious.

On the meeting of the Church of England Synod of Nova Scotia at Halifax yesterday, a cablegram was read from the Archbishop of Canterbury stating that he was waiting for additional information before recommending a name for the bishopric. The Synod consequently adjourned for three months.

WHY CHINESE DO NOT DRINK NEW TEA.

The Chinese will not drink new tea because it contains too much alkaloid, and is sometimes actually intoxicating. The "theine" diminishes the waste of the body, enabling them to get along with less nourishment, so that it saves food, and is instinctively valued for this by the poor. The Tartars obtained still more sustenance from their brick-tea by powdering it and boiling with salt and mutton fat, whereby the casine or gluten of the plant becomes extracted. Then they can live for weeks on the tea-leaves which the British housewife throws away. On the other hand, it is distinctly bad to let tea stand too long: that brings on tannin, and too much tannin will turn meat taken at the same time into a sort of leather within the stomach. There can be little need, however, to instruct in the art of tea-making. From the silver gilt equipage of the duchess to the brown-stone pot in which the washerwoman solemnly prepares her evening dish of tea, the art of making it is essentially feminine, and has been profoundly studied. One hundred and eighty million pounds per annum all passed through teapots—what a river to spring from Pepy's first tentative spoonful and the modest investment of the old East India Company.

PRETTY COSTUMES.

Two Magnificent Dresses Just Produced by Worth.

A cablegram to-day says: One of the most magnificent ball dresses of the present season has just been completed by Worth for the Russian Princess Troubetsko. The ample train in grass green velvet is caught back to show side breadths in satin of the palest possible green made very full and caught up slightly. These side widths are met by a plain frontage in pale green satin set on the skirt with scarcely any fulness and embroidered down the centre with a cluster of ostrich feathers—three in each group—and worked in grass green floss silk and silver beads. Around this skirt front runs a ribbon pattern in grass green velvet, outlined with silver spangles, the whole front being edged with silver embroidery.

A very beautiful and artistic evening dress, which was made for the Marquise de Gallifet, is in white faille. The skirt front is cut in deep scallops and edged with a fringe of silver beads. This skirt front is veiled with silver spotted tulle edge, with fringe and silver beads, and drawn up at one side with a branch of yellow roses, with buds and foliage, a longer branch of the same flowers being set at the other side of the skirt. The back is composed of plain full widths of the silver spotted tulle, and at the right side falls a long, white sash in pale yellow satin ribbon.

How the Ameer Punished an Alarmist.

The Homeward Mail says: Some strange stories have been told of the way in which Abdur Rahman lords it over his people. There is a humor in his way of playing the lord absolute which can best be appreciated at a distance, as a story which has just reached us will show. Not long ago, we are told, the Ameer was sitting in durbar discussing public affairs. The "home" department had gone through their work. Orders had been issued to release certain persons from the sorrows of existence, when the durbar suddenly dashed into greater things, and began to talk about the English and the Russians. A man who had lately been introduced at court, and was not well acquainted with his sovereign's ways, remarked: "Lord of the earth, let people say what they like, but this humble one has been scanning the political horizon with far-reaching eyes, and the Russians are coming." The lord of the earth smiled a sweet smile—some of the old courtiers who knew that smile also smiled—and, turning upon him with the "far-reaching eyes," said: "Bright jewel of our durbar and sun of our understanding, art thou sure of this?" "The lord of the earth is omniscient and knows everything," replied he. "Well, to be sure, we do see things and know one or two things, but we are old now. Moreover, yon tree obstructs our view. Moreover, thou art young; go thou, therefore, climb the tree, watch the cursed Muscovite's movements, and when he is very close upon us come and inform us. The tree is high, so that thou shalt be enabled to see a long way off." Forthwith the man was led to the tree and made to climb to the topmost branches. To keep up his courage if he grew weary of his post, a guard with bayonets fixed was told off to remain below. It is said the young man felt considerably elevated by his master's humor, and felt very exhilarated at first, but three days' contemplation of the beauties of nature, is apt to tire one, and so he fell. They say he got hurt and died. No one dares to raise alarms in Cabul now.

"Oh, Lineman, Spare that Tree!"

Chief Justice Galt decided an important question yesterday in Queen vs Stonge. Defendant, who was an employee of the G. N. W. Telegraph Company, had been convicted in Barrie for having destroyed trees while at work arranging and repairing telegraph wires. Upon a motion to quash conviction His Lordship held that under the statutes relating thereto the telegraph company and their servants are exonerated from blame in respect of injuries to trees so long as no unnecessary damage is done. The conviction was quashed.

Chicago Pointers.

Party addressed—Yes, sir. Saloon straight ahead. Jail directly opposite. You can't miss it, my friend, you can't miss it, if you keep on.—Chicago Tribune.

Sir Charles Warren's order prohibiting meetings in Trafalgar square, London, has the approval of all but the disorderly classes or fanatics. "Sir Charles," says the Daily News, "proposes to stop a public nuisance, and he ought to be vigorously upheld." Other journals write in a similar tone and public opinion in London is unmistakable.

The Northwest Council has passed a resolution in favor of the ballot for the election of its members.

A BEAUTIFUL TRAIN.

Americans Travelling Luxuriantly From Boston to California.

By long odds the most magnificent train which has ever passed over the Grand Trunk line went west about 3.30 yesterday afternoon. It was conveying one of Raymond & Whitcomb's excursion parties from Boston to California. The vestibuled train is the latest and greatest improvement of the idea put forth in the Pullman sleeping car—that of providing the most comfortable, the most luxurious and the safest transit for the railway passenger, and the newest and unquestionably the finest product of the Pullman shops are these magnificent cars. By an ingenious device the whole train is united under one continuous roof, so that in place of detached cars with exposed platforms, there is, in reality, an elongated suite of elegantly furnished apartments, comprising all the comforts and appliances of the most luxuriously appointed hotels. The passenger passes from his bed room to the bath room or barber shop, and from the dining room to the smoking room or reading room, without the least exposure to the elements or to any risk of soiled hands or garments, such as a passage across the platform of an ordinary car is likely to involve. A child can go from one end of the train to the other without the slightest danger. The vestibules, which constitute the main feature of this model train, are formed by enclosing the platforms. They are as elegantly finished as any part of the car, carpeted so as to entirely conceal the points of connection between the joined cars, and illuminated by means of lights depending from the ceiling, whose rays fall through cut-glass paneled doors full upon the steps. The side doors, opening out on the steps, are barred while the train is in motion, but they can be opened instantly when a stop is made. A vertical buffer between the cars imparts greater steadiness to the train, reduces the tendency to oscillation and equalizes the resistances. The cars' superlative elegance is exhibited everywhere. Several railway men and a TIMES representative had a look through the train during the few minutes it stopped here. The names of the coaches are the Harvard (dining), Whitcomb (sleeper), Holden (sleeper), Raymond (smoker), Pasadena (sleeper), America (sleeper), Delmonte (parlor), Corinthia (dining), Servia (parlor). The passengers number 175. There were two G. T. R. engines to the train, and on this line Conductor Allison, of London, is in charge. The coaches comprising the train are valued at $140.000.—Hamilton Times.

A Business-like Offer

For many years the manufacturers of Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy have offered in good faith $500 reward for a case of Nasal Catarrh which they cannot cure. The Remedy is sold by druggists at only 50 cents. This wonderful remedy has fairly attained a world-wide reputation. If you have dull, heavy headache, obstruction of the nasal passages, discharges falling from the head into the throat, sometimes profuse, watery and acrid, at others, thick, tenacious, mucous, purulent, bloody and putrid; if the eyes are weak, watery and inflamed; if there is ringing in the ears, deafness, hacking or coughing to clear the throat, expectoration of offensive matter, together with scabs from ulcers; the voice being changed and has a nasal twang; the breath offensive; smell and taste impaired; sensation of dizziness, with mental depression, a hacking cough and general debility, you are suffering from nasal catarrh. The more complicated your disease, the greater number and diversity of symptoms. Thousands of cases annually, without manifesting half of the above symptoms, result in consumption, and end in the grave. No disease is so common, more deceptive and dangerous, or less understood, or more unsuccessfully treated by physicians.

The State of Crops in Ontario.

The November report of the Bureau of Industries for Ontario states that the area devoted to rye is small, and that this crop does not appear to be growing in favor. The average new crop of fall wheat in the Province is about the same as that given to the crop of this year. The appearance and general condition of the crop at the end of October may be ranked as fair. Indian corn, sorghum, beans and buckwheat have shared the fate of other crops, the drouth proving too much for them. All accounts unite in placing the crop of clover seed as a complete failure. The general condition of the root crops is about on a par with that of the grains. Despite the extremely hot summer, those portions of the Province which devote any considerable attention to fruit growing report the past season to have been a favorable one for this branch of agriculture. The poor pastures of the past season have had the usual effect upon live stock, notwithstanding that supplementary feeding was adopted to a much greater extent than generally happens. The dairy industry has been much more successful during the past year than might have been expected. The yield on honey was affected by the drouth, but at the latter part of October colonies were much stronger than expected.

Honest and True.

This is eminently the case with Polson's Nerviline, the great pain cure. It is an honest remedy, for it contains the most powerful, and purest, and most certain pain subduing remedies known to medical science. It is honest, for it does all it claims to do. It is honest, because it is the best in the world. It only costs 10 or 25 cents to try it, and you can buy a bottle at any drug store. Nerviline cures toothache, neuralgia, pain in the back and side. All pains are promptly relieved by Polson's Nerviline.

A GALE AT OWEN SOUND.

The Steamship Atlantic Severely Handled by the Blow.

An Owen Sound despatch of last (Friday) night says: The steamer Atlantic attempted to go to Collingwood this morning, but failed on account of the sea. She got as far as Meaford, but could not make that port or go any farther and had to turn back. While she was passing the Clay Banks a tremendous wave struck her forward, throwing her on her side. At the same time another wave caught her on the other side, sweeping her decks from forward aft, washing movables overboard and washing two of her metallic lifeboats over, breaking the davits and stauncheons like mere straws. She will lie here and repair. The mate has driven down in hopes of finding her two boats. Wind northwest, forty miles.

"Untold Agony from Catarrh."

Prof. W. HARSNER, the famous mesmerist, of Utica, N. Y., writes: "Some ten years ago I suffered untold agony from chronic nasal catarrh. My family physician gave me up as incurable, and said I must die. My case was such a bad one, that every day, towards sunset, my voice would become so hoarse I could barely speak above a whisper. In the morning my coughing and clearing of my throat would almost strangle me. By the use of Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy, in three months, I was a well man, and the cure has been permanent."

"Constantly Hawking and Spitting."

THOMAS J. RUSHING, Esq., 807 Pine Street, St. Louis, Mo., writes: "I was a great sufferer from catarrh for three years. At times I could hardly breathe, and was constantly hawking and spitting, and for the last eight months could not breathe through the nostrils. I thought nothing could be done for me. Luckily, I was advised to try Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy, and I am now a well man. I believe it to be the only sure remedy for catarrh now manufactured, and one has only to give it a fair trial to experience astounding results and a permanent cure."

Three Bottles Cure Catarrh.

ELI ROBBINS, Runnan P. O., Columbia Co., Pa., says: "My daughter had catarrh when she was five years old, very badly. I saw Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy advertised, and procured a bottle for her, and soon saw that it helped her; a third bottle effected a permanent cure. She is now eighteen years old and sound and hearty."

EDITORIAL NOTES.

The above gentleman observes the Sabbath day with becoming solemnity. He never could get his mouth into shape for whistling or any other kind of Sabbath desecration anyway!

The recent dynamite outrage in Orangeville—referred to elsewhere in these columns—should arouse the Ontario Government to a sense of duty. This is the sixth time dynamite has been resorted to in order to intimidate Scott Act officials in that town, and although $1000 has been spent in endeavoring to ascertain the identity of the would-be assasins, nothing has been accomplished. The local papers state that suspicion points strongly to the instigators—and even hint that there is a strong clue—so that there ought not to be much difficulty in speedily bringing the scoundrels to justice. The citizens of Orangeville should not rest until this foul disgrace upon the fair name of their town is fully wiped out by the identification and punishment of the dynamiters.

The cry for more shed accommodation in Flesherton is being echoed and re-echoed by our citizens, and seems likely to take a practical turn. A Temperance house is even talked of, but be that as it may, our business men should provide as much shed accommodation for their customers as possible; and as a matter of fact mine host of the Flesherton hotel should not be slow to follow suit; and no doubt he will. It is important that this matter be continually agitated until the necessary improvements are provided for our farmers and the public generally.

The defeat of Mr. Coulter and election of Dr. Montague as member of the House of Commons for Haldimand is a rather significant incident in connection with the present Commercial Union agitation. So also was the return of the "war horse of the Cumberland," Sir Charles Tupper, by over one thousand majority.

A branch railway between this town and the Station was discussed some years ago. It now seems probable that the agitation will be revived in the near future.

"Grey County Printers are seriously thinking of organizing a Printer's Association in that County."—Wiarton Echo. Are they? We once were of the same opinion, but a fruitless journey to Owen Sound, at the invitation of the Meaford Mirror, has convinced us that the majority of Grey Publishers really do not know what they want; or, if they do, they have a very unbusiness like way of trying to get it.

ANNEXATION.

Our friend of the Thornbury Standard is away out on the annexation question. The "feeling" was growing slightly some years ago, when few poeple understood the nature of the question. But since Commercial Union bobbed up above the political horizon—for it is a political question pure and simple—annexation stock has gone down, down, down—and still going in the same direction!

The Standard reports a Mr. Thompson as saying, that "if Canada were annexed a fifty or a hundred thousand dollar grant to a harbor like Thornbury would be common." Strange that the Yankee newspapers are forever pointing to the disgraceful condition of their shipping and naval interests along the Atlantic seaboard, as compared with those of Canada. Evidently Mr. Thompson and the newspapers are at loggerheads. But perhaps Thornbury's claims are of such paramount importance, that—in case of annexation(!)—the Government at Washington would drop an odd fifty or hundred thousand dollars into Georgian Bay and thereby keep out the "East wash," in the meantime allowing the harbors along the Atlantic coast to take care of themselves!

The Erie canal is spoken of by the Standard as an evidence of Yankee push and enterprise, and as shadowing the possibility of an early opening of the Georgian Bay canal in case of annexation. Why our Canadian canals beat the Yankee ones "all hollow," and improvements in connection therewith are made every year. The boasted Erie is a shallow creek compared with any of our Canadian ones.

"Were Canada annexed to the U.S. it would not be five years till ocean steamers would come from the gulf of St. Lawrence to Port Arthur. The Georgian Bay canal would at once be built. Millions of treasure would be poured into this now miserable poor country," says the Standard. Don't count "your chickens before they are hatched." As it is, our steamship and steamboat lines are away ahead of Uncle Sam's; and instead of millions of treasure being poured into this "miserable poor country," millions of treasure would be taken out of it to enrich the big manufacturers in the States. Our friend of the Standard is probably aware that we had a taste of this sort of thing before the advent of the N. P. Of course if Canadians could only move south of the 49th parallel—"bags and baggage"—it might be different!

The Standard calls Toronto a "one-horse town." Nevertheless the growth of Toronto has been greater, in proportion, than that of any other city on the continent during the past decade. But of course the Standard is jesting on this point: also when it refers to Montreal in similar terms. Equally laughable and nonsensical are its statements in reference to shipping butter, eggs, &c. to the States "at less expense" than to the Canadian cities named. If the Standard really is in favor of annexation—which we doubt—it will have to deal more in solid facts and less in "bald-headed" assumptions before it can hope to gain converts to its belief.

"THE PATRIARCH,"

The above is the name of a monthly manuscript journal issued in connection with the Flesherton Division, Sons of Temperance, with Mr. C. J. Sproule, Worthy Patriarch, as Editor, and Miss Brown as Assistant. The initial number was issued in the Son's Hall on the 16th inst., and contained several interesting communications, clippings, and a well written "Salutatory" by the Editor, from which we gather the following,

"The objects for which we will strive:—(1) By the reading of our pages from time to time to furnish suitable entertainment for the Division. (2) By the contribution of articles, correspondence, &c., to provide a means of mutual improvement for our members. (3) By the consideration of such contributions to suggest instructive themes for debate or discussion, and (4) by all doing a part in this way, it is hoped that our meetings will be made much more interesting, that our Division will be strengthened, and that the benefit thus derived will not be limited to the members only. As sons of Temperance, we belong to an organization, that has done, and, in most places, is still doing excellent work. Then let us avail ourselves of every proper means to help on the good work. Let the pages of The Patriarch be used to the best advantage. Let us as members do what we are asked to do by the "Good of the Order," or by the Division, cheerfully, and to the best of our ability."

Orangeville.

Orangeville, Nov. 15.—At 8:30 o'clock this evening the house of Scott Act Inspector Anderson, on Second avenue, was again blown up by dynamite. The charge was placed on the veranda at the front of the house, and the two front rooms were badly shattered. The veranda is a complete wreck. Mrs. Anderson, who was alone in the house, was sitting beside the stove in the dining room and was badly shocked. Her screams could be heard several blocks away. The inspector had just left the house and was only about ten yards away when the explosion occurred. He was stunned by the concussion. A note was found tacked to the fence warning Anderson from his efforts in favor of the Scott Act and saying that he might congratulate himself that he had not been blown to the kingdom come before this. Several Orangeville hotelkeepers have been fined for violating the Scott Act during the past week, and it is a usual coincidence that dynamite explosions always occur after the liquor dealers were fined for breaking the law. The evening is very dark and intense excitement prevails in town. This is the sixth dynamite explosion that has occurred in Orangeville in two years. The perpetrators are unknown.

Boring a Square Hole.

A Halifax paper says that a man has spent fourteen years in solving the problem of boring a square hole, and he has succeeded. A company is organized to put his invention on the market. It is simply an oscillating head with chisel edges and projecting lips, which cuts the corners in advance of the chisel. The balance of the machine is almost an exact counterpart of the old-style boring machine. It will cut a four-by-four mortice in from one to five minutes—and do it with perfect accuracy—that a carpenter cannot complete in less than half an hour.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

(From our Regular Correspondent.)

Nov. 18th, 1887.

The question of the election of officers of the House of Representatives grows in interest and importance as the date for the assembling of Congress draws near. Up to the present there is no avowed opposition to the present incumbents of the offices of clerk, sergeant-at-arms and postmaster, though now and then a whisper can be heard that some person will be brought out for one or the other of these places. The fight is over the doorkeepership. It has been claimed among the present competitors of Col. Donelson, the present doorkeeper, that he would not have the support of his home delegation—that of Tennessee. In support of this assertion Mr. J. E. Washington, one of the members from that State, has been mentioned as opposing Col. Donelson. In a letter received yesterday, Mr. Washington writes that all reports to that effect are false. He states that he will reach Washington within a few days, and that he will do all in his power for the success of Col. Donelson. There is no doubt that Donelson will have the State delegation, and, as an indication of what is thought of the outcome the betting is now altogether in favor of his election. Unless something now unexpected shall occur to upset present calculations the officers now holding will probably be re-elected. There is some complaint among democrats that all the offices of the house should be held by States almost in a group, Kentucky having the Speaker, Tennessee the doorkeeper, Ohio the sergeant-at-arms, Indiana the Postmaster and Missouri the clerk. It is perhaps now too late to make combinations for the breaking of the "old slate," as it is called, and for the election of new men in place of the old ones. But there are democrats enough willing and ready to enter the race for either of the subordinate positions—below the speakership—if any prospect of success can be discovered. It remains to be seen whether any combinations to work a change, and that in the caucus the present incumbents will all be renominated. A survey of the field now looks that way.

Speaker Carlisle is here to stay until after the first session of Congress. He is hopeful of passing a tariff bill this session and has devoted considerable energy to that end. He has had several talks with the President since his arrival here. Members are coming to Washington in numbers now and many have matters to discuss with him. He has to think about the formation of the committees of the House, and there are many other matters to occupy his attention, so that he will have as much as he can do against the opening of the session. There is some idea that he will be able to announce his committees before the holidays, but it is hardly likely that he can. The rules have to be adopted, and there is likely to be a fight over them that will take up some time. Besides a hundred new members makes it difficult to fix the committees.

Mr. Carlisle was with the President some time Wednesday. Speaking with your correspondent yesterday, he said that, of course, no one could tell what Congress would do. He thought, however, that the chances of passing a tariff bill were better that during last Congress because the exigencies are greater now. When asked if he thought there was a disposition among the democrats to come together on this question, he said he thought so: he knew nothing to the contrary.

One of the features of the Postmaster General's annual report, which is now nearly completed, will be the statement that the Department by the end of next year will probably be self-supporting. The deficit has lessened nearly three millions during the past year, and with a continued increase in the revenues, which last year amounted to about 10 per cent. and a decrease in the expenses which was about 3½ per cent., there is every prospect that the revenues will equal the expenditures by the end of next year. For the year ending June 1st, 1886, the deficit was over eight million, and for the year ending June 1st, 1887, the deficit was over five million, including, of course, the amount credited to the Union Pacific railway for the transportation of the mails. The large increase in the revenues is the result in part of large additions to the population of the country and the activity in business. But it is largely attributable to the use of the mails in carrying merchandise, which, owing to recent regulations of the department, has become very popular.—L.

Disputed Road.

To the Editor of The Advance.

Sir,—As much unnecessary talk is had regarding a deviation for road on the 10th Concession and erroneous opinions formed—the writer deems it expedient to explain:—

Some seventeen years ago, the deviation in question was established, by the Council then in office. After the usual formalities demanded by the statute—the By-law receiving the signatures of the Reeve and Clerk, and the seal of the corporation. Somewhere about ten years ago a bridge was built on it and since then private work and public has been performed on it more or less, and was used by parties for whom it was established.

One Smith, now deceased, bought his farm with the understanding that this road afforded an out-let.

For many years nothing very important transpired to draw particular attention to it. The same Smith going in and out over land belonging to one William Wilson, upon conditions purely their own. But suddenly difficulties arise and the road becomes of great value—Wilson demanding $50.00 for one-half an acre, whose value when taken seventeen years ago was likely more like $5.00. Approaches were made to the Council by both parties. One to demand an exorbitant price, the other to be assured of his right to the road, unmolested. The Council repudiated the claim, upon legal and prudential considerations: Prudential, because if this claim were paid then, every other claim for those old deviations for which nothing was ever intended to be given—whose value was more than met by the convenience afforded—would be presented by the dozen—Legal.

1st—Because this Wilson purchased four years after the road was established and therefore his claim, if any, was against the person from whom he bought.

2nd—Because 17 years ago, the debt if any, was incurred, and by the statute of limitation, could not be recovered after the lapse of six years from time of incurred debt.

3rd—Because undisputed possession of lands of private individuals for ten years is equivalent to a bonafide ownership, and against which the law is powerless.

Ignorance of these transactions, is pleaded as an excuse and therefore the Council is called upon to spend the people's money for extravagant demands, reckoning the present value instead of the value when obtained.

The Council refuses such demands and because they do this, Wilson—advised of course by a very great authority on municipal law—has taken a short cut to compel all and every to submit to his decision. He has put obstructions upon the road to prevent the ingress and egress of the said Smith. But unfortunately for Wilson, the municipality has other laws touching the case, and any Council would fail in their dignity and duty if they permitted one man to treat the By-Laws with contempt, and therefore they concluded that he must remove the obstructions. It is a great pity that rashness to blindness characterized his actions.

It will be seen I think that he precludes, and shuts off any considerations the Council were won't to show him. No man or body of men will submit to bullying.

Let me make these statements in conclusion, that of I am correct:

1st—Wilson has no claim whatsoever against the Township in law or in justice. If any claim it must be by the party who sold him.

2nd—The extreme ignorance and folly of his advisers of whom I may have more to say hereafter, are astounding.

3rd—The Councillors are sworn to administer the affairs of the Township, not in accordance with sympathy but according to law.

4th—The public should not listen to those meddlers—for a purpose—but to men, who at the expense of friendships, long enjoyed, will carry out their behests according to the statutes and by-laws of the Council fearlessly.

5th—This ignorance, when facilities for knowledge, were open then as now can be no possible excuse. A man must grin and bear it. Such is the ordinary practice of life.

Suicide of Lingg.

A last (Thursday) night's Chicago despatch says: The scene in Lingg's cell after the explosion was ghastly. Teeth, bits of jawbone, shreds of flesh and blood were scattered all over the narrow compartment. A little trail of blood marked the way over the stone flagging to the room where Lingg was carried. Jailer Folz at once gave orders to have every one of the other cells searched, and Parsons' was the first one a descent was made upon. Three deputies entered his cell, took him by the wrists and shoulders and led him to the jailer's office. There he was detained until his cell was thoroughly searched and nothing found. The ex-editor of the Alarm shivered with excitement, fear and curiosity. His face was white and his eyes looked ready to start from their sockets. He was in his shirt and trousers and a wide felt hat shaded his face. He looked as if he would have given worlds to know what had happened, but no information was vouchsafed him. It is believed by some of the reporters that something was found on Parsons, although the jail officials deny this. Parsons was given a new suit of clothes to put on and taken to another cell, where he now is, with two deputies standing guard over him. One of them stands at the back of his cell and the other at the door. The other men and their cells were also searched, but nothing was found. When Engel was being searched he completely broke down and cried like a child. He is still so prostrated that he has not yet been put back in a cell, but is in the jail library in charge of deputies. Sheriff Matson says Lingg was stripped and carefully searched yesterday and the day before. The agent with which he accomplished his work was a fulminating cap a little over an inch long. It had been filled with fulminate of mercury. The news of Lingg's deed created the most profound excitement. When his cell was searched a second candle was found. At the top of it, barely concealed by the end of the wick, a second fulminating cap was found, so it is supposed Lingg's attempted suicide was committed with one similarly hidden. The candles were furnished by the jail, so that the caps must have been put in by Lingg himself.

Captain Black arrived at the jail at 10 o'clock and went to the room where the doctors were working with Lingg. "Lingg, do you know Captain Black?" asked Deputy Sheriff Morgan, Lingg opened his eyes, looked steadfastly at the captain and nodded his head. The rags and strings of flesh that hung to his face waved to and fro, and the captain, almost overcome, left the room.

Lingg died at 2 50 p.m.

Beyond a glance of recognition to Captain Black, who came into the room for a moment and said, "Poor, poor fellow," there was nothing to break the horrible agony of six mortal hours' wait for death's approach. The Rev. Dr. Bolton, a Methodist minister attending Fielden, went in to see Lingg, but got no answering look from him. Lingg's breathing gradually became slower. The pallor on the forehead deepened. A slight glaze was noticed in the sunken eyes. Some one said "He is dying," and the reporters made ready for a rush to the nearest telephones. In a moment the little room was empty of all but the ghastly corpse of the bomb-maker, Louis Lingg. The coroner's inquest will be held on Wednesday in Lingg's case. The members of the jury have been selected, and are all business men.

LINGG'S CAREER.

In 1885 Lingg was forced to leave his native town in Germany. After a good deal of wandering about Germany he landed in Switzerland. There he continued to fight the "Blues," as the Social Democrats are called by the Red followers of Most. It was then that the official organ of the German Socialists published a notice declaring Lingg to be an informer and spy of the German Government. He came to America in 1885, and upon reaching Chicago joined the North Side group of Internationals and soon began the manufacture of bombs, one of which was used at the Haymarket. When two policemen went to arrest him the next day one of them entered his room while the other stayed outside the house. The latter soon heard shouts for help, and running into Lingg's room found that the Anarchist had thrown his partner on the floor, and was only prevented from shooting him by the policeman, who had a grip on the revolver which Lingg was endeavoring to use. The second officer, after a desperate struggle, succeeded in placing handcuffs on his wrists. Placing a pistol to his head the policeman ordered Lim to come on, but Lingg refused to move and said, "Shoot me! Shoot me!" "It's a pity I didn't accommodate him," said the officer who was at the jail this morning as he stood looking at Lingg. "It might have saved all this trouble."

THE GOVERNOR'S STATEMENT.

In his decision on the petitions of the condemned Anarchists Governor Oglesby says: "* * * Satisfied as I am of their guilt I am precluded from considering the question of commutation of the sentences of Albert R. Parsons, Adolph Fischer, Geo. Engel and Louis Lingg to imprisonment in the Penitentiary, as they emphatically declared that they will not accept such commutation. Samuel Fielden, Michael Schwab and August Spies unite in a petition for "executive clemency." Fielden and Schwab in addition present separate and supplementary petitions for the commutation of their sentences. While I am satisfied of the guilt of all the parties as found by the verdict of the jury, which was sustained by the judgments of the courts, a most careful consideration of the whole subject leads me to the conclusion that the sentence of the law as to Samuel Fielden and Michael Schwab may be modified as to each of them in the interest of humanity and without doing violence to public justice. As to the said Samuel Fielden and Michael Schwab the sentence is commuted to imprisonment in the penitentiary for life. As to all the other abovenamed defendants I do not feel justified in interfering with the sentence of the court. While I would gladly have come to a different conclusion in regard to the sentence of defendants August Spies, Adolph Fischer, George Engel, Albert R. Parsons and Louis Lingg, I regret to say that under the solemn sense of the obligations of my office I have been unable to do so."

LAST INTERVIEWS.

When the news of the commutation of the sentence of Fielden and Schwab was received at the jail there was an extraordinary scene of activity. The news was sent to the relatives of all the condemned men and in a short time they began to arrive at the jail. The first of the women to come in was Mrs. Schwab. Soon after Schwab was brought from his cell to the main office. His wife quickly advanced to him and throwing her arms about his neck burst into tears. Schwab returned the embrace in a calm manner and soon the two were chatting quietly together. After this Spies and Fischer were brought from their cells and taken to the library. Engel was brought to the private office of Mr. Folz. This was done for the purpose of allowing the relatives to take their last interviews. The first of the women to arrive after Mrs. Schwab was Miss Engel, the daughter of the condemned Anarchist. When the two met in the private office there was an outburst of grief which it is impossible to describe. Father and daughter clung to each other and sobbed convulsively. The conversation was in German and listened to only by Deputy Oelsen. Then came Mrs. Spies, the mother of August. She had been waiting outside for an hour and a half. Her sobs could be heard through the corridors of the building. She did not stay long in the library with her son, and on her exit from the jail Mrs. Fischer was admitted. She went into the library, and her lamentations were heard above the tramp of the deputies who swarmed about the place. But the crowning scene of all was the visit of Nina Van Zandt, the proxy wife of Spies. She was conducted to the library by Deputy Oelsen. The moment she saw August a complete change in her demeanor was noticed. There was a look, then a gasp, and in a trice the lovers were in each other's arms. The interview lasted nearly half an hour.

THE NEWS OF LINGG'S SUICIDE.

The explosion in Lingg's cell created a decided sensation in the jail. The jailer approached Parsons' cell with the news. "Lingg has killed himself," said Mr. Folz. "Great God! is that so?" exclaimed Parsons. "Yes, it's a fact," was the reply. "Well, my God," exclaimed Parsons. "I wish I had some dynamite myself, I would kill myself only too quickly."

August Spies was then informed of the tragedy. "I expected nothing else," said Spies quietly. "Ever since the finding of the bombs in his cell last Sunday I was satisfied that if it was possible he would make away with himself. For my own and my comrades' sake I am glad he is out of the way."

According to Jailer Folz all of the remaining Anarchists are completely broken down. They look on the suicide of Lingg as placing him in the category of an extreme Anarchist, which place they do not wish to occupy themselves.

They Sing the Marseillaise.

At 10 o'clock, Parsons, Fischer and Spies asked for twenty minutes each on the gallows in which to make speeches. The Sheriff did not immediately return an answer to the request. Fischer sang the "Marseillaise," in which the other prisoners joined at 10 a. m. The speeches which Spies, Parsons and Fischer spent a portion of the morning in preparing were in part written statements, the nature of which would not be divulged by any of the officials. It was stated by the Sheriff that Spies, Parsons and Fischer had in addition written letters which he had also locked up securely. Parsons' letter was addressed to his wife and children. That of Fischer's goes to his wife, but the address on that of Spies the sheriff refuses to divulge. It is supposed that it is for Nina VanZandt.

About 9 30 a deputation from the Carpenters' Union, to which Louis Lingg belonged, applied to Chief Deputy Knox for Lingg's body. They were referred to the Coroner. The Cabinetmakers' Union also presented an application to the sheriff for the body.

At 10.55 o'clock 250 newspaper men, local politicians and others, among them the twelve jurors who were to view the bodies after the execution, had passed through the dark passage under the gallows and began seating themselves. Parsons was given a cup of coffee a few minutes before the march to the scaffold was begun. The chief bailiff began at 11.10 calling out the names of the persons summoned as jurors, and bringing them forward to the row of little stools directly in front of the gallows.

At 11.02 the condemned men ate their final lunch, and at 11.30 the Sheriff read the death warrants. At 11.46, Spies, Engel and Fischer, in their shrouds, were standing at the grated door and saying adieus to friends in the visitors' cage. At 11.49 the death march to the scaffold started.

The Execution.

At 11.55, the condemned men having been placed by the officers in the place assigned them, the trap was sprung. Fischer died very hard, and so did Spiers. Parsons struggled and kicked his feet fearfully.

Fischer's last words were: "Hurrah for Anarchism!"

The pulse of all the Anarchists stopped beating in 13½ minutes.

Their Last Words.

All the Anarchists died of strangulation. None of their necks were broken. The following were the last words of the four condemned Anarchists:

Spies—"There will come a time when our silence will be more powerful than the voices they are strangling to death now."

Engel—"Hurrah for Anarchy!"

Fischer—"Hurrah for Anarchy! This is the happiest moment of my life."

Parsons—"May I be allowed to speak? Will you let me speak, Sheriff Matson? Let the voice of the people he heard."

At 12.17 the coffins for the Anarchists, plain black, with but the silver heads of screws for ornaments, were carried to the gallows. A command to the crowd fronting the gallows that they must stop smoking was given at 11.35. Whether this command was given out of humanity to the doomed or a precaution against the appalling possibility of any treacherous bomb lighting in the corridor when the fatal moment came, no person seemed aware.

When the coffins were brought to the scaffold, Sheriff Matson exclaimed, "His will be done."

How the Bodies Were Disposed of.

The bodies were lowered in the following order: Spies, Fischer, Engel and Parsons. All looked natural. The coffin lids were screwed down. Paper tabs were pasted on each for identification. Engel's body and Lingg's were taken to 286 Milwaukee avenue. Fischer's wife claimed his. Mrs. Spies took August's, and Mrs. Parsons received that of her husband.

In exactly one hour after the execution took place the work of taking down the scaffold was begun, and in two hours was housed away in the basement of the jail.

Another Report of the Scene.

It lacked just seven minutes and a half of the hour of high noon when a single white shrouded figure, above which was a face of yellowish pallor, the face of August Spies, passed the first post of the gallows. He looked calm and glanced at the reporters with a trace of his old-time cynical smile. He walked firmly over the drop, guided by the grasp of a deputy, to the furthest edge of the gallows. Following close came Fischer, close enough to touch Spies' shroud had his hand not been pinioned under the white muslin. Fischer's countenance had a peculiar glisten, totally unlike the ashiness of Engel's heavy features, and in strange contrast with the dead lack of color in the pinched lineaments of Parsons. The once jaunty, vivacious Texan came last—a withered old man.

Why They Were Hanged.

The Judges of the Supreme Court of Illinois in their decision of the case of the Anarchists held that there was a general conspiracy to bring about "a social revolution" by violence and also a specific conspiracy which was to be carried into effect about May 1st, 1886. In pursuance of the general plot, even as early as 1879 as many as 1,000 men were drilling regularly in Chicago, and in 1885 there were 3,000 who were, as Parsons at the time said, "well armed with rifles and revolvers and would have dynamite and bombs when they got ready to use them." May 1st having been selected by the workingmen as the date for introducing the eight hour system, it was chosen by the Anarchists as the time for striking the blow because there would be a large number of men out of work. The proceeds of a ball given by the Carpenters' Union was turned over to Lingg with which to buy dynamite. The court held that it was quite apparent that the manufacture of the bombs by Lingg was under the auspices of the International Workingmen's Association. The bombs were carried by Lingg and Selger, who turned informer, to a hall, where several persons called and helped themselves, as if knowing that they would be there at that time. This was on the evening of the explosion, May 4th, 1886. Two days before Engel and Fischer attended a meeting, and the former submitted a plan for throwing bombs into police stations and shooting down the police. At another meeting which the same men attended the next day a circular written by Spies was distributed calling upon workingmen to arm and avenge the killing of six of their number by the police—as a matter of fact but one had been killed. At this meeting Engel's plan was for a second time adopted, and at Fischer's suggestion, it was agreed that the appearance of the word "Ruhe" in the Arbeiter Zeitung should be the signal that the revolution had come, and its duplication would mean that the armed men were to repair to certain places and await instructions from a committee to attack the police stations. The word was inserted in the Zeitung, by Spies, its editor, who also had charge of the meeting at the Haymarket. The original plan seems to have failed owing to the appearance of the police at the meeting. Fielden was then speaking and had just used this language, which had determined the police to break up the meeting:

> You have nothing more to do with the law except to lay hands on it and throttle it until it makes its last kick. Keep your eye upon it, throttle it, kill it, stab it, do everything you can to wound it.

When the order to disperse was given Fielden climbed down from the waggon, saying: "We are peaceable." The bomb was then exploded and several pistols fired at the police, with the result of killing one officer outright, fatally injuring six and seriously injuring nearly fifty. An allusion is made by the Supreme Court to a possible connection between Fielden's remark as he descended from the waggon and the word "ruhe," meaning "peace," but this is clearly a far-fetched idea.

History of the Victims.

Next to Lingg, whose terrible suicide has already been referred to at length in the TIMES' despatches, Adolph Fischer, a printer on the Arbeiter Zeitung, was regarded as the most violent of the men hanged to-day. He was under 30 years and had been fifteen years in the country. The Court held that he and Engel "advised and induced a band of seventy or eighty armed and drilled men to enter into a plot to murder the police." There was testimony in the trial that he actively engaged in the distribution of bombs.

Reference has already been made to the suggestion of a plan of attack by George Engel, who was born in Hesse in 1839, and came to the States in 1872. He was a painter by trade, but became business manager and assistant editor of the Chicago Arbeiter Zeitung. He was not present when the bomb was exploded. He had contributed incendiary articles to a paper called the Anarchist.

Alfred R. Parsons, a native of Texas, where he had lived until he appeared in Chicago fourteen years ago, was always a labor agitator and had often boasted to reporters and others of the strength and organization of the Anarchists and had shown them bombs and dynamite. He had also written articles for the Alarm, recommending that workingmen should arm themselves, and had given specific instructions as to the manner of making bombs and procuring weapons. He had also in speeches prescribed the use of the gun and dynamite. He had a part in calling the Haymarket meeting.

August Spies, a native of Hesse, 32 years old and well educated, came to America when 16 and worked at various trades before he became editor of the Arbeiter Zeitung in 1880. He had a share in calling the Haymarket meeting. He also took part in the meeting which culminated in the attack on McCormick's works. He had written violent articles for the Alarm and Zeitung.

The Reprieved Convicts.

Samuel Fielden and Michael Schwab, the capital sentence of whom has been commuted by the Governor to imprisonment for life, were the least guilty of the party. The former was born in Manchester, England, 1847, and worked in a cotton mill. Then he became a Methodist preacher. He came to America in 1866 and was a teamster in Chicago. He has a gift of rude oratory, which has apparently brought him to his present plight. He was the only one of the number upon whom a clergyman exercised any influence. His offence consisted in his speeches and writings, though some of the policemen testified that he fired a pistol that fatal night at the Haymarket. He himself declares that he never saw Lingg until the latter was brought to jail. Michael Schwab, a dreamy Bavarian of 34, became a Socialist while working at the trade of a bookbinder. He came to America in 1879. He was an editorial writer and foreman of the Arbeiter Zeitung. He is a good deal of a scholar, and probably his recognition of the fact that his talents were not appreciated had much to do with the lurid writing which chiefly led to his conviction.

Mrs. Parsons, with Mrs. Holmes and the two children of the former, were released from the station at 2.10 o'clock this afternoon. She looked very sad and downhearted. In meek tones she asked a reporter, "Is the bloody business over?" When told that it was she made no answer, but proceeded to explain why she was at the jail. She was told by a deputy last night to call at the jail at 8.30 this morning so that the children might see their father. At the appointed time she made the request to be allowed to enter and was sent from one street to another until 10.30 o'clock. Then she made an effort to pass under the rope and was prevented. She frequently broke down and sobbed, and as they passed along took her boy more firmly by the hand and walked more rapidly, keeping her head bent down.

At 2.30 o'clock this afternoon two Anarchists, giving their names as Charles Loberstein and Gustav Hains, were arrested on the front platform of a Randolph street car, with a companion. They were talking in a very loud and threatening manner of what they were going to do to-night, "To get even for the death of their friends and the friends of the laboring man." The passengers on the car became frightened, and many of them got out before the car crossed the bridge. At the corner of Canal street Officer Henry Smith was signalled by the conductor, and jumping on the car he undertook to arrest the men. Loberstein caught the officer by the throat and made an effort to get possession of his revolver. An exciting struggle followed, in which many citizens joined. The two men were at length overpowered and taken to the Desplaines Street Station. Their companion escaped. Both men, who gave their ages as 38 and 27 respectively, wore crape on their hats. Officer Smith was wounded in the Haymarket riots last spring. About 2 o'clock two bombs, reported to be heavily charged, were found in an omnibus which runs between the Union Depot and Lincoln Park. They were of gas pipe, each ten inches long. They were taken to the Desplaines Street Station. Word comes from the West Chicago Avenue Station that Milwaukee avenue is thronged with people, and the officers fear trouble.

In New York.

At the office of the Leader another crowd gathered. There was also a profusion of crape, and placards were exhibited on the walls bearing the words: "Martyrs for liberty," "Beware of the insurrection," "The American revolution is at hand." It is the Leader's last day of life, Editor Shevitch and his followers having decided that it should cease publication on the day the condemned Anarchists were put to death. By 10 o'clock the editorial room in the rear of the second floor was full of Anarchists. Col. Henton mounted a chair and harangued the assembly on the event of the day in Chicago. He glorified "Lingg's heroic death, the only mercy the bloodhounds of capitalism have left him to enjoy." "The blood that is shed to-day," he continued, "will be amply avenged. They can assassinate these four men, but 4,000 will spring up to emulate them in their fight against tyranny."

A reporter saw Herr Most at his office. In reply to the question whether there would be any demonstration to-day, he said: "There will be no demonstration. We can't demonstrate every day. The newspapers have been the cause of the hanging. They are the real murderers."

A Preacher on an Editor.

(Rev. Mr. Silcox in Winnipeg Sun.)

We who are not editors sometimes think we could make a better paper than our editor does, just as some people think that they could make a better sermon than the preacher. On the same principle, old maids are quite confident that they would make better wives than do the most of those who are elevated to these serene heights. We sometimes think the editor is not religious enough, and that he gives too much space to the baseball brigade, the slugger, etc. We forget that the paper is a condensed history of every day's doings, and must therefore record deaths as well as births, and chronicle the deeds of demons as well as narrate the exploits of angels.

As a special effort is to be made to enable Sir Charles Tupper and the members of the Canadian staff of the Fisheries Commission to leave for Washington on Monday, it is inferred that the commission will meet for business at an early date.

THE BANQUET OF THE LORD MAYOR.

Lord Salisbury Discusses World Wide Public Affairs.

HE PROGNOSTICATES PEACE.

A London cable says: The Lord Mayor's banquet last night was attended by the principal members of the Cabinet.

Lord George Hamilton, responding for the navy, expressed a fear that the British gunboat Wasp would never again reach England. The navy had been strengthened by merchant vessels and the Admiralty were on the eve of an arrangement with the colonies which would materially strengthen our defence.

Lord Salisbury announced that the Government were coming to a decision with France on the subject of the Pacific Islands, and thus a source of quarrel would be removed and the prospect of peace almost assured. The task of adjusting the differences with the States had been undertaken by a statesman of great ability. He was aware that there was a certain uneasiness with respect to peace; but he was unaware of any grounds for it, as every ruler, Minister and President was sincere in his desire to maintain peace. All the influence of England had been and would be cast on the side of the nation which worked in the interests of freedom, legality and peace. Referring to the state of affairs in Ireland, he said there was a marked improvement; and he hoped that during the next session of Parliament more attention could be given to the general wants of the Kingdom. Among other things, the Government intend to reform Parliamentary procedure. Again reverting to foreign affairs, he announced that Ayoub Khan had surrendered himself, thus removing all danger in Afghanistan to the Indian Empire.

ANOTHER ACCOUNT.

A London cable says: Lord Salisbury, in a speech at the Lord Mayor's banquet last night, referred to the growing pacific aspect of foreign affairs. He said the agreement with Russia regarding the Afghan frontier, which had been accepted by the Ameer, removed the danger to the world's peace in those quarters. It had also been the good fortune of the Government to come to an understanding with France concerning the New Hebrides difficulty and with regard to some vexed questions concerning the Suez Canal. He announced that Ayoub Khan had surrendered to the Indian Government. He admitted that political uneasiness existed in Europe, but said he knew nothing that would justify alarm. In view of the competition in forming great armaments, it was idle to suppose that peace would be forever maintained, but every present ruler—monarch, president or minister—earnestly desired peace. Referring to Ireland, Lord Salisbury said they were often told that there would be no legislative activity until Home Rule had been granted. But he could assure them that there would be no falling of in activity on the part of those who were upholding the integrity of the Empire. It was the task of the Government to maintain law and order in Ireland. The new powers of the Government had been in existence only a few months, yet there was already a marked improvement in the condition of the country. The law was in the steady course of successful operation. The circumstances at the present time gave additional emphasis to the vindication of the law. The reception accorded to Mr. Balfour showed his hearers' sense of his conduct in following those principles of government which regulate the existence of society. (Cheers.) The Government were convinced that they had the support of the people in restoring to Ireland the blessings of peace, freedom and prosperity arising from the recognition of the principles of order. (Cheers.) He had good hope of adjusting the difficulty with America upon the ancient fishery dispute. The task had been undertaken with great patriotism by one of the most eminent statesmen of the day—(cheers)—a statesman who went to his work with the almost unanimous goodwill of his countrymen, who trusted that the result might be to prevent differences arising again.
